That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 168, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twenty-one" and insert "fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 173, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "three hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 174, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "eight thousand and four," and insert in lieu thereof "seven thousand seven hundred and sixty-four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 176, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "four" and insert "two," and strike out "twenty-eight hundred and eighty" and insert "fourteen hundred and forty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 183, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "two thousand" and insert "eighteen hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 184, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "thirteen" and insert "twelve," and strike out "eight" and insert "seven," and after the word "hundred" insert "fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 185, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "four" insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 186 to 202, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the two paragraphs amended substitute the following:

"For compensation of the Secretary of State, $8,000; three Assistant Secretaries of State, at $3,500 each; for chief clerk, $2,500; twelve clerks of class four; five clerks of class three; ten clerks of class one; and thirteen clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; one assistant messenger; one superintendent of the watch, at $1,000; six watchmen; twelve laborers; chief engineer, who shall be a machinist, $1,200; one assistant engineer, $1,000; four firemen, at $720 each; twenty char-women, at $180 each; and a conductor for the elevator, at $720; in all $99,220.

"For five chiefs of Bureaus and one translator, at $2,100 each, $12,600."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 203 to 207, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Substitute in lieu of the amended paragraph the following:

"For proof-reading and packing the laws and documents for the various legations and consulates, including boxes and transportation of the same, $2,500; for stationery, furniture, fixtures, and repairs, $4,000; for books and maps, $2,000; for extra clerk hire and copying, $2,500; in all, $11,000"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 208 to 212, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Substitute for the amended paragraph the following:

"For contingent expenses, namely: For fuel $10,000; for lights, $3,000; for repairs $2,000; for care and subsistence of horses and repairs of wagons and harness, $1,500; and for miscellaneous items, not included in the foregoing, $3,125; in all $19,625."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 216, with an amendment striking out the following on line 8, page 14, of the bill: "For purchase of official postage-stamps, $20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 217 to 241, both inclusive, with an amendment as follows:

Substitute for the amended paragraph the following:

"Secretary's Office.—For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, $8,000; two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, at $4,500 each; chief clerk and ex-officio superintendent of the Treasury building, $2,700; one chief of division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations, $2,750; one assistant chief of division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations, $2,400; six chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; six assistant chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; twenty-three clerks of class four; two disbursing clerks, at $2,500 each; stenographer to the Secretary, $2,000; nineteen clerks of class three; eighteen clerks of class two; eleven clerks of class one; twenty female clerks, at $900 each; eight messengers and twenty-eight laborers; one captain of the watch, $1,200; one engineer, $1,400; one assistant engineer, $1,000; one machinist and gas-fitter, $1,200; one storekeeper, $1,200; sixty watchmen, at $720 each, and, additional to two of said watchmen, acting as lieutenants of watchmen, $180 each; six firemen, at $720 each; seventy-five char-women, at $180 each; in all, $281,310."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 242 to 251, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to consolidate the division of loans and the division of currency into one division; and all work now done in either division shall be done in the consolidated division, with the following employés, namely: One chief of division, at $2,500; two assistant chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; ten clerks of class four, and additional pay to three fourth-class clerks, namely, receiving clerk of bonds and two book-keepers, $100 each; six clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; thirty-five clerks, at $900 each; six messengers, at $840 each; six laborers, at $720 each; and six laborers, at $2.25 per day each; in all, $88,685.50."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 252 to 259, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"Supervising Architect.—In the construction branch of the Treasury: For Supervising Architect, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,250; photographer, $2,250; one principal clerk at $2,000; one clerk of class four; two clerks of class three; two clerks of class one; one clerk at $900; and one messenger; in all, $20,140."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 260 to 268 both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"First Comptroller of the Treasury.—For First Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; four chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; four clerks of class four; ten clerks of class three; eight clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; six clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and three laborers; in all, $63,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 269 to 278, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Second Comptroller of the Treasury.—For Second Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,700; five chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; five clerks of class four; twelve clerks of class three; thirteen clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; nine clerks at $900 each; one messenger; and theee laborers; in all, $85,300."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 279 to 286, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Commissioner of Customs.—For Commissioner of Customs, $4,000; deputy commissioner, $2,250; two chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; two clerks of class four; five clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; nine clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $48,410."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 287 to 298, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"First Auditor.—For the First Auditor of the Treasury, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; four chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; seven clerks of class two; eleven clerks of class one; one messenger; and two laborers; in all, $52,330; and for the division of loans, namely: Three clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; two clerks of class two; and two clerks of class one; in all, $15,400."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 299 to 308, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Second Auditor.—For Second Auditor $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; five chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; six clerks of class four; twenty-eight clerks of class three; sixty clerks of class two; thirty-five clerks of class one; one messenger; and eight laborers; in all, $204,050."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 309 to 317, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Third Auditor.—For Third Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; five chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; six clerks of class four; fifteen clerks of class three; sixty clerks of class two; thirty-five clerks of class one; five clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; four laborers; and one charwoman, at $480; in all, $185,350."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 318 to 325, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Fourth Auditor.—For the Fourth Auditor, $3 600; deputy auditor, $2,250; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four; sixteen clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; nine clerks of class one; five clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and two laborers; in all, $71,230."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 326 to 333, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Fifth Auditor.—For the Fifth Auditor, $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; two chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; three clerks, at $900 each; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $41,510."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 334 to 344, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department.—For compensation of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department $3,600; deputy auditor, $2,250; eight chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; seven clerks of class four, and, additional to one clerk as disbursing clerk, $200; fifty-two clerks of class three; sixty-five clerks of class two; thirty-six clerks of class one; one messenger; and nineteen laborers; eighteen assorters of money-orders, $18,000; also fifteen female assorters of money-orders, at $900 each; in all, $298,070."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 345 to 375, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Treasurer.—For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, $6,000; assistant treasurer, $3,600; cashier, $3,600; assistant cashier, $3,200; chief clerk, $2,500; five chiefs of division, at $2,500 each; one principal book-keeper, at $2,500; one assistant book-keeper, at $2,400; two tellers, at $2,500 each; two assistant tellers, at $2,250 each; twelve clerks of class four; twelve clerks of class three; eight clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; forty clerks, at $900 each; five messengers; five laborers, at $720 each; and seven laborers, at $240 each; in all, $157,980; and for the division of loans, namely, fifteen clerks of class four; five clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; one hundred and eighteen counters and copyists, at $900 each; seven messengers; and twenty-six laborers; in all, $182,400; and for the force employed in redeeming the national currency, namely, for superintendent, $3,500; two principal tellers and one principal book-keeper, at $2,500 each; one assistant book-keeper, $2,400; and two assistant tellers, at $2,000 each; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; thirty-five clerks of class one; twelve clerks, at $1,000 each; twenty-six clerks, at $900 each; two messengers; three assistant messengers; three employés, at $432 each; in all, $112,336."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 376 to 390, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Register of the Treasury.—For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, $4,000; assistant register, $2,250; six clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; ten clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; six copyists, at $900 each; one messenger, and three laborers; in all, $60,250; and for the division of loans, namely, five chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; nine clerks of class four; eight clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; sixty-seven copyists and counters, at $900 each; four messengers and four laborers; in all, $114,540. And the office of deputy register of the Treasury is hereby abolished."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 391 to 406, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Comptroller of the Currency.—For Comptroller of the Currency, $5,000; deputy comptroller, $2,800; four chiefs of division, at $2,200 each; one stenographer, at $1,800; eight clerks of class four; twelve clerks of class three; nine clerks of class two; eight clerks of class one; twenty-five clerks, at $900 each; three messengers, three laborers, and two night-watchmen, at $720 each; in all $102,820; and for expenses of the national currency, namely, one superintendent, at $2,000; one teller and one book-keeper, at $2,000 each; and one assistant book-keeper, at $2,000; fifteen clerks, at $900 each; and one messenger; in all, $32,340.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 407, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 408 to 417, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Commissioner of Internal Revenue.—For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; one deputy commissioner, $3,200; two heads of division, at $2,500 each; five heads of division, at $2,250 each; one stenographer, $1,800; twenty-five clerks of class four; thirty clerks of class three; forty clerks of class two; eighteen clerks of class one; fifty clerks, at $900 each; four messengers; and ten laborers; in all, $253,410,"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 420, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "packages" in line 25, page 21 of the bill, to the close of the paragraph; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 421, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "nine hundred and twenty" and insert "eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 423, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "eight hundred" and insert "four hundred and seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 429, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "July" and insert "September;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 431, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 432, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, amended as follows: After the word "of," in said text, insert "not exceeding," and after the word "day," the last word in said text, add "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury," and in lines 12 and 13, page 23 of the bill, strike out "the 30th day of June next" and insert "ten days from the passage of this act;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 433 and 434, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Light-House Board.—For chief clerk of the Light-House Board, $2,400; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; one clerk of class two; one clerk of class one; one clerk, at $900; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $14,260."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 435 to 442, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Bureau of Statistics.—For the officer in charge of the Bureau of Statistics, $2,400; chief clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; one laborer; and one charwoman, at $480; in all, $42,740. And for the additional duties imposed upon the Bureau of Statistics by the legislation of the second session of the Forty-third Congress, the sum of $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in payment of the services of experts, and for other necessary expenditures connected with the collection of facts relative to the internal and foreign commerce of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 447, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the amended text and the sum proposed to be inserted and insert as a separate section at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. —. That the Secretaries respectively of the Departments of State, Treasury, War, Navy, and Interior, and the Attorney-General are authorized to make requisitions upon the Postmaster-General for the necessary amount of postage-stamps for the use of their Departments not exceeding the amount stated in the estimates submitted to Congress; and upon presentation of proper vouchers therefor at the Treasury, the amount thereof shall be credited to the appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the same fiscal year."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 448, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "three thousand" insert "two thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 449, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "six" insert "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 451, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "4,000" insert "3,400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 452, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "six" insert "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 453, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "ten" insert "nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 454, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "15,000" insert "12,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 455, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "15,000" insert "12,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 456, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "20" insert "15;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 459, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 462 and 463, and agree to the same, with an amendment substituting in each case for the amount proposed "two thousand eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 464, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 465 and 466, and agree to the same, with an amendment substituting in each case for the amount proposed "two thousand four hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 467 and 469, and agree to the same, with an amendment substituting in each case for the amount proposed "two hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 470, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "two" where it occurs the second time and insert in lieu thereof "one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 481, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifty thousand nine hundred and eighty" and insert "forty-eight thousand five hundred and thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 502, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "five" and insert in lieu thereof "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 504, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "five thousand one" and insert "four thousand two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 517, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words proposed, and strike out, in lines 10 and 11, page 29 of the bill, the following words: "assistant fractional-currency clerk" and "dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 520, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "forty thousand and twenty" and insert "thirty-nine thousand five hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 546, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifteen" and insert "fourteen;" strike out "seven" and insert "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 547, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, amended as follows: In lieu of "June" insert "September;" after the word "discontinue" insert "from said date," and strike out "Tucson, Arizona," and insert "Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 548, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "Treasurer," where it occurs the second time, to the close of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1,000; one clerk, $450; one clerk, $400; one assistant messenger, $180; and two watchmen, at $180 each; in all, $2,390;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 549, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "cashier" to the end of the paragraph and insert the following: "$450; bookkeeper, $350; one watchman, $180; in all, $980;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 551, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 19 of said amendment the following: "sufficient to make;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 557, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "seventeen thousand three" and insert in lieu thereof "sixteen thousand nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 562 to 570, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Mint at Philadelphia.—For salaries of the superintendent, $4,500; for the assayer, melter and refiner, coiner, and engraver, four in all, at $3,000 each; the assistant assayer, assistant coiner, and assistant melter and refiner, at $2,000 each; cashier, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,250; book-keeper and deposit clerk, at $1,800 each; weigh clerk, $2,000; and two clerks, at $1,600 each; in all, $36,050."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 571, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 578, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twenty-five thousand seven" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four thousand nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 579, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "three hundred," and insert in lieu thereof "two hundred and seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 580, and agree to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 26, page 32 of the bill, down to the close of the paragraph; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 582 to 587, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Mint at Carson, Nevada.—For salary of superintendent, $3,000; for assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $2,500 each; chief clerk, at $2 250; cashier and book-keeper, at $2,000 each; weigh clerk, $2,000; voucher clerk and computing clerk, at $1,800 each; assayer's clerk, at $1,200; in all, $23,550."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 588, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out therefrom the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "eighty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 595 to 608, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Assay-office at New York.—For salary of superintendent, $4,250; for assayer, $3,000; for melter and refiner, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,500; weighing clerk, $2,500; paying clerk, $2,000; bar clerk, $1,800; warrant clerk, $2,250; two calculating clerks, $1,800 each; assistant weigh clerk, $1,600; for assayer's first assistant, $2,250; for assayer's second assistant, $2,150; for assayer's third assistant, $2,000; in all, $32 900."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 611 and 612, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "six" and insert "four," and strike out "four" and insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 613, and agree to the same by substituting for the amount proposed "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 615, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina.—For salary of assayer and melter, $1,500; for labor and other expenses, $500; in all, $2,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 618, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted insert "14,500," and add at the end of the paragraph the following: "Provided, That so much of the amount of $25,600 appropriated by act of June 20, 1874, for per diem of members of council and house of representatives, and other officers and clerks and employés of the Legislative Assembly, as is not needed for the payment of per diem, shall be applicable to the payment of mileage of members of the Legislature, and for printing, stationery, and other incidental expenses of the Legislature and the secretary's office of the Territory for the fiscal year 1875;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 621, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of Colorado.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, and secretary, at $2,000, $14,000: Provided, That said officers shall only receive their compensation on the basis of the salary aforesaid up to the time of the admission of the said Territory as a State into the Union."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 622, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of Dakota.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, and secretary, at $2,000, $14,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 624, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of Idaho.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, and secretary, at $2,000, $14,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 626, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "fourteen," and add at the end of the paragraph the following as a new paragraph:

"For legislative expenses, namely: For compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assemoly, the officers and clerks, and the contingent expenses thereof, $20,000: Provided, That the next Legislative Assembly shall convene at the seat of government of the Territory on the second Monday of January, 1877, and biennially thereafter."

And the Senate agreed to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 627, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of New Mexico.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, secretary at $2,000, and interpreter and translator in the executive office, at $500, $14,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 628, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of Utah.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, and secretary, at $2,000, $14,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 629, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of Washington.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, and secretary, at $2,000, $14,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 630, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Territory of Wyoming.—For salaries of governor, chief justice, and two associate judges, at $3,000 each, and secretary, at $2,000, $14,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 633 to 642, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; one chief clerk, at $2,500; one disbursing clerk, at $2,000; two chief clerks of division, at $1,800 each; six clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; eight messengers; seven laborers; six watchmen for the Northwest Executive building; in all, $69,380."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 645 to 650, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the office of the Adjutant-General.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; eleven clerks of class four; seventeen clerks of class three; forty-one clerks of class two; one hundred and fifty-one clerks of class one; eight messengers, at $840 dollars each; in all, $294,320."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 651, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 653, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of said amendment after the words "chief clerk," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "At $1,800; one clerk of class three; two clerks of class one; one messenger; in all, $6,640;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 656 to 661, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the Office of the Quartermaster-General.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four; nine clerks of class three; twenty-four clerks of class two; forty-eight clerks of class one; twenty copyists, at $900 each; one female messenger, at $30 per month; one messenger, at $840; two assistant messengers; six laborers; one engineer, at $1,200; one fireman; five watchmen; and one draughtsman, at $1,800; in all, $152,480."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 662 to 667, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the Office of the Commissary-General.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; one clerk of class four; three clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; ten clerks of class one; one messenger, at $840; two laborers; two watchmen; in all, $20,920."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 668 to 676, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the Office of the Surgeon-General.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; seven clerks of class four; five clerks of class three; seven clerks of class two; ninety-two clerks of class one; one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, at $1 400; one messenger, at $840; twenty watchmen and laborers; in all, $161,040: Provided, That the Surgeon-General of the Army is hereby authorized to detail, for temporary duty in his Office, in completing the catalogue of the library, one acting assistant surgeon from those now under contract, and no additional contract shall on this account be made."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 677 to 681, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the Office of the Chief of Ordnance.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; two clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; one messenger; one laborer; in all, $20,360: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ in this Bureau not exceeding eight enlisted men."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 682 to 690, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the Office of the Paymaster-General.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; six clerks of class four; seven clerks of class three; fourteen clerks of class two; nine clerks of class one; one messenger; two watchmen; three laborers; in all, $58,840."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 691 to 696, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"In the Office of the Chief of Engineers.—One chief clerk, at $2,000; four clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; three clerks of class one; one messenger; two laborers; in all, $24,080."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 705, and agree to the same, with the following amendment: Strike out in lines 26 and 27, page 43 of the bill, the following: "For postage on official mail matter for the War Department and its bureaus, $70,000," and insert the following: "For compensation of superintendents of the six buidlings occupied by the War Department, at $250 each, $1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 712, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "thirty-five thousand six" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-one thousand four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 723, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof "nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 732, 733, and 734, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of said amended paragraph substitute the following: "For one superintendent of the building occupied by the Navy Department, and for five watchmen and two laborers; in all, $5,290," and strike out lines 7 and 8, page 46 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 735 to 741, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $8,000; Assistant Secretary, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,500; eight clerks of class four, who may be paid $200 additional if the Secretary of the Interior deem it necessary and proper; five clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; five clerks of class one, one of whom shall be the telegraph-operator of the Department; three copyists; two messengers; two assistant messengers; and four laborers; in all, $59,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 742, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 21, page 46 of the bill, the word "eighteen" and insert "twenty-eight," and strike out in line 23, page 46 of the bill, the words "thirteen thousand nine" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty thousand one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 743, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "seventy-five hundred" and insert "sixty-two hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 744, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the words proposed by said amendment substitute the following:

"For rent of buildings for use of the Pension Office and for the Bureau of Education, $14,000: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior can procure a fire-proof building of suitable accommodations, for a rent not exceeding the sum hereby appropriated, he shall rent the same, to take effect so soon as the present letting can be legally terminated: And provided, That the lease of the present buildings shall be continued if the same shall be made fire-proof by the owners thereof to the satisfaction of the said Secretary within six months from the passage of this act, without disturbing the use of the said buildings; and that any lease made for said building shall expire on nine months' notice from the Secretary of the Interior; and in case of removal the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the cost of fitting up and removal to said fire-proof building."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 745 to 758, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"General Land Office.—For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; recorder, $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; three principal clerks, at $1,800 each; five clerks of class four; twenty-two clerks of class three; forty clerks of class two; seventy clerks of class one; one draughtsman, $1,600; one assistant draughtsman, $1,400; two messengers; three assistant messengers; eight laborers; and two packers; in all, $83,640: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for piece-work, or by the day, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair, not exceeding a salary of $900 per annum.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 760, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted insert "twenty-seven thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 774, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "four" and insert "two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 775, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "seven" and insert "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 777 to 783, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"For contingent expenses of the office, namely: For actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected frauds and attempts at fraud, as provided by law, $50,000; for stationery, $6,000; for carpets, mats, furniture, awnings, and repairs of the same, $2,000; for fuel, gas, engraving and retouching plates; for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same, engraving and printing pension certificates; for repairs of building, and for other necessary expenses of the office, including two daily newspapers, $4,500; in all $62,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 784 to 804, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"United States Patent Office.—For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $4,500; for assistant commissioner, $3,000; for chief clerk, $2,250; three examiners-in-chief, at $3,000 each; examiner in charge of interferences, $2,500; trade-mark examiner, $2,250; twenty-two principal examiners, at $2,500 each; twenty-two first assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; twenty-two second assistant examiners at $1,600 each; twenty-two third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; one librarian, $1,800; one machinist, $1,600; five clerks of class four, (one of whom shall receive $200 additional for services as financial clerk, and shall give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine;) five clerks of class three; twenty-one clerks of class two; and thirty-five clerks of class one; also for twenty-five permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; for forty copyist clerks, at $900 each; for three skilled draughtsmen, at $1,200 each; for one messenger and purchasing clerk, $1,000; for one skilled laborer, $1,200; for six attendants in model-room, at $1,000 each; for four attendants in model-room, at $900 each; forty laborers, at $720 each; for six laborers, at $600 each; in all, $384,900."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 805, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "eighty" and insert in lieu thereof "seventy;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 806, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "in the city of Washington" and insert "who shall receive competitive bids therefor;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 808, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 813, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "three" and insert in lieu thereof "one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 814 to 825, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"For contingent expenses, namely: Stationery, $1,500; cases for library, $500; library, $1,000; current educational periodicals, $250; other current publications, $225; completing valuable sets of periodicals and publications in the library, $200; telegraphing and expressage, $200; collecting statistics, and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports, and editing and publishing circulars of information, $8,000; fuel and lights, $275; office-furniture, $250; contingencies, $500; in all, $12,900."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 826, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "five" and insert in lieu thereof "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 827, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 828, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "eight thousand four" and insert in lieu thereof "five thousand five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 829, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "six thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 830, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "six thousand three" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 831, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "six thousand three" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 832, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "twelve;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 833, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 834, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 835, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 836, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand five hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 837, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "six thousand three" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 838, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 839, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "four thousand seven" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 840, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "six thousand seven hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 841, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "four thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "three thousand two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 843 to 872, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; three Assistant Postmasters-General, at $3,500 each; superintendent of money-order system, $3,000; superintendent of foreign mails, $3,000; topographer, $2,500; chief of division of mail depredations, $2,000; chief of division of dead letters, $2,250; chief of division of postal stamps, $2,250; superintendent of Post-Office building and disbursing officer, $2,100; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2,200; three chief clerks to the Assistant Postmasters-General, at $2,000 each; chief clerk to the superintendent of money-order system, $2,000; chief clerk to the superintendent of foreign mails, $1,800; chief of division of free delivery, $2,100; superintendent of blank agency, $1,800; assistant superintendent of blank agency, $1,600; four assistants of blank agency, $1,200 each; two assistants of blank agency, $900 each; stenographer, $1,800; seventeen clerks of class four; sixty-three clerks of class three; forty-eight clerks of class two; sixty-five clerks of class one; forty-seven female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger to Postmaster-General, $900; three messengers to Assistant Postmasters-General, $840 each; seven assistant messengers, $720 each; captain of the watch, $1,000; nine watchmen, at $720 each; twenty-seven laborers, $720 each; one engineer, $1,400; one assistant engineer, $1,000; one carpenter, $1,200; one assistant carpenter, $1,000; one fireman, who shall be a blacksmith, $900; one fireman, who shall be a steam-fitter, $900; one fireman, $720; three female laborers, $480 each; and for temporary clerks, $10,000; making, in all, $434,340."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 873 to 885, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended text substitute the following:

"For contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department: For stationery, $9,000; fuel for the General Post-Office building, including the Auditor's Office, $7,400; for gas, $5,000; plumbing and gas-fixtures, $3,000; telegraphing, $3,000; painting, $2,000; carpets, $3,000; furniture, $5,000; keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness, $1,200; hardware, $1,200; and for rent of house numbered 915 E street northwest, $1,800; and for miscellaneous items, $8,000; in all, $49,600."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 886 to 910, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"For compensation of the Commissioner of Agriculture, $3,000; chief clerk, $1,800; entomologist, $2,000; chemist, $2,000; assistant chemist, $1,400; superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds, $1,800; statistician, $1,800; disbursing clerk, $1,600; superintendent of seed-room, $1,600; librarian, $1,400; botanist, $1,800; microscopist, $1,800; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; engineer, $1,200; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; two copyists, at $900 each; two attendants in the museum, $1,000 each; one messenger, at $840; two assistant messengers, at $720 each; one carpenter, at $960; two watchmen, and eight laborers; making in all $64,700."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 911, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out therefrom the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 916, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the paragraph substitute the following:

"For the purchase, by the Librarian of Congress, of new books of reference for the Supreme Court, to be a part of the Library of Congress, to be purchased under the direction of the Chief Justice, $2,000; and the unexpended balance of $1,000, appropriated by the act for sundry civil expenses for the fiscal year 1875, to enable the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress to procure plans for the accommodation of the Library, is hereby re-appropriated and made available for said purpose."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 923 to 935, both inclusive, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph substitute the following:

"Office of the Attorney-General.—For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; Solicitor-General, $7,000; three Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; one Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $4,000; Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $4,500; examiner of claims, $3,500; law-clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700; chief clerk, $2,200; stenographic clerk, $1,800; one law-clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class four; additional for disbursing clerk, $200; one clerk of class two; one clerk of class one; five copyists; one telegraph operator, at $1,000; one messenger; one assistant messenger; two laborers; and two watchmen; in all, $72,440."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 939, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the paragraph and inserting the following: "For rent of the four floors of the building occupied by the Department of Justice, $14,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 943, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "four" and insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 945, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out therefrom "twenty-eight thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-four thousand eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 946, and agree to substitute for the same the following:

"SEC. 2. That the reduction in the numerical force of the officers, clerks, and employés in the several Executive Departments made necessary by the provisions of this act shall be carried into effect as follows: The number so reduced shall be discharged on the 10th day of October next, and the sum of money necessary for their compensation to the said date is hereby appropriated. And the amounts of money necessary to carry out the provisions of this act for which no specific appropriations are made are hereby appropriated; and the amounts heretofore appropriated for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for this fiscal year, so far as the same were applicable to service which by the provisions of this act is discontinued, or to excess of compensation which by this act is reduced, shall not be deducted from the aggregate appropriations herein made for like purposes; and the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for temporary clerical service in the several Executive Departments, according to the exigencies of the public service, to be apportioned by the Secretary of the Treasury. And the President is authorized, during the present fiscal year, whenever the interests of the public service shall require it, to transfer any clerk or employé from one Department to service in another Department."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 947, 948, 949, 950, and 951, and agree to the following substitute for the section:

"SEC. 3. That whenever, in the judgment of the head of any Department, the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class, or by a female clerk, it shall be lawful for him to diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade and increase the number of the clerks of the lower grade within the limit of the total appropriation for such clerical service: Provided, That in making any reduction of force in any of the Executive Departments, the head of such Department shall retain those persons who may be equally qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to institute a careful scrutiny of the present condition and competence of the force employed in the collection of revenue from customs, with a view of reducing the number of the same."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 952, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, amended as follows: Strike out therefrom the following words: "except those for whom specific appropriations are made" and insert the following: "beyond provision made by law."

"SEC. —. That all executive officers or employés of the United States not appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, are prohibited from requesting, giving to, or receiving from any other officer or employé of the Government any money or property or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employé who shall offend against the provisions of this section shall be at once discharged from the service of the United States; and he shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $500.

"SEC. —. To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry into effect the act of March 3, 1875, to provide for the sale of the buildings and grounds known as the Detroit Arsenal, at Dearbornville, in the State of Michigan, by appraising and surveying the property and advertising its sale, $1,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, postpone the time of sale to the time most advantageous to the United States.

"SEC. —. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of a survey of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railways between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Sacramento, California, to be made in pursuance of the resolution of the House of Representatives passed the 12th day of July, 1876, $10,000."

And the House agree to the same.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
W. R. MORRISON,
JOHN A. KASSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
WM. WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
T. F. BAYARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the House should reject this report, would it be in order for the House to concur in all the amendments to the pending bill agreed to by the conference committee except the amendments numbered 1, 2, 79, 80, and 744?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the conference report must be agreed to as a whole. It cannot be divided.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair will hear me a moment. I know that this proposition cannot be submitted in the first instance. The House will have to reject the report to admit of such a proposition. That is often done. The report is rejected, and for the purpose of bringing the two Houses together it is moved to concur in all the other amendments excepting some which are specified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is of course on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. RANDALL. On which I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the House should not concur in this report, I give notice that I will then move concurrence in all the amendments to the bill agreed to by the conference committee, except the amendments numbered 1, 2, 79, 80, and 744.

Mr. FORT. There are others who are going to vote against the increase of salary.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Indiana understands the rules, as he has been here for a long time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has the right to bring the question before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I now insist on my demand for the previous question. If the House does not second the previous question, then I give notice I shall hand the charge of the bill over to the gentleman from Indiana.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division on concurring in the conference report.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 136, noes 15.

So the conference report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that this question was submitted the other day to the House in the most distinct manner, and by the House the managers of the conference on the part of the House were instructed to take the action they have taken. I do not, any more than the gentleman from Indiana, consent to the amendments he has indicated, except under the instructions of the House to me as conferee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was detained from the House on that occasion by illness. If I had been present I would have resisted the action then taken.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COTTON CLAIMS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote by which the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to a resolution of the House calling for a list of the cotton claims was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department with accompanying statements and ordered to be printed. I have since ascertained by examination the objectionable matter was not there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

NORMAN H. RYAN.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 840) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan, in order that it may be put on its passage at the present time.

Mr. STONE. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I give notice that I shall object hereafter to all unanimous consents.

Mr. STONE. Objection was made to unanimous consent when I asked for it.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STONE. I object.

Mr. ATKINS. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to modify that, so as to move that the House take a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock. That will give six hours on Monday in case the Senate should concur in the resolution for final adjournment on that day. It is desirable to have those two hours before twelve o'clock for the purpose of enrollment.

Mr. PACKER. I hope we will take a recess until seven o'clock this evening. Many members desire to take up business and have it acted on.

Mr. ATKINS. I cannot withdraw my motion to adjourn for that purpose.

Mr. RUSK. I hope unanimous consent may be granted, so I may report another pension bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw my motion at the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] and move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock monday Morning.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend by saying half past seven this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will be first put on the longest time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 11.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until Monday morning at ten o'clock a. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House re-assembled at ten o'clock a. m., (Monday, August 14.)

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks in relation to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing as a part of the proceedings of the House. [See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1042) to provide for the publication of the report of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap; and

A bill (S. No. 1044) making appropriations to pay judgments of the Court of Claims.

FLOYD C. BABCOCK.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, that I may move concurrence, the bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock, with an amendment by the Senate.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In lines three and four strike out "$556.55" and insert "$332.65."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTAIN W. L. FOULK.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3862) for the relief of Captain W. L. Foulk; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FORT HILL CEMETERY, AUBURN, NEW YORK.

Mr. JOHN REILLY also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 715) directing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Soldiers' Fort Hill cemetery, of Auburn, New York, condemned cannon and cannon-balls, to be used for monumental purposes; and the same was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

THEODORE F. HALLOCK.

Mr. JOHN REILLY also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4091) for the relief of Theodore F. Hallock, late a private in Company G, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. JOHN REILLY also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back adversely the following bills and executive document; and the same were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 1831) to authorize the Secretary of War to appropriate condemned ordnance for the erection of a monument to the memory of the soldiers and sailors of Orange County, New York, who fell during the late war;

Executive document, War Department, dated February 15, 1876, in relation to military bridge across the North Platte River at Fort Laramie; and

The bill (S. No. 443) for the relief of Alstorpheus Weininger.

LIZZIE IRONS.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, that I may move concurrence, the bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery, with an amendment by the Senate.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "$512.50" and insert "$350.50."

Mr. JOHN REILLY. The Senate has reduced the amount of the bill as passed by the House, and I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN REILLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. ANDERSON.

Mr. STONE. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 628) for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White, and that it be brought before the House for consideration. And in making that request I ask one moment for an explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman from Missouri will be heard. The Chair hears none.

Mr. STONE. Five or six weeks ago when the House was in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar this bill was reached, and I objected to its consideration at that time for the reason that I thought the claimant was the late John J. Anderson, of Missouri, who was engaged in the banking business and defrauded a large number of people. I have since learned from members of the Kentucky delegation that the claimant is an old farmer of Kentucky who is entitled to this relief, and that the bill is justified by the facts of the case. I therefore ask that the bill may be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I reserve my right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will reserve for every gentleman the right to object until the bill is read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White, the sum of $8,507.83, in full of all claims of said Anderson & White, or either of them, against the Government of the United States, for cotton belonging to said firm, impressed for, and appropriated by, the authority of the Government of the United States to the defenses of Nashville in August and September, 1862, and for all damages in connection therewith.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much does this bill appropriate?

Mr. MORRISON. I must object to the present consideration of the bill. The chairman of the Committee on War Claims is not in his seat, and I must object until he is present.

Mr. STONE. I desire to have one moment to give an explanation.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. STONE. This bill was reported from the Committee on War Claims by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. CALDWELL,] and was the unanimous report of the committee. Senate bill No. 627, for the relief of Butler, Miller & Co., was predicated upon the evidence taken in the case of Mr. Anderson, and that bill has already passed the House. This bill, Senate bill No. 628, is accompanied by a long report from the Senate, No. 167. The claim has been before Congress for ten years, and from all the information I can get it is just and reasonable. The amount of this bill as originally reported was $14,000, but it was amended by the Senate so as to reduce the amount to $8,000. I think the bill should be passed.

Mr. MORRISON. I must continue my objection until the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN,] the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, is here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

SUSPENSION OF SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH JOINT RULES.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules be suspended for the remainder of the session.

Mr. RANDALL. These rules relate to the transmission during the last three days of the session of bills from one House to the other and to the President on the last day of the session.

Mr. MONROE. Let them be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the three last days of the session.

17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session.

Mr. RANDALL. It has not been necessary heretofore during this session to suspend these rules, because the time for the adjournment of Congress has not been fixed. It has not yet been fixed, but it may be fixed to-day, and at a time when under these joint rules bills could not be sent from one House to the other or to the President. This resolution is right; I have examined the subject carefully, and no harm can be done by adopting it. This course is always taken at each session of Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. COOK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the following adversely; and they were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3604) for the relief of David Rea, late second lieutenant First Regiment Tennessee Light Artillery Volunteers; and

The petition of John Edwards, jr., late captain Third United States Cavalry, for restoration to his former rank and position.

SETTLEMENT WITH RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. COOK also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 3362 a bill (H. R. No. 4092) to provide for a settlement with certain railway companies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF PAGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay the pages their entire salary for the full month of August, out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT HARRISBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. PACKER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 1006, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania. It is a local bill merely, and will not take long for its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which it will be in order to object to its present consideration.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury, after purchasing the site and obtaining a valid title to the land authorized to be purchased for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, by the act of March 3, 1875, to use any moneys left of such appropriation for the improvement of the premises so purchased, with a view to the use of the same as a post-office and for Government offices, as named in said act.

Mr. RANDALL. I will reserve my right to object until I can hear the explanation of my colleague, [Mr. PACKER.]

Mr. PACKER. Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1875, by which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to purchase a suitable piece of ground in the city of Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, for the erection thereon of a building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in that city, that officer, I am informed, has secured, or is about to secure, by purchase, in part at least, and possibly by condemnation in part, sufficient ground for the purpose indicated in the act.

Upon the premises thus selected, sir, there are buildings now erected which, with comparatively small expense, can be converted into offices, and as the total cost of the site will not, it is believed, exhaust the appropriation made for that purpose, it is proposed by this bill to authorize the application of the surplus to the improvement and alteration of the buildings, so that they may be used, for the present at least, as a post-office and for other Government offices, if necessary, as proposed by the act of Congress to which I have referred.

The Government at this time is renting buildings for post-office purposes; and if the Secretary of the Treasury is permitted to use the surplus of this appropriation for the purpose of putting in proper condition and repair the buildings now on this site, they can be used for post-office purposes and the Government will save the rent it is now paying.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to know whether this property now proposed to be occupied has passed to the ownership of the Government?

Mr. PACKER. Not yet: but the title is, I understand, about being perfected.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I want to know further whether any appraisement has been made of that property and whether the price has been fixed?

Mr. PACKER. A portion of it, I am advised, has been fixed by agreement.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a dispute, if I understand the case, as to the amount to be paid by the Government for this property?

Mr. PACKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. This bill would seem to me to make absolute the purchase of that property from the private owners at the prices which they may have fixed.

Mr. PACKER. Not at all. The bill only provides for the use of such surplus as there may be. If there should be no surplus after the purchase or condemnation of the site then, as a matter of course, there will be no money to be used for the purpose of improving the property.

Mr. RANDALL. If my colleague will allow me to make a suggestion, I would rather provide in this bill that the post-office shall be removed absolutely into this building at once at a rental, and not fasten upon the Government this additional property at the prices which I fear it may have to pay.

Mr. PACKER. I would be willing to meet that view if it were practicable; but my colleague will observe that by the original act no power whatever was given to lease or rent a building, while a fixed sum was appropriated for the purpose solely and exclusively of purchasing the site; and that sum cannot be increased or exceeded by the Secretary of the Treasury. If the Government cannot get the property for that amount or less, it cannot get it at all. The purpose of this bill is that if the proceedings result in securing the title for the Government, it may be able to apply whatever surplus there may be, if any, to the improvement of the premises; and my colleague will of course see that unless the title be secured for a less amount than has already been appropriated, there will be no surplus.

Mr. RANDALL. But the amount appropriated was, I understand, altogether in excess of a fair price for the property.

Mr. PACKER. It is supposed that owing to the general depreciation in the value of real estate, or from other causes, the Government may be able to get the property now proposed to be taken for a smaller sum than was at first expected. I do not know whether such will certainly be the case or not.

Mr. RANDALL. I have been apprised that the Government is asked entirely too much for this property.

Mr. PACKER. So I am also informed as to a portion of the property included in the site proposed to be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I want to protect the Government without interfering at all with the construction of this building. I desire that the Government shall have the advantage of any fall there may have been in the value of the property, shall have the advantage of an appraisement at the present actual value.

Mr. PACKER. That will be secured. If my colleague will read the bill he will see that is just what it will necessarily accomplish. As to a part of the property I understand the price has been agreed upon; as to another there has not been an agreement; and it is possible that the Government may have to resort to proceedings in court to condemn this portion. But my colleague will see at once that unless the Government keeps within the appropriation, whether by condemnation or purchase, it will be utterly impossible for it to proceed at all.

Mr. RANDALL. But I do not want, and I do not believe that my colleague wants, to run up to the aggregate amount of the appropriation.

Mr. PACKER. O, no; and there is nothing in this bill which by any possibility can be construed as conferring authority upon any one to exceed, either by purchase or appraisement, the true and actual value of the premises to be taken under the act of 1875, whether the site now selected shall be finally secured or some other location shall be ultimately adopted by the officers of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not make any objection to the bill; but I am glad this explanation has been made, because I apprehended that the Government of the United States might be made to pay an undue price for this site. When, however, my colleague states that the bill is right, I know from his character that it must be right.

Mr. PACKER. The bill is designed to accomplish, and I feel very confident it will secure, the object my colleague seems to have in view.

Mr. RANDALL. One further suggestion: If there should be a surplus after the purchase of the site, I think it should either be returned into the Treasury of the United States or should go toward commencing the building.

Mr. PACKER. That will necessarily be so.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

ELIZA JANE BLUMER.

Mr. BAGBY. Mr. Speaker, early in this session a bill (H. R. No. 11) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer was passed by this House and the Senate, but was vetoed by the President because it was discovered that the soldier was wrongly described as having belonged to Company A, instead of Company B. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and have passed a bill in which this error is corrected.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer was reported, and read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza Jane Blumer, widow of Henry A. Bloomer, a private of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY MOORE.

Mr. BAGBY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4094) for the relief of Mary Moore; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY A. SECOR.

Mr. BAGBY also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1419) granting a pension to Mary A. Secor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EMMA M. ASHENFELTER.

Mr. BAGBY also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, submitted an adverse report on the bill (H. R. No. 2516) granting a pension and back pay to Emma M. Ashenfelter; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NORMAN H. RYAN.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 840) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan for the purpose of putting it on its passage.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Norman H. Ryan the sum of $736, in full for services as storekeeper of the bonded warehouse of E. W. Dutcher, at Amboy, Illinois, from the 18th day of April, 1868, to the 15th day of October, 1868.

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems very proper that some disposition should be made of the bills on the Speaker's table, and this seems to be the most favorable moment. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bills on the Speaker's table be taken up and that those of them to which no objection is made be passed and that those to which objection is made shall either remain upon the table or be referred to committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COX. I withdraw my objection to the bill of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood that there were several objections to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN;] but he will again submit it to the House. He asks unanimous consent at this time to go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of disposing of all of the business thereon, and that whatever business objection is made to shall either remain upon the Speaker's table or be referred to a committee.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I call for the regular order.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the regular order as against the resolution of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the regular order because this adjournment over until ten o'clock was to enable the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] who was on the floor, to make his speech, and unless he takes the floor now he will lose his opportunity at this session of Congress.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is consideration of the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to reconsider the vote by which the President's message in relation to the sundry civil appropriation bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is on the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not know that, but I desire an opportunity to make that motion, as I think this question has been long enough before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman when the gentleman from Mississippi has concluded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to yield to me for one moment. I wish to say that on Wednesday last I voted for the joint resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] in relation to the protection of the rights of citizens, but was compelled to leave the House by severe sickness before the vote was taken on the preamble to that resolution; but if I had been present I would have voted for the preamble.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to yield to me to offer a resolution.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. SINGLETON. I will yield for that purpose.

CONSUL-GENERAL AT FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs inquire into and report at the next session upon the conduct of Consul-General Webster, of Frankfort-on-the-Main, or minister to the German Empire, in refusing to receive and forward to this Government the address of the democratic association of the city of Frankfort-on-the-Main, congratulating our country on the centennial commemoration.

Mr. CONGER. I object; I think these committees of investigation ought to have time for a little rest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the reference of the resolution?

Mr. CONGER. I understand that it is a resolution directing an investigation.

Mr. COX. It is simply a resolution that the committee shall inquire into the conduct of this officer and report at the next session. If the gentleman knew the case he would not oppose it, out of respect to the German people.

Mr. CONGER. I want to give the investigating committees a little rest.

Mr. SPRINGER. The members of the committee are more desirous of it than you can be.

Mr. RANDALL. Those who are being investigated require rest the most.

Mr. KASSON I object to the introduction of the resolution now; let it be introduced at the next session of Congress.

PRINTING OF IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 1042) providing for the publication of the proceedings of the Belknap trial and to put it on its passage now. It is a report that is necessary in all the public libraries of the country and also in the libraries of the lawyers of the country as a precedent in future time.

Mr. PAGE. I am willing to withdraw my objection to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late, the gentleman from Mississippi having the floor.

The Senate bill was read. It provides that 5,000 additional copies of the report of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap be printed, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 350 copies for the use of the managers, and 200 copies for the use of the respondent's counsel; and appropriates the sum of $5,030, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the execution of the work.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. McMAHON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The House then resumed the consideration of the special order, being the consideration of the message of the President of the United States in relation to the sundry civil appropriation bill; upon which Mr. SINGLETON was entitled to the floor.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a short time that I may correct some errors and misstatements which have gone to the country in relation to the late election in the State of Mississippi.

What I shall have to say will be in a spirit of kindness, and honestly to vindicate the truth of history and not to stir up acrimonious debate or kindle anew the fires of discord.

By the rules of this House I am not permitted to refer to anything which has taken place in the other end of the Capitol. To these rules, which are founded in wisdom, I bow deferentially, and shall attempt no evasion of them. But as a part of the history of the times appearing in all the newspapers of the day, in reports made to this House and the Senate, in speeches on this floor, I claim the right, as it is my duty, to repel certain charges made against my immediate constituents, affecting to some extent my own status as a member of this body, and to explain certain misrepresentations in regard to my State generally.

The charges in the indictment preferred are "fraud, violence, and intimidation," from which, it is alleged, resulted an undue increase of the vote of the State and the overthrow of the republican party. I may premise by saying that, while these charges came in a questionable shape, avouched by no responsible party, claiming no paternity beyond that of a certain disreputable dame called rumor, I felt inclined to let them pass unnoticed, and trust to the good sense of an intelligent public to judge of the motives of those who gave them currency, and to do justice to a deeply injured and much calumniated people. But slanders of this character, originating, as they now do, from high sources, often repeated and not contradicted, like plated wares, are apt to pass with the unsuspecting for that which is genuine.

To the first of these charges, "fraud," I interpose a general and emphatic denial, so far as my own party is concerned. The badges of fraud to which attention has been directed as tending to establish the charge are, first, the fact that the republican party in Mississippi has lost its usual majority of 25,000 and the democratic ticket was elected by 30,000.

From this it is argued that great wrongs were perpetrated upon the elective franchise, tending to destroy its sacredness and sap the foundation of our Government.

Was ever proposition so preposterous advanced before an intelligent public? Was ever a charge so grave sought to be bolstered up by evidence so unsatisfactory? Is it not a fact familiar to every mind that political mutations are often more sudden and astonishing than any in the experiences of life? Have we not seen individuals and parties swept along by the current of popular opinion just as the swollen stream bears upon its bosom the drift log, whirling and dancing, with no power to resist the impetus or give direction to its own course?

We need only recur to the history of the country for a few years past to find ample proof of the statement. What meant the "tidal wave" of 1840, which hurled the democrats from power and placed General Harrison in the presidential office?

What did the people mean, when again in 1848, determined to change their rulers, they gathered up that plain, unpretentious, but brave and patriotic old soldier, General Taylor, and by acclamation lifted him into the presidential chair? What meant the elections of 1874, which crushed out the hopes of many a Representative who figured in this forum and sent him to the shades of private life? What meant the late election in Alabama by which a State until last year republican now gives a democratic majority of 40,000?

Will any gentleman dare charge these results to fraud upon the part of the people? Did not each of these spontaneous uprisings spring out of a desire for a change of rulers? Under this Government of boasted free thought, free speech, and free suffrage, are the people to be held up by discarded office-holders and presidential aspirants as fools and corruptionists because they do not choose to retain in office imbecile stipendiaries, or favor the pretensions of ambitious demagogues, who court places they are totally unfit to fill?

If these revolutions, however sudden, are to be taken as evidences of corruption and to be regarded as subjects of investigation by congressional committees, then I submit we have entered upon a Herculean task, and we had better set to work at once to divide the Congress into such committees, invest them with power to send for "persons and papers," and with each report to bring the people to the bar of this House or of the Senate to be punished or reprimanded for their bad manners or treasonable conduct in changing their opinions without the consent of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the change in Mississippi politics is no grand phenomenon outside the regular order of things. The people of that State are much like people elsewhere. They are capable of suffering in body, mind, and estate. If you prick the body of one of them with a sharp instrument the blood will flow; if you offend his moral or intellectual sense he will rebel under it and give you to understand it is offensive to him; if you seek to plunder him of his estate, he will oppose such force to it as the law of society or natural right will justify. He has affections, hopes, aspirations as other people, and when wronged in any way he knows it and will seek redress. He lives under an organic law called a constitution and has a code of statute laws governing all the domestic relations of life.

Strange as it may appear to some very well educated people who do not seem to understand us, we have a good deal of human nature about us, and are amenable to the same laws that govern other mortals.

In connection with these facts I will state others which cannot be contradicted equally important to be remembered, and which must enter largely into a just estimate of the causes of this unexpected change in Mississippi politics.

For ten years our State has been scourged by a set of men who for the most part were the refuse of northern society, in many instances without education, destitute of principle, devoid of honor, with no social status, and bent upon the spoils of office, let it involve what sacrifice it might either of their own honor, dignity, or manhood, or the safety, lives, or property of the white or colored citizens.

These men, by constant association with the newly enfranchised population, by low cunning and unscrupulous falsehood, by constant appeals to their worst passions, by playing upon their fears of a return to slavery, by continued assurances that in the event of a race conflict they would be backed up by United States troops, by inveigling them into secret oath-bound leagues, and by every other species of falsehood and treachery that human ingenuity could devise, have managed to manipulate and control the colored vote of the State up to the last election, and have kept themselves in office against the wishes and remonstrances of the respectable, intelligent, property-holders of the country.

Their extravagant promises to the deluded freedmen were never kept; they sought the offices for plunder; a good name to them was of no value, and their robberies were so exhausting and impoverishing to all classes that they could no longer be borne. To escape these vampires and save the country from utter bankruptcy, the voters of the State, white and colored, determined to overthrow their power and put the State upon a new line of policy. In proof of what I have said I will call the attention of the House for a moment to a few figures which will speak for themselves and cannot be contradicted.

For ten years preceding the war the average annual cost of the State government was $325,000. For the last six years of republican rule the average has been $1,431,407. For the last five years the excess of appropriations above receipts have been an annual average of $573,214. This annual increase of the State debt was being heaped upon us while we were paying under their tax-laws, in 1874, $14 on every one thousand dollars' worth of property, the county and corporation taxes more than doubling the sum. Under the rule of our citizens in 1866, 1867, 1868, and 1869 the State tax did not exceed at any time $1.50 on the $1,000; showing that it cost us from ten to fourteen times as much to run the State government under their rule as it did under ours.

Again, under democratic rule lately inaugurated, notwithstanding our State debt, which had been largely increased by republican extravagance and must be met, the State taxes have been reduced more than one-third, although our taxable property in 1867 was assessed at $550,000,000, whereas in 1875 it was so reduced in value by maladministration and by a forfeiture of lands to the State that the assessed value of property was reduced to $155,000,000. The number of our circuit judges has been diminished and their salaries reduced; sinecure offices have been abolished; biennial sessions instead of annual of the State Legislature will hereafter be held; retrenchment has gone into every department of the State service; upon the public printing there will be a saving of $52,000 at each session of the Legislature; the number of chancellors of the State has been reduced from twenty, receiving a salary of $3,500 each, to ten with a salary of $2,500 each, saving to the State thereby $45,000, an amount sufficient to pay all the salaries of all other judicial officers of our State.

In addition to these facts, many others of like significance might be stated, but I will refer to only one which relates to public schools.

Under republican rule schools were required to be kept open four months in each year. By act of the late democratic Legislature the schools were required to be kept open five months, and ample means were provided for schooling all the children of the State, both white and colored.

Now, sir, are not facts like these calculated to inspire confidence in the wisdom and justice of our State officials? Is it a matter of surprise that the colored people are beginning to see where they should place their party allegiance? Can it be wonderful if further political changes occur in November next? They have occurred in our sister-State, Alabama, and you may confidently anticipate the same result in Mississippi.

But lest my statements as to the causes producing this change in Mississippi politics may be called in question, I shall introduce to this House a witness whose statements I presume will, or ought to be, satisfactory to those who are conducting this prosecution.

Senator ALCORN, a republican from Mississippi, in speaking of Governor Ames and Lieutenant-Governor Davis, of that State, as reported by the correspondent of the Chicago Times, holds the following language:

> Ames's course in the State has been so obnoxious to the best people there that it has been made socially uncomfortable for the unworthy governor. He is absent from the State most of the time, and has left the local government in the hands of Davis, the black lieutenant-governor. With this man criminals have for a long time gone scot-free. Without the formality of trial, notorious murderers have been pardoned out of jail before ever being made to appear in a court of justice. One of the worst cases of this turning out of murderers upon society cited by Senator ALCORN is that of a man named Barryntine, living near the center of the State. * * * In Mississippi it is claimed that this pardon was purchased by the murderer's friends for the sum of $800.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> Senator ALCORN says that Ames obtains his control over the colored people by representing himself as the mouth-piece of General Grant. Ames has filled all the offices of the State with thieves and plunderers, so that the State that was once 30,000 republican, when it elected ALCORN governor, will in the opinion of the Senator give this fall a large democratic majority.

Here is a direct public charge of corruption preferred against the chief executive of the State and the lieutenant-governor of the same by a republican United States Senator, who understands too well the use of language and is too ready to respond to calls made upon him for words spoken to have used them lightly. I will now call to the stand the attorney-general of my State, George E. Harris, a republican of high repute in his party, elected at the same time and upon the same ticket with Governor Ames, a strong supporter of the present Administration and fast friend of President Grant, to whom he addressed a long letter on the 24th of November, 1875, explaining the causes of the republican defeat in Mississippi at the last election. I quote largely from his letter, and ask republicans upon this floor who are fair minded and truth-loving to hear what he has to say. He is one of your own men, and not likely to state falsehoods or make untruthful admissions affecting his own party.

I have thought proper in this discussion to offer the statements of none but republicans, acknowledged to be of the highest respectability, and to introduce no democrat as a witness in support of any allegation I shall make. By this course I hope to reach the ear and heart of the unprejudiced at the North. If in this way they cannot be convinced, then would they not believe if one were to rise from the dead. But I will not despair. Already has truth found a lodgment in many a mind there, notwithstanding the persistent efforts of designing demagogues to prevent it.

But let Attorney-General Harris speak for himself. After premising with a few sentences, he says:

Governor Ames was inaugurated in January, 1874, under the most favorable auspices. His address promised economy and reform, and was well received by the whole country; even our political opponents, in a state of disruption, many of them having voted for him, expressed a willingness to support him in all that he had promised and advised; but instead of encouraging every indication of returning friendship, his cold indifference drove them at once into a direct antagonism. He seemed to contract his views and narrow his circle of friends to a few confidential advisers, as it were a close corporation of mercenary men, who knew but little of the wants of the people of the State and cared less; men who have no identity of interest or sympathy in common with the people of the State, and to deal plainly I must call names—such men as John B. Raymond, A. T. Morgan, A. R. Howe, and a few lesser lights, if possible. Raymond, the State printer, and chief clerk in the treasurer's office, lobbyist around the Legislature, especially on the printing bills, which pay him nearly $80,000 per annum, when $30,000 would be too much.

* * * * * * *

Morgan, who is a sheriff of Yazoo County, has long been a refugee from his county. Chairman of the late State convention and husband of a very respectable colored woman, (!) who, when a State senator, offered, in writing, to sell his vote for $2,000 and Raymond refused to pay it, saying he had already paid him $900 and that was enough for that vote. A. R. Howe, ex-county treasurer and ex-member of Congress, who took from the treasury of Panola County, through an ignorant colored board of supervisors and now unlawfully retains, the sum of $5,125.97, (I have a certified transcript of the record,) and which he does not deny, but refuses to pay. This, in brief, is a small part of the record of three of the governor's confidential advisers, friends, and counselors, and he must have known their character all the while.

Through these and other friends he had full control of the Legislature and could procure almost any legislation that looked at all plausible, either for the good of the State, the good of the party, or for self-aggrandizement, and the sequel has shown how he has used that power. The first session of the Legislature passed with but little if any reform, and we felt sad. Under the constitution and laws of the State he was required to appoint twenty chancellors, with the advice and consent of the senate. This, of course, should have been done during the session of the senate; but for some reason best known to himself, he refused to do it, but waited until the adjournment and then made the appointments in vacation, and this was set aside by the supreme court, (see Brady vs. Howe, 50 Mississippi Reports, page 607,) the court holding that the appointments should have been made during the session of the senate. It was manifestly his duty to have made the appointments during the session of the senate and to have sent them in for confirmation, as the terms of office expired long before the next session. But the governor, in his desire to control the judiciary as well as the executive department of the State, resorted to the expediency of making the appointments in vacation and then holding the appointments over them in terrorem, until the next session of the Legislature, and if they did not please him in their decrees, &c., he could withhold their names, (as he did in one case;) thus making the judiciary of the State subservient to the executive, in violation of the constitution, (see article 3, sections 1 and 2;) and he actually removed Drennan, as I believe, because in a case of habeas corpus he refused bail to the governor's friend Morgan, on a charge of the murder of one Hilliard.

In his selection of men to fill these important judicial positions he did not confine himself to the legal profession; made some good appointments, it is true, but in two or three instances he appointed men who had received a law license only a few days previous, for the purpose of being appointed, who had never had a case in court, were totally ignorant of the law and practice, and who did not know a plea in bar from a demurrer. In one case a man notoriously venal and corrupt, and in another case for the avowed purpose of giving strength to his friend Howe for Congress, and that chancellor, to secure the sending in of his name for confirmation, appointed Howe's brother clerk of the chancery court, and clerk of the board of supervisors of Panola County, for the express purpose of preventing an investigation of Howe's indebtedness to Panola County. In one case he appointed a Mr. Peyton, son of the chief justice, and then refused to send his name to the senate, because he decided a case contrary to the governor's wishes, and pending the trial of this case he sent for the chief justice and desired him to control the action of his son, the chancellor. This aroused the honest indignation of the chief justice and broke up the friendly relations between them.

The chief justice then dealt him a well-merited castigation, which resulted in the withholding of the name of young Mr. Peyton from the senate.

* * * * * * *

In December, 1874, troubles grew up in Vicksburgh. Indictments were pending against two or three of the county officers; complaints were made as to the sheriff's bond as tax-collector; he was ill-treated and forced to resign. There was much confusion and anarchy. The sheriff fled to Jackson for advice and instructions, disregarding his resignation made under duress. I do not know all the advice the governor gave him, but the presumption is that he received advice, as he returned and acted; notified the colored people by circulars to come to Vicksburgh armed on Monday morning, which they attempted to do, and nearly one hundred lives were lost in the fight. How far the governor is responsible for those lives, or whether responsible at all, I cannot say; but Colonel Wells has charged him in the papers with the use of language well calculated in its nature to produce riot and bloodshed, and he has never denied it, and I do not think he will.

Pointing out the means by which expenses could be cut off and the taxes reduced, I advised a reduction in the matter of public printing. The Legislature passed a bill and the governor vetoed it. (Raymond was State printer.)

I advised a reduction in the salary of county superintendents of education. The Legislature passed the bill and the governor vetoed it.

I advised a change in the constitution, so as to give us biennial sessions of the Legislature. (This would save nearly $100,000 per annum.) We had pledged it in our platform; the governor had advised it in his first message. The resolution passed the lower house and went to the senate; there the governor actually lobbied the senate, and advised his friends to vote against it, and defeated it by one vote.

* * * * * * *

Again, in the face of the constitution, his adherents introduced a bill authorizing him to appoint the tax-collector for each county. They passed it after much caucussing in which pistols (I am informed by a member) were presented to force members to pledge their support to the bill. The governor approved it and acted under it in one or two cases, and the Supreme Court has set that law aside as unconstitutional. (See L. French vs. The State, MS. opinion.)

Thus it will be seen that the party in this State has been governed and controlled by a few men, not to exceed half a dozen, including the governor, who have persistently violated the Constitution and the most sacred pledges the party had made in its platform.

* * * * * * *

A constitution and laws are of little value on paper unless they find a lodgment in the hearts of the people. We have a good constitution, but our legislation has been unwise and has given us much trouble.

And this is the point to which we have come: In the light of the experience of other southern States our party has rushed heedlessly into a shameful defeat.

I know the people of the State, having resided among them for the last thirty-three years. The Government appointees here, we think, are good men and true republicans. We need no changes made for political purposes and no troops.

This letter, though of some length, has given but a bare outline of the character and conduct of a few would-be leaders who have wrought our sad defeat; but should they choose to deny anything I have said of them I will not only prove it, but strike them at other points that are equally salient.

Your obedient servant,

G. E. HARRIS.

I now offer some extracts from a late letter of Ex-Senator Revels (colored) to His Excellency President Grant:

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI, November 6, 1875.

MY DEAR SIR: In view of the results of the recent election in our State, I have determined to write you a letter canvassing the situation and giving you my views thereon. I will premise by saying that I am no politician, though having been honored by a seat in the United States Senate. * * *

Since reconstruction, the masses of my people have been, as it were, enslaved in mind by unprincipled adventurers, who, caring nothing for country, were willing to stoop to anything, no matter how infamous, to secure power to themselves and perpetuate it. My people are naturally republicans, and always will be, but as they grow older in freedom so do they in wisdom. A great portion of them have learned that they were being used as mere tools, and, as in the late election, not being able to correct the existing evil among themselves, they determined by casting their ballots against these unprincipled adventurers to overthrow them. * * *

My people have been told by these schemers when men were placed upon the ticket who were notoriously corrupt and dishonest, that they must vote for them; that the salvation of the party depended upon it; that the man who scratched a ticket was not a republican. This is only one of the many means these unprincipled demagogues have devised to perpetuate the intellectual bondage of my people. To defeat this policy, at the late election men irrespective of race, color, or party affiliation united and voted together against men known to be incompetent and dishonest. * * * We do not believe that republicanism means corruption, theft, and embezzlement. These three offenses have been prevalent among a great portion of our office-holders; to them must be attributed the defeat of the republican party in the State, if defeat there was, but I, with all the lights before me, look upon it as an uprising of the people, the whole people, to crush out corrupt rings and men from power.

* * * * * * *

The bitterness and hate created by the late civil strife has, in my opinion, been obliterated in this State, except perhaps in some localities, and would have long since been entirely obliterated were it not for some unprincipled men who would keep alive the bitterness of the past and inculcate a hatred between the races in order hat they may aggrandize themselves by office and its emoluments to control my people, the effect of which is to degrade them. As an evidence that party lines in this State have been obliterated, men were supported without regard to their party affiliations, their birth, or their color by those who heretofore have acted with the democratic party, by this course giving an evidence of their sincerity that they have abandoned the political issues of the past and were only desirous of inaugurating an honest State government and restoring a mutual confidence between the races.

His Excellency U. S. GRANT,
President of the United States.

I have quoted thus largely from Ex-Senator Revels, always a stanch republican, because he is a representative man of his color, known to the country, and more especially to those who are attempting to malign my State and cast contempt upon her name.

Mr. Speaker, one or two extracts from the pen of Redfield, the able and, I may say for the most part, impartial correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, himself a republican, and I leave this head. These are his words:

From what I know of the candidates nominated by the whites, I have not the least doubt but what the coming Legislature will be the best one that has assembled in Mississippi since the war. The whites really made an honest effort to bring out their best men, discarding in many instances the old line of politicians, and putting forward men of capacity, worth, intelligence, and property. Really, there was no comparison between the nominees of the two parties. * * *

There were a few good men among the republican nominees for the Legislature, but the most of them were a sorry lot, made up of plantation negroes, white carpet-baggers, without a dollar's interest in the State, and natives who became republican one day and candidates for office the next. It was such a slate of candidates as would be repudiated in Ohio by 575,000 majority, provided your vote was as full as at your last election.

* * * * * * *

The State government has been carried on at an expense of at least 40 per cent. more than necessary, and this extravagance will be checked. In six years in Mississippi taxation has increased 500 per cent., and property has depreciated 200 per cent.

* * * * * * *

To suppose that the property-holders would rest quietly under this sort of thing, year after year, was to suppose that they had less of human nature than we find in other parts of the world.

Another badge of fraud as charged is that there was a large accession to the vote of the State.

Unfortunately for the country those who talk most about Mississippi affairs seem to know least of them. Men who have remained all their lives at a profoundly respectful distance from her borders, whose feet have never pressed her soil, in their eagerness to win political preferment for themselves or to secure a party triumph, gather up a few statistics, procure false information through interested and corrupt sources, and thus panoplied make war upon an unoffending State and hurl at her a tirade of abuse, couched in the vocabulary of the fish-market. Her people are called "coiners of spurious votes," "ballot-box-stuffers," and other offensive names, only because they threw off their supineness, hurried to the ballot-box, thousands of them who had abstained from voting year after year because they supposed they were to be overwhelmed by numbers and could see no good to result from casting a ballot. Thus the vote of the State was largely increased.

It is also a fact known to the most casual observer that during the last two years large numbers of colored voters have come into the State from Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, and Kentucky, and have greatly increased our voting population, especially in the counties bordering on the Mississippi River. Take, if you please, the county of Washington, where two years ago the registration-books only showed a voting population of about four thousand, whereas at the registration last fall it amounted to more than six thousand, or an increase of one-third. In this county the colored vote is in the ratio of 5 to 1 of whites; and although there was a regular republican ticket there, opposed by a fusion ticket composed of democrats and republicans, the fusion ticket, upon which your humble speaker had no place, was elected by more than four hundred majority, and my majority was only a few votes short of it. In this county a very full vote was polled, as indeed was the case in almost every county in the State.

There is no difficulty then in accounting for the increased vote of the State upon rational principles without being subjected to the imputation of fraud and corruption.

As to the charges of "violence" and "intimidation," I interpose an equally unqualified negative, with this explanation: That in some localities where there was a great preponderance of colored population and where unscrupulous leaders had poisoned their minds against us, where threats were indulged and things assumed a warlike aspect, our citizens did purchase arms and ammunition, not secretly but openly, not for aggression but for defense, not to intimidate but to keep themselves ready for any emergency that might arise.

I deny that in Mississippi there have occurred more broils and disturbances than might be considered the legitimate fruit of the new and anomalous state of things; and I most emphatically deny that in even a majority of those which have occurred the whites have been to blame. Generally the outbreaks have been sudden and unpremeditated, as in case of the Clinton riot, where there was scarcely one white man present for every one hundred colored, and in the case of the Yazoo City riot, where there were only five southern whites present in a large room well filled with white and colored republicans. The statement of these facts, which are well known to my colleagues to be true, negatives the idea of premeditated attacks. I shall not go into the minutiæ of these disturbances, as the facts were published at the time of the occurrences. I will only say that as to the Vicksburgh and Friar's Point riots the blame has been entirely lifted from democratic shoulders by the testimony of distinguished republicans.

I observe that my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. WELLS] is in his seat. I ask his attention and the attention of the House to the following statement which he is reported to have made.

The Clerk read as follows:

HERNANDO, August 7.

Colonel G. WILEY WELLS, United States district attorney and candidate for the republican nomination for Congress in this district, made a speech here to-day. He declared that in the interview between Governor Ames, Sheriff Crosby, and Attorney-General Harris, at the time of the Vicksburgh riot, the governor instructed Crosby to arm the blacks and march against Vicksburgh. Attorney-General Harris protested against the advice, and urged a resort to the courts. Crosby left with these instructions from the governor, who, after his departure, turned to Attorney-General Harris and said that the blood of twenty-five or thirty negroes would benefit the republican party in the State.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SINGLETON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. In regard to the report which has just been read of my speech at Hernando I have simply to say that I made a speech at that time and did make about the remarks quoted. I stated, however, that I had been informed that this conversation had taken place between Ames and Attorney-General Harris and Crosby, and that I was in favor of peace, and was opposed to any person, whether democrat or republican, who would invite a conflict between the races; that I condemned this language, and that if he were truly reported, the governor ought to be condemned, and I did there condemn him.

Mr. SINGLETON. It has never been contradicted to this day that he did make that speech; that the governor told Sheriff Crosby to go to Vicksburgh; to arm the colored people and march them against the city; and that he declared to Attorney-General Harris that the blood of twenty-five or thirty negroes would benefit the republican party in the State. The fault, therefore, of that riot is not with the democratic party. It was instigated by the governor of the State of Mississippi. The sheriff, acting upon his advice, did arm these men, and marched on the city of Vicksburgh; and the citizens there, in defense of their rights, of their lives, of their families, and of all that they held sacred, did meet them, and after they tried in vain to induce them to return to their homes a conflict ensued, in which about one hundred persons, as charged here, were killed.

Now as to the riot at Friar's Point, I find by the testimony of Governor Ames, given before the Mississippi investigating committee, that we are acquitted of the charge of inaugurating it. He says in answer to questions propounded:

It is believed that that conflict and those murders were due to the action of Senator ALCORN. The democracy of that section were allied to him and supported him.

Question. Allied to whom?

Answer. ALCORN—following him, as reported to me by the sheriff. It was Senator ALCORN who originated that trouble and gave it countenance and head.

It has been fully proven in the investigation which was had that the democrats had no part in getting up that riot; that it was not partisan in character and had no political significance whatever.

I assert fearlessly that no proof entitled to a moment's consideration can be made or ever will be made showing that arms were purchased or used in any other way than that I have indicated.

If from this state of facts any amount of intimidation was felt by their white leaders or by the colored people, it was only because their consciences made cowards of them, and not because of any threat or demonstration on the part of democratic voters.

That there was intimidation practiced in the late election, and in all the elections which have taken place for the last ten years in Mississippi, is a fact that no man who respects the truth will deny. This intimidation sprang from a spirit of intolerance manifested by the colored voters of the republican party toward any colored man who dared to side with the democrats. Social ostracism was the penalty. Speakers of this class were dragged from the stand; church members were excluded from the pales of the church; preachers of the gospel were driven from their pulpits and silenced in disgrace. Many were beaten unmercifully and not a few killed for opinion sake, and yet no cry of intimidation then went to the country. Why, sir, this persecution went to such an extent that we found it necessary both in our platforms and in our speeches to give solemn pledges to colored voters that if they desired to vote with us they should be fully protected in the exercise of this right; and on several occasions in carrying out these promises conflicts ensued between the races, for which we were not responsible, as they were the aggressors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the very pertinent question arises, Why has it been thought proper by certain distinguished individuals to drag this Mississippi election into the political arena? Is there any individual upon trial for a violation of the election laws before either House of Congress? If so, how does the jurisdiction accrue to either of them? Is any member's seat being contested? If so, is there not in each branch of Congress a Committee on Elections which is charged with the duty of inquiring into the whole matter? Is the case of Mississippi so anomalous that all parliamentary rules shall be lost sight of and an investigating committee be required to try the slums and cess-pools of party politics, and pluck up by the locks some foul slander which may answer as political capital for a party hard pressed and perhaps secure its ascendency for an hour? Is all this not a political maneuver, and nothing more?

Can any legitimate practical results flow from having sent a committee to Mississippi to inquire into her late election? Can the report, whatever may be its character, be used as evidence to affect the rights of any one? Is it not entirely ex parte in its character? Is there not a law governing committees as it governs courts, that every man whose rights of person, property, or franchise are to be determined shall have his day in court, shall be confronted with witnesses and shall be heard by himself or counsel, or both, in his defense. In this case upon whom has notice been served? What are the issues to be tried, and what the verdict to be rendered? Whose rights are to be affected by it?

But enough of this. The eyes of the country are open to the whole movement, and it will meet its merited reward. I can envy no man his characteristics who is incapable of generosity to a fallen foe or who delights in tearing the bandages from the wounds of his victim, that blood may flow afresh. Such a man has all the materials in him to make an improved and enlarged edition of Falstaff, and, an opportunity presenting itself, would gather up the body of another Harry Percy, carry it to the feet of his party, and, brandishing his self-hacked sword, cry with stentorian voice, "Ecce signum." Whatever laurels he can gather upon this field let him wear them complacently. I leave him "alone in his glory," believing that time will set all things even, and posterity will award his memory the scorn and contempt it so richly merits.

During the delivery of Mr. SINGLETON'S remarks the following proceedings took place:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. The time of gentlemen on the other side of the House has been extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. LYNCH. The House had the courtesy to extend my time, and I hope the same courtesy will be extended to my colleague.

Mr. PAGE. I withdraw my objection. My only reason for making it was because the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] objected the other day to an extension of time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. SINGLETON. On all occasions when I have addressed the House I have yielded to every gentleman who asked me to do so. But the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] having refused to hear me at all, that was the ground on which I made an objection in his case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman from Mississippi desire?

Mr. SINGLETON. How much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Half an hour.

Mr. SINGLETON. I would like half an hour more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi will be extended one-half hour if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SINGLETON then resumed and concluded his remarks as given above.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I was not in the House when my colleague began his remarks, and I wish to ask him this question: Is it not a fact that nearly all the leading prominent republicans of the State of Mississippi denounced the acts that are charged by gentlemen here upon this floor and by my colleague himself to have been committed and used every means to reform those abuses?

Mr. SINGLETON. I will state that some of them did. How many I cannot say. But my colleague from Mississippi on the other side of the House [Mr. LYNCH] undertook the other day to defend Governor Ames and his administration, and charged upon the democratic party that we had acted in bad faith and had persecuted and turned gentlemen out of office without just cause. The gentleman must settle that difference between himself and his colleague.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I do not rise to make any question as to that fact; but I desire to say this: That I heartily concur in what my colleague [Mr. LYNCH] said in this particular, that if Governor Ames was guilty of the charges made against him he should have been tried and impeached, as well as every other officer against whom such charges are preferred; and I did object and do now object to the position taken by the Legislature in pensioning one of the judges of our supreme court and providing for his retirement without any constitutional power to do so or any appropriation to pay him, in order to secure the appointment of a democratic judge.

Mr. HOAR. What is the rate of taxation per thousand dollars in the State of Mississippi?

Mr. SINGLETON. The State and county taxes at present amount to nine mills on the dollar.

Mr. HOAR. Nine mills on the dollar! What a dreadfully overburdened State!

Mr. SINGLETON. That is the rate under the democratic rule. We have reduced it to that from fourteen mills. We have reduced it about one-third, notwithstanding the debt heaped upon the State by the republican party.

Mr. HOAR. I have paid $17.50 on the thousand dollars in the city of Worcester for years, and am glad to pay it.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. If it has been reduced one-third, it has been done by appropriating the amount raised for the school fund by the republican party, which I understand has been distributed pro rata to the counties, this fund amounting to over $60,000, and by increasing the county taxes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House of Representatives to make certain corrections in the enrollment of the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government; also a concurrent resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia; in which resolutions he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield twelve minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. SCHLEICHER.]

DANIEL W. PERKINS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a substitute for the bill of the House (H. R. No. 2230) for the relief of Daniel W. Perkins, of East Saginaw County, Michigan.

There being no objection, Mr. LAWRENCE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4095) as a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2230) for the relief of Daniel W. Perkins, of East Saginaw County, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

CORRECTION IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the concurrent resolution from the Senate allowing the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House to make certain correction in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

There was no objection, and the Senate resolution was taken up and concurred in, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House of Representatives be authorized in the enrollment of House bill No. 1594, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, to insert in the amendment numbered 14, after the words "fifty-two," the words "one thousand," so that the amendment will read "$52,500;" also to insert in the bill in the amendment numbered 114, after the word "nine," the word "thousand," so that the amendment will read "$9,500."

MEMBER SWORN IN.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to present the credentials of Hon. Mr. Watterson, a member-elect from the fifth congressional district of Kentucky, who is present and desires to be sworn; and I ask that the Clerk read the certificate.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF KENTUCKY, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
Frankfort, August 11, 1876.

The undersigned, a board duly authorized by law to examine the returns of a special election held on the 7th day of August, 1876, for a Representative in Congress from the fifth congressional district, to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death of E. Y. Parsons, do certify that the whole number of votes cast at said election was 12,244, of which Henry Watterson received 11,567 and W. J. Heady received 677; and that Henry Watterson having received the highest number of votes is declared duly elected.

JAMES B. McCREERY,
Governor of Kentucky.
THOS. E. MOSS,
Attorney-General.
JOHN STODDARD THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WATTERSON appeared, and was duly qualified by taking the modified oath.

GOVERNMENT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CRAPO. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a concurrent resolution from the Senate which was sent over this morning providing for a commission to prepare a uniform government for the District of Columbia.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be appointed a joint select committee of three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the House of Representatives, to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia, and to report at the next session of Congress; that said committee be authorized to sit during the recess and to employ the necessary clerical force; that the expenses of said committee be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. This is, I understand, a proposition to appoint a joint committee to provide a government for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRAPO. It is similar to a bill which passed this House, with this exception, that the bill provided for a commission composed of two residents of the District of Columbia and one non-resident.

Mr. RANDALL. And this resolution proposes simply to appoint a committee of Senators and Representatives, and to give them power to meet during the recess?

Mr. HOAR. I would like to inquire what has become of the report which was made by a similar committee to this House?

Mr. CRAPO. That was made to the last Congress, and not to this.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of it?

Mr. CRAPO. It never was presented to this Congress.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague will permit me to say that the last Congress appointed a committee like this, consisting of the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mitchell of Wisconsin, (one of the ablest members on the democratic side of the House,) and two other members. They made a very thorough and exhaustive examination and discussion of this matter, and their report seems to solve the problem both in the matter of the proportion of taxation and the form of government, and it would have been satisfactory to the country if Congress had taken it up and discussed it; but they had never done anything about it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I only yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts on the condition that this matter should not give rise to debate.

No objection being made, the resolution of the Senate was taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in.

Mr. CRAPO moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the motion made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to reconsider the vote by which the President's message in reference to the sundry civil appropriation bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, upon which Mr. SCHLEICHER was entitled to the floor.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] in taking ground against the silver bill now before the House, has argued against the use of silver as money altogether. I believe this is changing the argument to a wrong position, as in my opinion this present bill does not present the issue of the double and single standard at all. This shifting of the argument might have the injurious effect to cause the friends of honest silver money who disagree with the gentleman to look with favor upon this present measure. Indeed, we have seen this effect already. I would like to warn gentlemen who, like myself, are opposed to the policy of demonetizing silver, that there is great danger in linking their cause with any proposition which, like the present one, has so many other objectionable features. Most of the arguments of the opponents of silver, like the able argument of Mr. HEWITT, delivered in this House several months ago, can be completely met by a re-adjustment of the ratio between gold and silver at the proper time. The history of silver as money does not present a history of frequent fluctuations, but of a few violent temporary fluctuations, followed by long periods of stability. Since the discovery of the South American silver mines, which created in the European money market convulsions like the present, there have been no violent fluctuations until quite lately. The present feeling is much in the nature of a panic. There was nearly as much of causeless fear for gold after the Californian and Australian diggings were found as there is now for silver; but many of the ephemeral writings of that period are now forgotten, and people seem to think that gold was always the same. An occasional re-adjustment of the ratio, happening perhaps once in a hundred years, is all the drawback that may be feared in retaining both metals as money.

I am in favor of a double standard. I think it is the true American policy to sustain the value of the silver which is produced by American mines. But I am in favor of giving a dollar's worth of silver for a dollar and have it coined into a dollar, and not eighty cents' worth. Gold and silver have been money as long as we have a history of civilized nations. They both have the requisite qualities for money. But we know that from time to time it has been necessary to adjust their relative ratio, as one or the other would fluctuate. Before the discovery of the South American silver mines the proportion of value in Europe was 11 to 1. It changed to 14 to 1, to 15 to 1, and in 1824 the United States made it 16 to 1, which proved to be too much and drove the silver dollars out of circulation.

There was no change since until lately through various causes silver has lost in value until the weight of silver in the dollar in 1834 would now only be worth about eighty cents and less. A change of standard is evidently again required, but it would be altogether hazard and guess-work to attempt to establish that new standard in the midst of the present violent fluctuations. We are fortunately situated in not being now affected by these changes of value like the English in India and like the double-standard countries, and we can well afford to wait until the new ratio can be more definitely ascertained.

In my opinion it should be the work of an international commission in which all the governments participate who recognize silver as money.

But the idea of now declaring eighty cents' worth of silver a legal tender for a dollar is contrary to every dictate of strict honesty and of prudence. Why it is not honest it is not necessary now to argue. That it is imprudent and instead of alleviating the burdens of our taxpayers will increase them is the main and only practical argument now. If we had the money to pay off the principal of our bonds or any considerable part of them at eighty cents on the dollar, as this bill declares we have the right to do, then there might be an argument about the prudence of doing so, although the honesty would be very questionable; but when we have nothing to pay off our public debt or any respectable portion of it, even at such a discount, the only possible result of the present agitation is the proclamation of our bad faith and consequently a lowering of our credit. We say to our creditors: "We would cheat you now if we could pay you off, but as we have no money to do that, we must continue to ask you to extend credit to us and bide our time." Glorious way that of reducing the interest on our public debt. It seems to me that ordinary prudence would dictate that as long as we have nothing to pay with, it is useless to threaten what we would do if we could, and that we should rather feign the virtue honesty, even if we do not possess it, so as to obtain good credit, which means low interest.

If we had continually expressed ourselves in favor of strict honesty and a compliance with all obligations—which would have cost us nothing—our credit might be now so that we could fund our debt at 4 per cent. interest instead of 6. England pays 3 per cent.; we pay 6 only because we have a worse credit. Had we succeeded in inspiring the world with a belief in our honesty we might now save at least thirty millions a year in the gold interest on our bonds. But when one day this Congress votes to investigate the validity of the act of 1869, upon which our present credit rests, and if on another day it votes to declare that we have a right to pay our debt with eighty cents' worth of silver to the dollar, how can we expect to retain even our present credit, let alone improving it?

Gentlemen may say we need no credit now. What fallacy! I have said we might, if we had had statesmanship enough to improve our credit, save at least thirty millions per annum by refunding at a lower interest. But apart from that, do gentlemen reflect that only five years hence the principal of the twenty-year bonds of 1862 will begin to fall due? How shall we pay? We can only pay by selling new issues of bonds. What interest we shall have to pay for them depends solely upon what credit we establish in the mean time.

With prudence and honesty we might get it down to 4 per cent. at least, but with such proceedings as these we may have to pay 10 or 12 per cent.

Is this the way the champions of the tax-payers are going to lighten our burdens? To increase the annual interest of our public debt instead of reducing it?

The great and central heresy around which cluster all minor errors is the idea that government can create values by law. We must get clear of that before we can ever act understandingly.

When James II was expelled from England and established himself in Ireland he coined money of brass and made it a legal tender. He tried to extricate himself from his financial troubles, as Macaulay says, "by calling a farthing a shilling." I refer to Macaulay's pages for a description of the results. "Of all the plagues of that time," he says, "none made a deeper or more lasting impression than the plague of the brass money."

I confess my inability to perceive the difference in the principle of the acts of James and the schemes of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] The difference is in degree only. To call a lump of brass a dollar and stamp it so, or to call a promise to pay on a piece of paper a dollar and stamp it so, or to call seventy or eighty cents' worth of silver a dollar and force people to take either of the articles so stamped at their nominal value in exchange for real values, is all the same in principle and differs only in degree.

The arbitrary power which in any country can enforce and impose worthless paper or debased metal or an insufficient quantity of valuable metal on its own people under the fiction that the coinage or inscription gives it value ceases at once when it crosses its own border and is forced to fair dealing. But in modern times it has been considered shameful for a government to practice such impositions on its own people simply because it has the power, or on its creditors because by trusting in its honesty they have placed themselves in its power. Enlightened governments deal as fairly with their own people as they have to deal with strangers, and the stamp on a gold or silver coin should be a certificate of its weight and fineness, no more; not making the value nor adding to the value, but a ready proof of the value only. I am opposed to stamping a false certificate of value on our silver coins.

Bad faith in a government is a poison that tends to corrupt the whole body-politic, destroys confidence, and thereby paralyzes all the recuperative energies of the people.

I have a few moments left and will yield them to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Illinois wishes to make that motion; I do not object, and will yield the floor for that purpose.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRISON's motion, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, August 14, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with.

COAST SURVEY REPORTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 1,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year ending June 30, 1874, and that the same number of copies of his report for the year ending June 30, 1875, be printed for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of J. W. Carhart, mayor of the city of Hot Springs, Arkansas, in the name of four thousand citizens living upon the Hot Springs reservation, praying for the passage of the joint resolution introduced by Senator DORSEY in relation to the collection of water and house rent by the United States thereon; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CORRECTION OF ERRORS IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask once more that the House bill in relation to the pavement of Pennsylvania avenue be taken up for consideration.

Mr. SARGENT. I want to present a concurrent resolution in the nature of a report from the Committee on Appropriations. The passage of a concurrent resolution is necessary in order to correct the enrollment of the consular bill, and it ought to be passed at once.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

Mr. SARGENT. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House of Representatives be authorized in the enrollment of the bill (H. R No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, to insert in the bill, in the amendment numbered 14, after the words "fifty-two" the word "thousand," so that the amendment will read "$52,500;" also, to insert in the bill, in the amendment numbered 114, after the word "nine," the the word "thousand," so that the amendment will read "$9,500."

This is not a change in the bill from what it was understood as it passed both Houses. From the fact that the Committee on Appropriations were thoroughly wearied and tired out, after working night and day, I am not surprised that these two unimportant errors occurred; but I suppose they would be important if not corrected. I ask that the resolution be passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can that be done by a concurrent resolution?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; let us take that for granted.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask that the bill which has repeatedly been called up, in relation to the pavement of Pennsylvania avenue, be taken up for action.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is not through.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum here. You cannot do any business. I do not object to taking it up, but there is no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call for morning business.

Mr. SPENCER. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be appointed a joint committee of three members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the House of Representatives, to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia, and to report at the next session of Congress; that said committee be authorized to sit during the recess and to employ the necessary clerical force, and that the expenses of said committee be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to look at the resolution before it is acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects, and the resolution cannot be considered at this time.

Mr. SPENCER subsequently said: The resolution which I just offered was objected to by the Senator from Vermont. He now withdraws his objection and is willing that the resolution shall pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration. I suppose the Senator from Vermont will not object to it. I offer the following:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on the Mississippi Election be authorized to allow the clerk of said committee pay for preparing the index to the testimony taken by said committee for a period of time not exceeding thirty days after the adjournment of this session of Congress.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How is the clerk to be paid?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Out of the fund appropriated for the expenses of the committee.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES C. CAMPBELL.

Mr. MITCHELL. The chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. WRIGHT] is absent. He called my attention to a case which he became satisfied before leaving was a very meritorious one. It was called up a few days ago and some objection was made. I have in my hands a letter which I will read as a part of my remarks to show why the bill should be taken up now, and I think there will be no objection to its passage. The bill has passed the House, and it was reported favorably to the Senate by the late Senator Caperton. It has been considered by the chairman of our committee since that time, and I believe it to be a very meritorious case. I will read a letter from General Burbridge. The simple question of loyalty, I understand, was raised when the matter was up before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who is the man?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Campbell, of Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot pass that this morning. It was not a question of loyalty; it was a question of public law as to these mules, &c., belonging to the concern.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill has been once under consideration. It may be that this gentleman was entirely loyal, but the question which was discussed in the Senate before was that of the relation of the property to the salt-works—of course I cannot go into the merits—the salt-works having been destroyed, and the property used in connection with it was carried away. This bill is to pay for that property, and it opens the whole question about the rights of war there, which has agitated us so many times. It is perfectly useless, in my opinion, at this late stage in the session to attempt to take up such a bill. I hope, therefore, that it will not be taken up, for it will not be lost; it will only stand over as it now stands. We may adjourn this afternoon, and here are the Hawaiian treaty bill and the constitutional amendment, both of which we must act upon. If this bill is not taken up, I believe I shall move to take up the constitutional amendment, and let the debate go on upon that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope this bill will be taken up. I will state that it does not come within the list of cases that have been controverted. It is simply to compensate this man for certain commissary stores taken by General Burbridge for the use of the Army. I desire to read the letter which I was about to read a moment ago, which is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: I feel it to be my duty to attempt to correct the erroneous and unjust impression which seemed to prevail on the part of one or two Senators in relation to the loyalty of Mr. Campbell. I know Mr. Campbell to have been a truly loyal man. I destroyed his salt-works not because he had sold salt to rebels but because there was danger that his salt-works might be captured by the confederate army and then used in the manufacture of salt for the confederate forces.

I destroyed the property of many Union men for the same reasons. Mr. Campbell was loyal in a locality in which loyalty implied a sacrifice of every material interest and social relation, and now it seems both harsh and unjust that any aspersions should be made against his devotion to the Union. He claims nothing for the property destroyed—

I call attention to this—

he claims nothing for the property destroyed, but only for supplies taken and used by the Union Army. He is now sorely afflicted with sickness in his family, and his home, which is all that ravages of the rebellion have left him, is advertised for sale, and if Congress fails to do him justice he will be without a roof to protect himself and family. A feeling of delicacy on his part has prevented him from making known to you his distressing situation, and I at the risk of being regarded as troublesome feel it my duty to acquaint you with his situation.

I have the honor to be, very truly, yours,

S. G. BURBRIDGE.

Hon. GEO. G. WRIGHT,
United States Senate.

I hope this bill will be taken up and disposed of. It has been acted upon favorably by the House and reported favorably by the committee of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that any reason why we should pass it, because the House acted favorably? That is a very extraordinary argument in reference to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is this much of an argument, that it is a House bill; and if it is a proper bill to act upon, it is an argument which should give it preference over a Senate bill.

Mr. LOGAN. If this question is debatable I desire to say but a word. I have no fault to find with Mr. Campbell or anybody else, but I propose to object, where my objection will avail anything, to every claim that is presented by a gentleman for property destroyed by the Union Army claiming to be a loyal man or a disloyal man. It is immaterial for what he claims——

Mr. MITCHELL. This is not to pay for property destroyed.

Mr. LOGAN. It makes no difference.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is for property used.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, property used; mules, wagons, &c., assisting in making salt. I propose to object, while I am here in my seat, whether the claim is a proper one or not, until the Senate shall agree to pay the soldiers who put the rebellion down what this Government owes them. I object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am just as willing as the Senator from Illinois to vote to pay the soldiers, and I have voted with him every time the Senator has asked to take up the bounty bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I know that, but that is not the point. It is not whether the Senator votes with me or not, but whether the Senate will take up the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it is as great an outrage for the Congress of the United States to refuse to pay a loyal man for his private property taken by the Union Army and used by the Union Army in putting down the rebellion as it is to neglect to pay the soliders who fought to put down the rebellion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know if that is not going into the merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will confine himself to the question of taking up the bill. Debate is not in order upon the merits. The Senator from Oregon moves the present consideration of the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

SALE OF SALINE LANDS.

Mr. HARVEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2260) providing for the sale of saline lands.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARVEY. The amendment recommended by the committee——

Mr. WEST. I ask whether the bill is up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. WEST. Then we cannot have the merits of the bill discussed.

Mr. HARVEY. I simply wish to make a statement. The amendment recommended by the committee was made upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. WEST. I venture to inquire whether the Senator can discuss the character of the bill or the amendment before the bill is before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The merits of the bill cannot now be discussed.

Mr. HARVEY. Can I call for the reading of the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be read to show the necessity of taking up the bill; but the merits cannot be considered in debate.

Mr. HARVEY. I ask for the reading of the letter.

Mr. LOGAN. How long will it take?

Mr. HARVEY. Only a few minutes. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Perhaps the Senator from Kansas will yield to me for a moment to call up another bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. While the letter is being sent for.

Mr. HARVEY. Will it have the effect to displace my motion to take up the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not by unanimous consent. The paper has now come.

Mr. KELLY. While the paper is coming——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin now on the floor has asked the privilege to take up some measure.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It will take but a moment to consider my bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One thing at a time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont insists on one measure at a time. The letter will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 1, 1876.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 28th ultimo, inclosing a copy of H. R. No. 2260, entitled "An act for the sale of saline lands," and requesting from this Office "information whether it is desirable and proper that it pass."

In reply, I have to state that as was set forth in a late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, "the policy of the Government, since the acquisition of the Northwest Territory and the inauguration of our land system, to reserve salt springs has been uniform" Further, it has been a policy generally acted upon in admitting States containing public lands to make a grant to the State of such salt springs as might be found therein, with a limit as to number, the grant embracing also contiguous sections and making up an aggregate area usually equal to two townships of public land. The first case in which this was done is that of Ohio; the last that of the proposed admission of Colorado, as provided for in the act of Congress of March 3, 1875. (Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 476.) In view of this policy, which may be adhered to in admitting new States, I suggest that the act mentioned be amended by adding at the close of the twenty-third line the following words, namely: Provided, That the foregoing enactments shall not apply to any State or Territory which has not had a grant of salines by act of Congress, nor to any State which may have had such a grant until either the grant has been fully satisfied or the right of selection thereunder has expired by efflux of time.

With such an amendment I think it desirable and proper that the bill pass.

Very respectfully,

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner.

Hon. W. R. BROWN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HARVEY. The amendment reported by the committee is the same as that recommended by the Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I think we ought to proceed with the Calendar of unobjected cases. There are a number of bills on the Calendar that many Senators are interested in. We ought to proceed regularly with the Calendar, and every Senator will then fare alike. There are a number of bills on the Calendar which ought to be passed; and I therefore move that the bill under consideration be laid aside in order to proceed regularly with bills on the Calendar.

Mr. WEST. The bill has not been taken up yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not pending. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2260) providing for the sale of saline lands. It provides that whenever it shall be made appear to the register and the receiver of any land office of the United States that any lands within their district are saline in character, it shall be the duty of the register and receiver, under the regulations of the General Land Office, to take testimony in reference to such lands to ascertain their true character, and to report the same to the General Land Office; and if, upon such testimony, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find that such lands are saline and incapable of being purchased under any of the laws of the United States relative to the public domain, then, and in such case, such lands shall be offered for sale by public auction at the local land office of the district in which the same shall be situated, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and sold to the highest bidder for cash, at a price not less than $1.25 per acre; and in case the lands fail to sell when so offered, the same shall be subject to private sale, at such land office, for cash, at a price not less than $1.25 per acre, in the same manner as other lands of the United States are sold.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the foregoing enactments shall not apply to any State or Territory which has not had a grant of salines by act of Congress, nor to any State which may have had such a grant, until either the grant has been fully satisfied, or the right of selection thereunder has expired by efflux of time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move to insert the following as an additional section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 2. That all executive proclamations relating to the sales of public lands shall be published in only one newspaper, the same to be printed and published in the State or Territory where the lands are situated, to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HARVEY. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend by adding at the end of the amendment reported from the committee the following:

But nothing in this act shall authorize the sale or conveyance of any title other than such as the United States has, and the patents issued shall be in the form of a release and quitclaim of all title of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. The Supreme Court, as I understand, have repeatedly determined that a patent is nothing but a quitclaim, and that it conveys merely the title of the United States; and therefore this amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, but let me suggest to my friend that although the Supreme Court has decided something such as he says, not that it is a mere release but that it conveys a title, yet if the United States does not possess the title, and the person to whom we give the patent fails to get a title, he can come back on us as he would on a private person in the nature of a warranty. That is the point. In relation to these saline lands where there are pre-emption settlers, State claims, and things of that kind, and we want to close them out, it appears to me that it would be the height of folly to give a patent under the decison of the General Land Office to a man who bought at a dollar and a quarter an acre at an auction sale when the land was already claimed by some one else, and we should have to pay the man we turn out or the man we gave the patent to, one or the other. We should lose a great deal more money than we should make by the operation, and my design is to protect the United States against double claims.

Mr. HARVEY. I think there is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of unobjected cases under the Anthony rule at the point where its consideration was last suspended.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. CRAGIN. Let me suggest to the Senator from West Virginia to apply the order to House bills alone.

Mr. DAVIS. It applies to unobjected cases. Anybody who desires to object can prevent action upon a bill.

Mr. CRAGIN. But it should apply only to unobjected House bills. There is no use in passing Senate bills now.

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, yes, it is; for we may have a very late session today.

Mr. LOGAN. There is just as much use in passing such bills as any others. I object to any proposition of that kind.

Mr. PADDOCK. Before the order is enforced, I should like to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to call up a little bill which has been considered before, Senate bill No. 705.

Mr. DAVIS. We shall reach all the bills in order. I object to anything out of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the Senator from West Virginia will not insist on his objection when I make the statement which I shall make. This is a claim by a postmaster in one of the small towns in my State for internal-revenue stamps which were lost by him under the old law. A bill has passed re-imbursing him for the loss of the postage-stamps, and the case has been carefully considered by two committees.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not object to this particular bill, but it will be reached in its order if we proceed with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia object to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the first case on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that it is due to the occasion to have these unobjected cases wait a few minutes; and I will therefore move to postpone the present and all prior orders and take up the constitutional amendment.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 18, noes 10, no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The roll-call having been concluded,

Mr. HAMLIN. On this question I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WINDOM. On all questions in reference to this amendment I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] If he were present I presume he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOWE. (After having voted in the affirmative.) On this question and all other political questions I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM,] in case there is a quorum without my vote. I wish to withdraw my vote unless it is necessary to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bontwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Paddock, Sargent, Spencer, and West—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Merrimon, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright—35.

So the motion was agreed to.

THE SCHOOL AMENDMENT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the pending question being on its passage.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this measure, I propose to state the principles involved in it, and to do so with great brevity.

There are only two principles involved in this article for the amendment of the Constitution, as passed by the House or as now amended by the Senate:

I. That there shall be no establishment of religion or prohibition of the free exercise thereof, and that there shall be no religious test as a qualification to office in the several States of the Union.

II. That the people shall not be taxed to promote the particular creed or tenets of any religious or anti-religious sect or denomination.

Let me remark that it is manifest that the people call for an amendment covering these two principles. This is manifest from the fact that the Representatives of the people of every religious and political persuasion, coming fresh from every section of the country, have by a vote of 166 out of 171 (only 5 negatives) declared that to be the will of the people.

Further, sir; on the passage by the House of this amendment, which undertook to affirm and to protect these two principles, and which the people and the press, and which I assume the House of Representatives thought was effective, great gratification was afforded to the whole country, not only because of their wish that these principles should be incorporated in our fundamental law, but also because this vexed question was to be removed from the arena of party politics. The great unanimity of the vote in the House shows how strong is the conviction of the Representatives of the people that this article of amendment to the Constitution is within the legitimate province of constitutional amendments, and is also in accord with the best policy and the soundest interests of the nation.

There is, sir, no room for two opinions on the two propositions that religion and conscience should be free, and that the people should not be taxed for sectarian purposes. The whole history of our country, from its origin to the present day, establishes and fortifies these positions. And nothing can be clearer than that these fundamental rights should be secured in a constitution ordained expressly to "establish justice" and to "secure the blessings of liberty."

Mr. President, while the two principles of religious freedom and exemption from taxation for sectarian purposes are plainly asserted in the article as it comes to us from the House, there are, unfortunately, in it defects and omissions that were it accepted without amendment by the States would render it nugatory and invalid. And the House should be gratified that a more careful scrutiny has discovered and corrected these defects, and should be ready to concur at once in the amendment of the Senate. I will point out these defects and their corrections.

I. The fifth article of the Constitution requires that Congress when proposing amendments to the Constitution shall state to the people in what manner the amendment shall be ratified; whether by the Legislatures of the States or by conventions in the States; the fifth article is as follows:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

This article amending the Constitution as it came from the House failed to propose either mode of ratifying this amendment. It did not propose that it should be ratified by the Legislatures or that it should be ratified by conventions. Had the Legislatures ratified it, not being in conformity with the requirements of the Constitution, it would have been invalid.

I call the attention of the Senate to the first alteration the House amendment makes in our Constitution. The first amendment to the Constitution, enacted shortly after the adoption of the Constitution, provides that—

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

This is an inhibition on Congress, and not on the States. The House article very properly extends the prohibition of the first amendment of the Constitution to the States. But the sixth article of the old Constitution also provides that—

> No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

This provision in such close harmony with the first amendment of the Constitution, the House article entirely omits, and it has very properly been inserted by the Senate and made applicable to the States.

Nobody can object to the Senate amendment on account of these two positions contained in it.

Thus the article as amended by the Senate prohibits the States, for the first time, from the establishment of religion, from prohibiting its free exercise, and from making any religious test a qualification to office.

II. Now, as to the second division of the proposed article amending the Constitution relative to the use of the public money for sectarian purposes, let me say that there are six different modes by which the people can be taxed for sectarian purposes.

1. By appropriating money raised for school purposes to sectarian schools.

2. By appropriating money from the general Treasury to sectarian schools.

3. By appropriating public money to sectarian institutions other than schools, as theological institutions, sectarian colleges, monasteries, and nunneries.

4. By devoting schools or other institutions established by public funds, when so established, to sectarian purposes.

5. By making appropriations of public money to religious denominations, or to promote their interests.

6. By appropriating public money to an institution to promote infidelity or for the benefit of an anti-religious sect.

The amendment of the Senate guards against all these abuses, while the article as it came from the House only prohibited the first, to wit, the appropriation of public money, and only public money raised for schools, to sectarian schools or dividing it among denominations.

The Senate amendment only carries out the principle and cures the defects of the article as it came from the House, but it does so effectually.

Why, sir, provide that money raised for schools shall not be appropriated to sectarian schools and leave it lawful to appropriate to sectarian schools from the general Treasury?

Why should we prohibit appropriations to sectarian schools, and yet permit schools established by the public money to be made sectarian?

Why prohibit appropriations to sectarian schools and permit money to be appropriated to sectarian institutions of another character? Why prohibit appropriations to religious sects and permit them to be made to infidel sects?

There is no reason. And any one who could honestly and sincerely vote for the article as it came from the House should rejoice in the opportunity of voting for the Senate amendment.

Not only does the article as it came from the House merely apply to the appropriation of money raised for schools to sectarian purposes, but it omits to give Congress any power by legislation to prevent or punish the violations of the article.

The usual section conferring power on Congress by legislation to enforce an amendment is in these words:

> Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

But as the committee were aware that some might argue that such a section would confer on Congress the power to interfere with public schools of the States, the committee, to avoid all possible objection, have—though they were satisfied that an article so phrased would not have the effect claimed—reported a section which gives no affirmative power to Congress, but simply provides that—

> Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to provide for the prevention and punishment of violations of this article.

This section takes the place of the strange provision of the article as it came from the House, which is in these words:

> This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in Congress.

Some have called this House article the Blaine amendment. No such provision was ever suggested by that distinguished man. He left the article to be enforced under the provisions of the original Constitution, which (article 1, section 9, placit 18) provides—

> That Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or office thereof; and this article is to be part of this Constitution.

This article when adopted, by the very terms of the fifth article of the Constitution, becomes, in the language of the Constitution, "to all intents and purposes a part of the Constitution." Now the provision as it comes from the House prevents the provision of the old Constitution which I have read from operating, for it declares that "nothing in this article shall be held to vest, enlarge, or diminish any legislative power in Congress." So that Congress would have no more power over the subject after the passage of the article than it had before it was passed, while the section introduced in the Senate amendment limits the power of the old Constitution by making a specific provision that Congress shall have power over this subject so far as to prevent and punish violations of this article.

Mr. President, it has been said that this amendment will prevent religious instruction in our prisons and other institutions supported by the public revenue. The clause which is relied upon to maintain that position is this:

And no such particular creed or tenets—

That is, no particular creed or tenets—of any religious or anti-religious sect or denomination shall be read or taught in any school or institution supported in whole or in part by such—revenue.

That is public—

Sir, does that prohibit religious instruction in prisons? Does it prevent religious instruction anywhere? If the visit to those who are sick and in prison is for the purpose of reading to them or of teaching them the particular creed or tenets of a religious or anti-religious sect or denomination, this article does interfere with it, and is designed to. Institutions supported by the money of all persuasions, even though they be prisons, are not to be made schools for teaching presbyterianism, or catholicism, unitarianism, or methodism, or infidelity, or atheism, and this article says so. But this article goes no further. There is nothing in it that prohibits religion as distinguished from the particular creed or tenets of religious and anti-religious sects and denominations being taught anywhere.

That pure and undefiled religion which appertains to the relationship and responsibility of man to God, and is readily distinguishable from the creeds of sects; that religion which permeates all our laws, which is recognized in every sentence against crime and immorality, which is invoked in every oath, which is reverentially deferred to every morning at that desk and on like occasions at the capitol of every State of the Union; that religion which is recognized by our Presidents and governors every year in the thanksgivings of the people, to which one-seventh part of the century which has just closed has been devoted; that religion which is our history, which is our unwritten as well as our written law, and which sustains the pillars of our liberty, is a very, very different thing from the particular creeds or tenets of either religionists or infidels. And this article places no unhallowed touch upon that religion. While we punish the violations of the oath or other moral obligation, it would be monstrous by affirmative legislation to restrict religious instruction. On this subject let me briefly quote from Story and Webster and Washington. Story says:

It is impossible for those who believe in the truth of Christianity as a divine revelation to doubt that it is the especial duty of government to foster and encourage it among all the citizens and subjects. This is a point wholly distinct from that of the right of private judgment in matters of religion and of the freedom of public worship according to the dictates of one's conscience.

Webster says:

If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble to the dust. But if we work on men's immortal minds; if we imbue them with high principles, with the just fear of God and of their fellow-men, we engrave on those tablets something which no time can efface, but which will brighten and brighten to all eternity.

Washington, in his Farewell Address, says:

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these purest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician equally with the pious man ought to respect and cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

Again, some one has said that he thought the Bible was a religious book. That remark arises, sir, from the provision in the article of amendment that sectarian creeds are to be excluded, but that this provision shall not be construed to exclude the Bible. Let me say that the saving clause in favor of the Bible is just, because it is a religious and not a sectarian book.

I have a few words more to say. There is one provision in the article to which I have not called attention. If the amendment to the Constitution is to answer any purpose, it is to exclude sectarian teaching from public schools, and this article says so. That expression might be perverted to effect the exclusion of the Bible, and the provision that it shall not be so construed was necessary to exclude that conclusion, so as to leave the Bible in its relations to the public schools and institution where it stands now.

It says that, while Shakespeare and Homer, Junius and Juvenal are not to be excluded, the Bible shall not, by reason of this article, be excluded. The Constitution of this country will never treat that book with disrespect. No party will ever have it tabooed. Who wants this article to exclude the Bible? Not the Catholics. It is the rule of their faith and practice and they want more, not less, religious instructions. They were the first in this country when establishing the government of Maryland to provide in her fundamental law for religious freedom. The Protestants do not want it excluded, because it is their rule of faith. The Israelite does not want it excluded, because it is the guide to his conscience. The atheist does not want it excluded, for he recognizes no superior; he is a law unto himself. It is a matter of indifference to him whether the Bible or Dabold's Arithmetic or Hale's History of the United States is used in the school, so far as his conscience is concerned.

But then we are told that there are different translations of the Bible. True, and yet there is but one Bible; that is the revelation from on High. There are various translations, and the excellence of this article is that it prevents the exclusion of any. Nothing in this article shall be construed to exclude either the Douay or the King James version. I am for the broadest toleration, but I would never agree to a constitutional amendment that would exclude from the schools the Bible. The Constitution should neither say that it should or should not be read in the schools. To attempt either would be to mingle politics with religion, which all would deprecate. Make the Bible a political ensign, and a party spirit such as clustered around the white and red rose would be aroused, in which perhaps there would be no more piety than there was in the spirit that animated Richard the Lion-hearted and his followers when they rallied around the cross, or Saladin and his Mohammedan hordes when they fought for the crescent.

Into such a conflict, having forsworn all idolatry, even though the Bible be on the shrine, I will not enter. "Put up thy sword, my kingdom is not of this world," is the injunction of our religion. But this article of the Constitution must not exclude it unless we come to the conclusion that the narrative of the creation, that the maxims of Solomon, that the logic of Paul, and those truths that have lighted up the future to unnumbered generations, are injurious to public morals!

Mr. President, where shall we go for public morals? If you must exclude the Bible you must banish all our literature or expurgate it, for it would be the height of folly to say that it is lawful to drink from the conduits which human hands had made, but not from the pure fountain. Where shall we go? To the Koran? To Confucius? To the Morman book of their lord? To the vain philosophy of the ancients? To mythological fables? No, sir; the people of this country want that book let alone. The Constitution must not touch it. It is to be forced upon no one and the Constitution is to make it unlawful to read it nowhere.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I may not be in my seat when the vote shall be taken on this question. I wish to announce now, as I would if I were in my seat, that I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.] I would vote for the amendment, and he would vote against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to give notice that the moment the Hawaiian treaty bill is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to take up this matter again and stick to it until it is completed, without the intervention of any other thing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate, being the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

Mr. LOGAN. I rise to call up the conference report which was objected to by the Senator from Kansas on Saturday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield for that purpose?

Mr. SARGENT. I understand that there will be debate on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be taken up subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the conference report to be a privileged question.

Mr. SARGENT. Not to set aside unfinished business.

Mr. LOGAN. Not to set aside unfinished business, but I think Senators might at least allow the conference report to be taken up.

Mr. SARGENT. I assure the Senator that I have every desire to submit to the disposition of the Senate. I have been the victim of circumstances for a day or two, it must be confessed, and I really beg Senators to allow me to get off my hands the matter which has vexed the Senate now for the last two or three days. If this report would not lead to extended debate so as to interfere with the unfinished business, I should not object to it. It now appears that I have been troubling the Senate two or three days with the Hawaiian treaty bill, when in fact a large amount of other business has been transacted and political speeches injected. If the report is going to lead to lengthy debate, as I am notified it will, I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know what Senators notified the Senator that it would lead to debate. I do not know who wishes to debate it.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, let him make his speech. It will not be long.

Mr. SARGENT. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I desire to say before the regular order is taken up, and I say it without criticism of the action of any Senator, that it is astounding to me that there has not been a proposition to take up a bill for the purpose of giving either pension or bounty, or now to give wooden-legged soldiers some kind of apparatus by which they may be aided, but what it is thrown aside by everything else; I should like to know why it is. There has not been a conference report offered in this Senate all this session by any Senator that has been laid aside except this one that I offered on Saturday. If there is any explanation of this, I should like to know what it is. If anything that pertains to a soldier in this country has become so obnoxious to the Senate that a little conference report on that subject has to be laid aside when every other conference report in the Senate has been considered at this session, I desire to let that be known. I only want to know why it is that nothing can come forward here that has any reference to matters of this kind but it must be laid aside.

As far as the Hawaiian treaty is concerned, it is up and will be acted on. My judgment is that the Senator will get his action just as soon by letting this conference report be agreed to now as he will by postponing it. That is my judgment, and I think the future will develop that fact.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from California will yield to this report, and then I will mutually join him to determine the other matter. It will only take two or three minutes.

Mr. SARGENT. If it would only take two or three minutes I would not object; but I am notified it will lead to debate. I ask the Senator from Kansas if I am correct?

Mr. INGALLS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SARGENT. Then the Senator from Missouri is mistaken in his premises. It will lead to a lengthy debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot see why it should.

Mr. SARGENT. That is my information. I merely state that to show that I am not unreasonable. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator from California has peculiar claims on the Senate, although he does not urge them himself. He has been for the last six weeks engaged entirely in conference committees, and has been unable to assert the business which is particularly in his charge. I think, therefore, we ought to have what we Quakers call a very great tenderness toward him. There are several bills that must be disposed of before we adjourn; but if we make up our minds to sit here until we finish them, we shall get through by midnight to-night probably. We must dispose of the Hawaiian treaty bill; we must dispose of the constitutional amendment; and our constituents ought to send us back if we do not pass some bill for counting the electoral vote. There is also some executive business that we must dispose of, or we shall be called back again.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say in answer to the Senator from Rhode Island that there is always some great business to be disposed of when I attempt to call up any bill of this character. That has been universally said, not only by the Senator from Rhode Island but by other Senators. I have been on three conference committees myself that have taken up a good deal of my time and I have worked as hard as any body else, but not so extensively as the Senator from California on appropriation bills. I have been on four conference committees, some connected with appropriation bills, such as the Indian bill, the Army bill, the West Point bill. These and other conferences that I have been on have taken up my time. It will take but a moment to have this conference report disposed of, and it is the only report that has been objected to this session.

Mr. SARGENT. I am willing to test the question. I am willing to yield for five minutes, which is five times the length the Senator says it will take. Is not that fair? But if a Senator rises and proceeds with a speech and states that he wishes to speak at length, of course that cannot be done in five minutes.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think anybody will want to speak at any great length on the question whether you shall allow one-legged soldiers wooden legs or not.

Mr. SARGENT. I am in favor of the wooden leg to the soldier; but I also want the business in my charge disposed of.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania; and

A bill (S. No. 1042) to provide for the publication of the report of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the resolution of the Senate authorizing the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House to correct an error in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 515) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery.

The message also announced that the House had passed a resolution suspending the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules for the remainder of the session.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say that we have no sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules to suspend.

THE HAWAIIAN TREATY.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned on Saturday night I was endeavoring to demonstrate that the acquisition of the Hawaiian Islands was not necessary to the military defense of the United States.

Having said as much as I desire to say upon that head, I come now to consider the second point, which is whether we shall ever acquire the Hawaiian Islands under this treaty. There is no express provision in the treaty for their acquisition. We will have no more rights in those islands than any other nation, except that we will have occupation of certain ports for the term of seven years, if this treaty should go into effect. There is an inhibition upon the King of those islands to lease any port in them, but there is no inhibition upon him to sell them, and the possession of them therefore can pass beyond the reach of the United States at any time when the King sees fit to sell them. But, sir, that is not the strong reason why I think we shall never acquire those islands. The advocates of this bill and of this treaty place the prospect of their acquisition upon the ground that depopulation is going on in the Islands, and they cite us to the statistics to show us that that depopulation has been continued at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum, until the population now is about forty thousand natives. At the time those islands were discovered by Captain Cook, near a century ago, the population, according to his estimate, was about four hundred thousand, and that number has decreased to 10 per cent. Upon that fact is built the theory that this decrease will continue until the population will not be enough to sustain a government, and that they will naturally fall into the lap of the United States, because their inclination is toward this Government.

I desire to ask the Senator from California and the Senator from Oregon if they have considered this proposition in the light of mathematics. We are to acquire these islands by the depletion of the population. There is no other theory upon which a hope is based that we shall ever be able to acquire them. Now I desire to know whether they have considered how long, in the first place, it will take that population to die out at the rate of decrease that has been going on according to the census reports. If my friends will take the trouble to make the calculation, they will find that before the 40,000 native population now upon the islands shall be reduced down to 30,000, more than 14 years will have elapsed. That is calculating at a decrease of 2 per cent. per annum, whereas the actual decrease is about $1\frac{45}{100}$ per cent. But allowing 2 per cent. decrease, the native population upon the islands will not reach 30,000 within the period of fourteen years, which is double the time of the continuance of this treaty.

Now, then, if you will continue your calculations from 30,000 down, supposing there is no increase of foreign population meantime, you will find that more than fifty years must elapse before the population will be brought down to a number that will not be self-sustaining, and before you reach a point of depopulation at which there can be reasonably entertained a hope by the American people that they can acquire these islands either by annexation or by the voluntary gift of the inhabitants. This fact is worthy of the consideration of the American people. We are endeavoring to acquire these islands for strategic purposes, not for agriculture, not for commerce, except as they are a resting-point in the Pacific Ocean; and yet, according to this calculation we must wait and linger for fifty years before we can get them.

But, Mr. President, the next question in order is, will those islands be depopulated? Will this decrease go on? Will the native population of the islands die out? Upon that point it may be interesting to the Senate and to the country to consider the fact that the diseases which have produced the depopulation of the islands are diminishing. The sanitary system that has been adopted on the islands has decreased these diseases until we are told now that the native population is diminishing very slowly.

But that is not all. That population will not diminish, because there is an element being introduced into the islands that is arresting the debility that seems to pertain to the constitutions of the native inhabitants. The Chinese are taking possession of the Hawaiian Islands; they are rapidly increasing, and we know that there is not a more prolific race and probably a more healthy race, considering their sanitary system, on the face of the globe. The immense population of their kingdom shows that they are a prolific and a healthy people. Upon this point I beg to call the attention of the Senate to an authority that has been quoted on this floor, that has been used by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and which commands consideration and very high respect from the intelligence of the author and from the opportunities which he had for making his observations, because he visited all these Islands. On the question of whether there will be a depopulation, let us hear what Mr. Nordhoff says in his work on Northern California, Oregon and the Sandwich Islands, on page 74:

Of the foreigners the Chinese are the most numerous, outnumbering all the other foreign nationalities together except the Americans. Chinese have been brought over here as cooly laborers on the plantations. They readily intermarry with the native women and these unions are usually fruitful of healthy and bright children. It is said that the Chinese insist upon taking better care of their children than the native women, uninstructed, usually give them, and that therefore the Chinese half-caste families are more thrifty than those of the pure-blooded Hawaiians.

So we see that there is being introduced into these islands a foreign element, a prolific, industrious, healthy race, and that by the intermarriage of that race with the natives of these islands there is being produced, in the language of Mr. Nordhoff, "a fruitful and healthy progeny."

Now, sir, is it probable that, with an increase of the Chinese population in those islands, there will be a decrease of the native population from this time forth? It is impossible, because all authorities concur in the statement that there is not a healthier climate on the face of the globe than that of the Hawaiian Islands.

But, again, on page 76 Mr. Nordhoff says:

In fact, they have died out pretty fast, though there is reason to believe that the mortality rate has largely decreased in the last three years—

I invite the attention of my friend from Oregon to this statement—and careful observers believe even that in the last year there has been an actual increase rather than a decrease in the native and half-caste population.

He then gives the following statistics:

In 1832 the islands had a population of 130,315 souls; in 1836 there were but 108,579; in 1840, only 84,165, of whom 1,962 were foreigners; in 1850, 69,800, of whom 3,216 were foreigners; and in 1860, 62,959, of whom 4,194 were foreigners. The native population has decreased over 60 per cent. in forty years.

That is a decrease, as I stated a while ago, of less than 2 per cent. per annum.

In the same period the foreigners have increased very slowly, until there are now in all 5,366 foreigners and persons born here, but of foreign parentage, on the islands.

This authority shows two facts. The first is, that there is no decrease going on in the native population on those islands, but that in the last year there has been an actual increase. But the other fact is much more significant, and it is, that the Chinese and American population on the islands is increasing. You will observe from the authority I quoted that in 1840 there were only 1,962 foreigners: in 1850 there were 3,216; in 1860, 4,194; and in 1874, when this book was written, there were over five thousand foreigners on the islands.

But now, Mr. President, under what circumstances has this increase in population taken place? Under what disadvantages has it occurred? With the exception of the salubrity of the climate and the fertility of the soil, there has not been a single advantage in favor of the increase of population. Labor is scarce and is unskilled. The rate of interest on money used for the production of rice and sugar is 12 per cent. per annum, and under all these disadvantages the population has increased, and increased for agricultural purposes.

As to the agricultural difficulties under which these islands have been laboring for some time, I read from page 59 of Mr. Nordhoff's book:

But I am persuaded that, as there are planters now who are prosperous and contented and who make handsome returns even with the sugar duty against them, so, if that were removed, there would be planters who would continue their regular and slow march toward bankruptcy, and for whom the remitted duty would be but a temporary respite, while it would deprive them of a cheap and easy way to account for their failure. Wherever on the islands I found a planter living on his own plantation, managing it himself, and out of debt, I found him making money, even with low prices for his sugar and even if the plantation itself was not favorably placed; not only this, but I found plantations yielding steady and sufficient profits under judicious management which in previous hands became bankrupt. But, on the other hand, where I found a plantation heavily encumbered with debt and managed by a superintendent, the owner living elsewhere, I heard usually, though not always, complaints of hard times. If a sugar planter has his land and machinery heavily mortgaged at 10 or 12 per cent. interest; if he must, moreover, borrow money on his crop in the field to enable him to turn that into sugar; if then he sends the product to an agent in Honolulu, who charges him 5 per cent. for shipping it to San Francisco; and if in San Francisco another agent charges him 5 per cent. more on the gross returns, including freight and duty, for selling it; if, besides all this, the planter buys his supplies on credit, and is charged 1 per cent. a month on these, compounded every three months until it is paid, and pays almost as much freight on his sugar from the plantation to Honolulu as from there to its final market—it is highly probable that he will, in course of time, fail.

There are not many legitimate enterprises in the world which would bear such charges and leave a profit to the manager. But it is on this system that the planting of sugar has been, to a large extent, carried on for years in the islands. Under it a good deal of money has been made, but not by the planters.

Thus we see that the cultivation of sugar upon the Hawaiian Islands is subject to the following embarrassments: First, a scarcity of labor; second, a high rate of interest; third, a high rate of freight to get their sugar; and, fourth, an exorbitant commission. The planter pays 5 per cent. to his home agent and 5 per cent. to his foreign agent in the market where his produce is to be sold. Then if they buy upon a credit, they pay at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, and the interest at the end of three months is compounded against them; so that the production of sugar in those islands is weighed down by difficulties that do not exist in any other agricultural district of which I have ever read, and I invite the Senators from Oregon and California to cite a parallel. And yet, sir, with all these difficulties, as I have said, not only is the foreign population of the islands increasing, not only is the depopulation of the half-castes and natives diminishing, but the cultivation of sugar under all these embarrassments is profitable.

Mr. President, if under all these embarrassments the sugar-planters of the Hawaiian Islands can produce sugar with profit, what will be the case under the stimulus that will be given to that production by the passage of this bill? I have said that they are making a profit, and I propose upon that point to give the statistics:

In 1860 they exported 1,444,271 pounds of sugar; in 1864, 10,414,441 pounds; in 1868, 18,312,926 pounds; and in 1871, 21,760,[illegible]3 pounds of sugar.

And in 1875, without going thr[illegible]ugh the other years, they exported 25,082,182 pounds. So the expo[illegible]t of sugar from those islands within twenty-five years has increased about 2,000 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is mistaken in that. I see it stated in the majority report of the House committee, which is, according to my understanding of the other figures and the whole information, that the Pacific States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, imported 17,888,000 pounds.

Mr. NORWOOD. That is correct, but the Senator has misapprehended my point. I am not speaking of what they exported to the United States; I am speaking of their total exports.

Now, Mr. President, I put the question to the Senate, if that be so, what will be the increase of the production in these islands under the hot-bed process that this treaty bill will apply? Considering what they have accomplished without the advantages which will accrue after this bill has passed, what limit can be placed to the production of these islands? There is but one limit, and that is the area of the islands. Within the seven years that this treaty will exist, with the thrift of our people, with their mechanical arts, with their superior husbandry, with their enlarged industries, with a low rate of interest, I say that the limit of the production of sugar and rice upon the islands will only be found in the extent of territory upon which they can be cultivated.

It is a noticeable fact that when this bill was under consideration by the Committee on Foreign Relations the minister who represents that foreign government at Washington was before the committee, and the main question that agitated the minds of the committee at that time was as to the capacity of those islands to produce sugar and rice. Upon that question there was no definite information, and the honorable minister who had lived in Honolulu for a quarter of a century, as he stated, was called upon not only by those who were representing the opposite side before the committee but by members of the committee to give information as to the quantity of land on the islands that could be made available for the production of rice and sugar, and the noticeable fact that I have made reference to is that that minister was unable to come within 100,000 or even 200,000 of the correct number of acres. He knew nothing upon the subject whatever. He was simply a know-nothing. They could get nothing out of him except that it would be a great advantage to the United States that annexation should take place. And right here I would remark in passing that it is the most singular fact connected with any treaty that I have ever heard of, that the king of the country who is seeking to negotiate the treaty should have a minister at the seat of the foreign government urging the passage of a bill to carry the treaty into effect upon the ground that the ultimate result would be to destroy the kingdom which he represents.

It requires great credulity to come to the conclusion that King Kalakaua and his minister plenipotentiary—and, I might say, in some respects "extraordinary"—entertain the idea that the result of this treaty will be the destruction of his kingdom. On the contrary, they desire the enactment of this law and the enforcement of this treaty for their pecuniary advantage, and they will reap all the benefits and the United States will be the loser.

Upon this point I desire to read from the Commercial Relations of the United States and Foreign Nations, page 707, to show what these people desire and are working for. The report that I now read from is authentic and official.

What we lack are not land and quality of soil, but population and a free market to encourage immigration and products.

Do they expect that their islands will be so far depopulated that they will naturally fall into the hands of the United States? Are they looking to that result? What they want is population and a free market. They do not lack land; they do not lack fertility of soil, but they do lack population and a free market, and the United States Government, with a liberality unsurpassed in the history of any Government, now proposes to give them exactly what they want.

Mr. President, is it a reasonable hope on the part of the American people that when the population of these islands shall increase and they become wealthy and proud they will then propose to annex themselves to the United States or that they will be willing to surrender their government? Does anybody suppose that King Kalakaua after awhile will be wandering on those bald mountains, monarch of all he surveys, without a subject and offering his crown and scepter to any-one that will accept it? No, sir; King Kalakaua has far more king-craft than the United States Government. He sees what his necessities are and he sees exactly what are the appliances to be brought to bear in order to meet them. And with a free market for his sugar and rice, with the abundance of land which he has to cultivate, with the fertility of that soil, he knows that population will flow in upon him and that it will not be long before the depopulation will be checked and the increase of population will be vast.

But is there any likelihood that he would ever propose to be annexed to the United States? On that subject let me refer again to Mr. Nordhoff. Mr. Nordhoff considers the question as to whether there is any probability of this king surrendering his scepter; and as to whether even his subjects will ever consent that it shall be done. He says there is no desire on the part of the inhabitants to be annexed to the United States; even the half-caste population and the Chinese in their poverty and squalor are unwilling to be annexed to the United States. But when we shall give them the means to have wealth, and an annual tribute of from half a million to a million and a half of dollars in duties, which they would otherwise pay, we will defeat the purpose we have in view, and make it, by our own act, utterly impossible that we shall acquire these islands except by force of arms.

Now I call attention to the fact that the estimated area of sugar-cane lands on these islands is 100,000 acres. There are thirty-two sugar plantations now under cultivation. Those thirty-two plantations embrace less than ten thousand acres. I make a liberal estimate; and those plantations produce now about twenty-five million pounds of sugar, to say nothing of the molasses. The Commercial Relations, which I hold in my hand, says:

This group is capable of sustaining a population of at least half a million souls, and of producing for export a hundred million pounds of sugar, and fifty million pounds of rice; an equal amount of manila and ramie-hemp, and other products.

The product of an acre in those islands, we are told by several authorities, on the average is two and one-half tons of sugar; that six tons of sugar can be raised, and in one instance upon seven acres of land fifty tons of sugar were raised. In this country an average crop of sugar per acre is one ton.

Mr. WEST. That is a very liberal average.

Mr. NORWOOD. I put it in order to show that upon these islands they can produce two and a half times as much as we can on an average yield, and that when they bring their 100,000 acres of land into cultivation they will produce 400,000,000 tons of sugar.

The next proposition is, suppose that we acquire these islands, what will they cost the United States? I have shown that even if the population were so diminished that we can have the hope of acquiring the islands, it will take fifty years. At the beginning of this treaty we will surrender a half million of duties annually on rice and sugar, and it is but reasonable to assume that the increased production and consequent increased importation into the United States will soon swell our loss to between one and two millions annually. So that at the end of fifty years the cost to the Government of the United States would be between fifty and a hundred millions of dollars. Putting it at $1,000,000 a year, it is $50,000,000; putting it at $2,000,000 a year, which would be a reasonable allowance upon the production of these islands, we should pay $100,000,000.

Mr. DAVIS. While the Senator is on that point I should like to have him state what amount of revenue he thinks would be lost by the treaty. I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. NORWOOD. I will repeat, although I have stated it and so has the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST.]

Mr. DAVIS. I heard the statement of the Senator from Louisiana, and I want to see whether the two statements agree.

Mr. NORWOOD. The amount of revenue that is derived by the imports of the Hawaiian Islands is about half a million dollars. Am I correct?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORWOOD. And the amount of trade, I will state, as I am now passing on that subject, that the United States Government has with those islands upon which we make a profit, I mean the gross trade, is about $800,000, so that we are now paying five-eighths of the amount of trade that we have for the privilege of this treaty.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. I wish the Senator to allow me to contribute somewhat to the reply which the Senator from West Virginia desired in regard to the commerce that is to accrue to this country if this treaty is ratified. I read from an official presentation of this case as made by the commissioners of the Sandwich Islands as an inducement for the ratification of this treaty:

The total value of articles imported into the Hawaiian Islands, included in the treaty of 1866, which are proposed to be admitted into the Hawaiian ports free of duty, amounted to $1,003,424.86, of which $483,711.76 came from the United States, and $519,713.10 came from other countries; but under such a treaty—with its advantages favoring American productions, most, if not all, would come from the United States.

Meaning the treaty under consideration—

In other words, that we may expect to get most, if not all, of a trade of $500,000.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. President, when I was interrupted by my friend from West Virginia I was showing that we are endangering the interest of a helpless people. There are about a half million of colored people in the State of Georgia, and yet their aggregate wealth is only about $7,000,000.

But, Mr. President, suppose we should acquire the islands, what will they be when we get them? Upon this head the inconsistency of the Senator from California strikes me as remarkable. He made a long and able argument here not long ago to satisfy the American people that the importation of the cooly labor upon the Pacific coast and the immigration of Chinese should be stopped. The Americans on the Pacific slope are driving the Chinese away. But where do we find them when they leave California? Have they gone back to China? No, sir. They have lodged just where we should naturally expect them to drift—upon the Hawaiian Islands—and lodged there because the production of sugar and the production of rice have invited them.

Now, suppose that the treaty be carried into effect, and suppose—which I never believe will occur—that we shall acquire these islands, what do we get? Do we get American population? Do we get the thrifty and hardy sons of New England, or of the South, or the West? On the contrary, we shall acquire the native population of the Hawaiian Islands, and the cooly population that would be introduced there as laborers, and the half-breeds that will be produced by the intermarriage of these two classes of people; and who will be the capitalists, the people who will be the masters of the islands? They will be Americans, it is true; but their proportion to the laboring population on those islands will not be as 1 to 50. The capital will be carried there by them, the profits will be reaped by them, and all the interests upon those islands will be owned by them; but the people will be but a cooly colony.

The honorable Senator from California is very eager in his endeavors to have this bill pass; but his endeavors are tending to the consummation of a result which I dare say he does not desire. He does not want even by immigration any more Chinese in the United States. He certainly would not advocate the admission of a cooly colony as one of the United States; and yet we can acquire no benefits from it further than we have now in our commercial relations or had under the treaty existing before this treaty was negotiated, unless we do annex them to our Government.

Mr. President, I have shown that the Government of the United States in an economical point of view would not be benefited by the passage of this bill. I have shown, I think, that the acquisition of these islands is of no very great importance to our Government in a military point of view. The Government of the United States, therefore, I say is in no sense interested in this treaty. The people of the United States will not be benefited by it. On the contrary we are paying out a vast amount of revenue in grasping after a shadow.

But, sir, there are some who will be benefited by the passage of this bill, but the number is very small. They are a few capitalists who reside in Boston and New York and San Francisco. The class in Boston and New York are those who own the sugar plantations upon the islands. I have the statistics here which I will quote. There are upon the islands in operation now thirty-two sugar plantations, and of that number twenty-five are owned by American citizens. There are in San Francisco a few sugar refiners who are instigating this treaty for their own advantage.

With the duty off, they can make a profit upon their sugars that cannot be thought of by the producers of sugar in the United States, and they can finally run the sugars that are produced in Louisiana and other points in the United States out of the market. This will appear by a very easy calculation. It is said by our friends that the sugar will never pass beyond the Pacific coast; that it will never reach the Atlantic coast. This is a mistake. At the present time sugar, molasses, and rice are imported from the Hawaiian Islands into the Atlantic ports. In one notable instance a small shipment of molasses came around the Cape, went to New York, thence to New Orleans, and was sold at a profit. Over sixty-seven thousand pounds of rice within a short time were imported from those islands into the Atlantic ports.

I mention these facts simply to show that the assumption that the rice and sugar from the Hawaiian Islands will never interfere with the rice and sugar produced on the Atlantic Coast is entirely without foundation. With a duty of two and one-half cents on rice and an average duty of about three cents upon sugar and of five cents a gallon upon molasses, those articles have already been imported and sold at a profit in our Atlantic ports.

The sugar and rice planters in Hawaii and the refiners in California will be benefited by this treaty. There are no other persons who are interested in it. Are the people of California interested in this bill? If you will except the sugar refiners, they are not. And why do I say so? The cost of transporting sugar from the Atlantic States and California is about equal to the duty upon sugar imported into the United States, so that when the producer of sugar comes from Honolulu with his cargo to San Francisco and puts it upon the market for sale the only competition he will have will be the sugars that have been introduced from other countries subject to duty or sugars that may be shipped from the Atlantic coast over the continent with the freight added, so that he will be enabled to command his own price, which cannot be affected except by the price of other sugars with the duty or the freight added.

A word as to who will be injured by carrying this treaty into effect; and this is the saddest part of this question. There is a class of people who will be injured by it, and that class I in part represent. The Senator from California hoped that this question would not be considered in a sectional light. I do not propose to treat it in a sectional light at all; but I do propose to say a few words in reference to a class of people who live mainly in but one section of this country, which class of people are more interested in the defeat of this bill and the non-fulfillment of this treaty than all the United States besides, because upon the duty that now is imposed upon sugar and rice their livelihood depends. The production of rice in the South has gone on increasing, until its production from 1865 to 1875 has increased, in round numbers, from 11,000,000 pounds to 82,000,000 pounds? Why has that increase taken place? Simply because two and a half cents a pound duty was imposed upon rice, and but for that there is not a single rice plantation in the whole of the South that would not have been abandoned at the close of the war. Rice-planters have been here before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and on a former occasion before the Committee on Finance, and they have shown that their profits lie within the duty that is imposed on rice. The price of rice from eleven and a half cents in 1865 has fallen to five and a half cents. Take two and a half cents from five and a half cents and you reduce the price of rice below the cost of production. It cannot be produced at three cents a pound.

I hold in my hand a memorial that was laid before the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is signed by delegations from South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana, and sets forth the merits of this question. I call attention to these facts, that dependent upon the production of rice and sugar in South Carolina, Georgia, and Louisiana, there are over two hundred and fifty thousand people, and of that number the whites are so small a proportion that they are not worth considering in the estimate. There is invested in the State of Louisiana a total of $80,000,000 employed in producing sugar and rice. If this treaty is carried into effect, to put the question in the simplest form to prevent all exaggeration, the interest of these people will be hazarded by the Government of the United States. I go further and say that we are not only periling the interests of those people, but I have shown you that the stimulus of those products in these islands will be such that those products will be brought in competition with the sugar and rice produced in the United States, and will finally bear down the prices of those products until they will go below the cost of production; and when that occurs the cultivation of sugar and rice in the United States must be abandoned. My honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] smiles at the idea of the production of rice and sugar in this country ever being abandoned.

Mr. EATON. No; but that it should be abandoned owing to the production in the Sandwich Islands.

Mr. NORWOOD. If my honorable friend had done me the honor to listen to the statistics which I have given, showing how large an amount of rice and sugar can be produced in those islands, he would not smile. He would have observed that rice already has been imported into this country from those islands with a duty of two and a half cents a pound on it and sold at a profit, and he would have observed that the production of sugar in those islands can be brought to such a point, as appears from the statistics of Mr. Pierce, who was the minister to Hawaii, that they can export conveniently 100,000,000 pounds of sugar.

I was speaking of the injury that would be sustained by the colored people of the South. I appeal to those who claim to have been humane to them that they shall continue their humanity, to those who have been philanthropic to the colored people to continue their philanthropy. They have in their wisdom made them citizens of the United States. They have taken them from a condition of mental darkness, that no other people on this continent has ever been under, and have placed them on a common platform with all other American citizens. I ask that those who have done this work shall continue in what they consider their good work; that they shall not now, after lifting these people up by one hand, strike them down with the other; that they shall not when they ask them for bread give them a stone; but that they shall continue to sustain them, to maintain them, and prevent them from retrograding into barbarism. Suppose that capital and labor within the Southern States should be divorced, and the interest of one should be adverse to the interest of the other. Then my honorable friend from Connecticut says there would be anarchy, and he is correct. It would be different from the condition of affairs in any other section of the Union, and why? Because the races are nearly equally divided; one is black and the other is white. The black is the laborer and the white is the capitalist. To-day they are mutually dependent, but if to-morrow you should divide them and say that capital and labor are no longer dependent upon each other in these States, that the white man has no further interest in the black man than that dictated by humanity, you would organize anarchy; and you, Mr. President, [Mr. SPENCER in the chair,] know as well as I do that such would be the result. There is no greater calamity that can befall a people than that capital and labor should be antagonized. When that day shall come the governments in ten States in this Union will return to their original elements, and you will have to reconstruct, and reconstruct when you will have a discordant element that no power can control. You never can unite in close bonds of sympathy two races as diverse as the white and the black when you separate their mutual interests. With the white race it is different; with the Mongolian race it might be different; but between those races which are the antipodes of the human family such can never be the result. Therefore I appeal to those who have been philanthropic to this race not now to turn their backs upon them. What kind of humanity is that which will deny sustenance to this people? What kind of philanthropy is that which will now turn its back upon them and legislate for the heathens in the Pacific Ocean? What kind of statesmanship is that which will strike down two of the great industrial interests of this country, rice and sugar, for the purpose of stimulating them in the far-off islands of the sea?

I say that there is not only imminent danger of your destroying the rice and the sugar interests of the South and turning loose three hundred thousand blacks to run as savages through the wilderness and of desolating a rich and a fruitful tract of country which has hitherto bloomed and blossomed under cultivation by the black race managed by the white race. but that you will reduce that population to a condition of starvation; for when the white man of the South shall withdraw his helping hand from the black man, he will be helpless and will go back to a state of barbarism.

Mr. President, if it was only a conjecture and a reasonable conjecture made to the mind of this Senate that it would imperil the interest of this people, it should give them pause. This Hawaiian treaty is a matter of no great consideration. I have shown that but few people are interested in it. I have shown that the Government will lose revenue by it annually. I have shown that there is no prospect of ever acquiring those islands and if we should that it will be at the end of fifty years, long after all who are within the sound of my voice will be sleeping beneath the sod. I have shown that instead of acquiring them we are now setting upon foot a process by which we will make it impossible that we shall ever acquire them, because we are now building up a kingdom, that otherwise would perish. We are stimulating a kingdom, whereas, if we hold our hands off, the probability is that, unless immigration shall increase there without this stimulus, that population would gradually die away. and then they might make application to become a sister-republic instead of continuing as a kingdom. I have shown these things; and I say that the bare suggestion that we may destroy the interests of the black race should make us recede. What greater cruelty can be practiced by this Congress than to impose upon the ignorant colored men of this country? When I say impose upon them I do not mean hoodwinking them, deceiving them, cheating them; but I mean that imposition which carries them to the earth beneath a weight which they cannot bear. Yet those who have set them upon their feet propose now to strike them to the earth again and put them in a far worse condition than they were in before. Then they had masters; those masters had an interest in them; they cared for them; they healed them when they were sick and ministered to their wants. They did it not only from interest, but humanity; but if you break the bond of interest that holds the white and the black together in the South, the end will be want first and destruction after to the blacks.

Wisdom suggests that we should foster our own people rather than the heathen in the isles of the sea. Enlightened statesmanship looks first to home, and then looks abroad. Philanthropy can do no better work than to care for the heathen at its own door; and that political economy is the best which provides for the domestic general welfare.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 1007) concerning the employment of Indian scouts.

The message also announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 84) extending the time for the redemption of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal;

An act (S. No. 852) for the relief of Elisha E. Rice;

An act (S. No. 1021) allowing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to carry the mails in their new iron steamships; and

An act (S. No. 1036) to provide for the printing and distribution of the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the years 1874 and 1875.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from California to yield to me to present a conference report.

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly, if it does not displace the regular order.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the report of the conference committee on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no need to read it at this present moment. Let it be read when we act upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire the present consideration of the report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish it read at this moment, until we consider it. I do not ask it to go over until to-morrow, but that it be laid aside for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie on the table for the present.

SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH JOINT RULES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from California to allow to be taken up, as a matter of courtesy to the House, a resolution the House has sent here suspending, as they supposed, the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules?

Mr. SARGENT. If it will not lead to debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It should not lead to debate. If it does, we can lay it over.

Mr. SARGENT. I will yield subject to a call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules be suspended for the remainder of the session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that subject I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of Representatives presented this day in the following words: "Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules be suspended for the remainder of the session," be respectfully returned to the House of Representatives, with the statement that as the House of Representatives has not notified the Senate of the adoption of joint rules for this present session, as proposed by the resolution of the Senate of the 20th day of January last and transmitted to the House of Representatives on the 22d day of the same month, there are no joint rules in force.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE HAWAIIAN TREATY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I should deem myself wanting in my duty if I consumed at this late hour any considerable time of the Senate in debating the question now under consideration; but I should consider myself more wanting if I were to allow the measure to pass in silence. The Senator from California seems to have taken the charge of this bill, and the Committee on Foreign Relations appear to have abdicated all control over it. I regret that this seems to indicate that there is a greater local interest than general interest in the bill. It was argued by the Senator from California that there was something of honor involved on the part of the Senate in passing the bill at the present time. I hold that the Senate is as independent of the Executive as it is of the House, and in this bill, where it was especially provided in the treaty from which it originated or which was the cause of this bill, that the treaty should not go into operation until the laws necessary to carry it into effect should be passed by Congress, it is clear that the Senate transcend nothing beyond their ordinary duty in giving this bill a thorough scrutiny, and may pass or reject it solely. I am quite ready to concede that a body that passed upon a treaty by a two-thirds majority is quite capable of passing the bill carrying it into effect by a majority; but so far as our powers or duties are concerned we are as free to pass upon the merits of this question now as we were originally; as free as Adam when he left Paradise with all the world before him where to choose.

I only desire to consider this question in relation to its national and political aspects for a moment, not in its local bearing, but to ascertain whether it is in harmony with American institutions or not. I say for one that it is wholly un-American. It is in conformity with the traditions of monarchy, and not in harmony with the idea of a republican form of government. Under monarchical forms of government it is true that the executive holds almost omnipotent power in relation to treaties, and often in relation even to taxation; but not so under a republican form of government, and especially not so in relation to this bill. Our Constitution provides that all revenue bills shall originate in the House of Representatives. Where did this bill really originate? Clearly it originated in the State Department, where the treaty was made, and not in the House of Representatives. It is therefore, in my judgment, not only a plain violation of the spirit of the Constitution, but it is of the most vicious character; for if the Executive and the Senate may interfere and make a treaty with so unimportant a kingdom as the Hawaiian Islands, we may make it with all other powers. If we may make it with Hawaii in relation to sugar and rice, why not with Norway in relation to iron, or with Switzerland or Italy in relation to silks? There is no stopping-place when you once enter upon this policy; therefore I say it is a policy clearly un-American and anti-republican.

Then, in addition to that view, when we come to look at its financial aspect, in its effects upon the country, taking a broad view of it, I hold that it is clearly our duty not to do anything that would greatly injure the sugar-producing interests of this country. It is an article that we consume so very largely and which we pay for mainly in coin to other countries, that by every possible means we ought to encourage the growth of both the cane sugar and of beet sugar; but this is a measure which is calculated to act disastrously upon both of those interests. It may be asked how. I assert that the effect will be precisely the same that it would be if the same amount of sugar should be smuggled free of duty into the country. What would be the effect of smuggling 25,000,000 pounds of sugar into this country? We all know that it would operate to the great injury of all those who are engaged in the business of importing sugar into this country. Take the port of Portland; and I am sorry not to see my friend, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] in his seat. The port of Portland, Maine, has been built up by the molasses and sugar trade of the West India Islands, and its present prosperity largely depends upon that interest. How will his constituents like it to have that interest seriously embarrassed, as it will be, by this measure? We know that at the present time Cuba has raised or is about to raise her export duties upon sugar. Of course that increases the profits upon the importation of Hawaiian sugar, and if it operates upon the interests of sugar importers on the Atlantic coast as the large frauds in the smuggling of silks a year or two since operated in New York, it will confuse and destroy the profits of the whole year's business. While I am disposed to hold treason as a great crime, yet I am the last man who would strike down the national interests of our southern brethren—prosperity makes good citizens—and I regard this as a measure affecting great and vital interests of the South. Instead of doing anything to discourage the growth of sugar and of rice in the Southern States we ought by every possible means with any, even ordinary, statesmanship to increase the products, both as a profit to that community and to prevent the large annual exportation of coin for the payment of our imports of foreign sugar and rice.

This measure will not be likely to operate much to the benefit, as my friend from California thinks, of California. The cost of sugar to consumers will be diminished but very little. There are but a small number there engaged in sugar refineries, and they are the only class of people who will be largely benefited by it. If they have not already made bargains with the sugar producers of Hawaii by which they are to share some portions of the profits which will be derived from the entrance of the sugars free of duty, their profits will not be very large, and in the end the Hawaiian sugars will rise in grade and no longer need much refining. There are none of the sugar plantations which are owned by Hawaiians. They are all owned by Americans and other foreigners. If this was to benefit the people of Hawaii we might look upon it with more tolerance, but the people of Hawaii are unwilling to labor; they love idleness and dissipation, and they have already by the action of their Legislative Assembly sent out agents in order to obtain Chinese cooly laborers to supply their expected wants. I find in a Hawaiian paper which is upon my desk that they appropriated in the Legislative Assembly $5,000 to send to China for Chinese laborers, and the act of the agent was criticised in their legislative halls because instead of going to China for these coolies he went to San Francisco, and obtained four hundred of them. This shows how little interest the people of Hawaii have in this matter.

When this treaty was under consideration it was represented that it would cost the Government of the United States in its Treasury Department but $370,000. I want to show that, basing the estimate upon the returns of last year, ending December 31, 1875, the loss would have been $530,000. For the last four months the loss would have been $200,090.04, and showing that even for the present year it will be over $600,000. There is no one who is acquainted at all with the facts who does not estimate that this product will not only be largely increased, but whatever they have heretofore sent to other countries or consumed themselves will be at once sent here; because instead of consuming their own sugar they will import sugars from abroad in order to obtain the profit of duties that are relinquished upon whatever they may send here, where they will obtain the same prices received on duty-paid sugars.

In addition, no one can soberly deny but what the amount of the sugar products and rice products in Hawaii may be largely increased. Unquestionably they can be very largely increased, at least to four times their present amount, which would amount to something like a loss of two million and a half dollars of revenue annually. We are to pay this to a sugar-producing country where our trade is now in a more healthy state than with any other sugar-producing country in the world. It is a little singular that in selecting this country with which to make a reciprocity treaty in relation to sugars we should have selected the very place in all the world where our trade is in a healthy condition. Instead of going to some other country to which we export but a small amount in comparison with the amount of our importations, we go to Hawaii, where the only balance that we really paid last year in coin was $40,000 of silver.

It seems to me very extraordinary that this should have been done. We are not to gain anything in trade with Hawaii, as we already nearly monopolize it. The only increase of their population in consequence of this treaty will be the increase of the cooly population which does not and cannot, as is quite notorious, consume any large amount of our manufactures. The amount of gain that we are to have in this affair is the relinquishment of only about thirty or forty thousand dollars of Hawaiian duties now levied upon the American manufacturers. If there is any member of the Committee on Foreign Relations here I should like to ask him what is the Hawaiian duty upon lumber. I think it is a matter that the Committee on Foreign Relations ought to know and probably do know something about.

Mr. SARGENT. Ten per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it is not that. I know that a very considerable amount of our exportations are now free, and there is but 10 per cent. levied upon anything that I am aware of. They must have provisions, breadstuffs, and meat, and they must also have lumber. I do not know what the amount of duty upon lumber is, but that is one of the largest items that is in the trade. For this petty sum that they are to relinquish, thirty or forty thousand dollars, we are to relinquish somewhere about $600,000 this year, and more hereafter, increasing year after year until the expiration of the treaty.

I consider this one of the worst possible bargains that ever was presented to the American Senate. Usually it has been claimed that the Americans in diplomacy have been the equals of other nations; but here we allow ourselves, by long importunity touching a measure that has been pending and pushed for ten years, at last to be cheated more than 10 or 20 to 1 in a matter of dollars and cents, and much more than that as a question of national economy. In relation to these poor people out there, I see an account in this paper, already referred to, as to their legislature, composed of nobles and representatives. This paper says:

A month has elapsed since the Assembly met, and the policy of the government, as it may be gathered from the budget—the only tangible utterance that has come from the ministry—may be summed up in these words: "More Chinese," "Increased expenditures and increased debt."

Mr. EDMUNDS. What paper is that?

Mr. MORRILL. It is The Pacific Commercial Advertiser, published at Honolulu, Hawaii, under date of June 3, 1876. Then again, I find in looking over it, several matters of interest:

During the discussion upon the resolution, as is usual in the assembly—

That is, upon the discussion of the vote of the want of confidence in the ministry, I believe—a great deal of irrelevant talk was introduced about the useless nature of the treaty, some declaring it would do no good to the poor natives, but only to sugar-planters, and others who were already rich.

I think they were pretty sensible. Then there was a discussion in relation to the consideration of the treaty, and a claim that it should be sent to them to pass judgment upon it; but the ministry would not allow it, but claimed they had this whole power, almost as much as my friend from California who thinks we should ratify this law and vote for it at once because the treaty has been negotiated.

On Thursday, Mr. Preston offered the following resolution: "That a select committee be appointed to inquire into and ascertain upon what terms L. Aseu was sent to China by the government to obtain immigrants and why he is returning from San Francisco with Chinese, and upon what terms and conditions these Chinese were taken on board the vessel chartered, and on what terms they are to be landed here," &c.

So that it appears the negotiation of this treaty is to make the business of importing Chinese into Honolulu a lively affair, and that, I suppose, would not be very disagreeable to my friend, the Senator from California, who uttered one of the most vehement philippics against the importation of such persons into San Francisco that I remember ever to have heard. Still the Senator it is fair to presume is in favor of having this sort of population increased there, and in the end we are to take the island under our flag with its population and whatever incumbrances may exist.

Mr. President, I do not feel authorized to consume any great length of time on this subject; but, as I feel that this treaty is destined to be terminated at the very earliest opportunity that the Congress can lay hands upon it and with more alacrity even than was the reciprocity treaty with Canada terminated, I desire to prevent, as much as possible, some of the mischiefs likely to arise in consequence of insufficient laws upon the statute-books to punish fraud in relation to any importations from Hawaii not entitled to the benefits of this reciprocity tariff. It is obvious that there will be a very large temptation to fraud when they send their sugar here, not worth perhaps but a little more than the amount of the duty imposed upon it and they will be likely to send what are not strictly the products of Hawaii. We have no rules or regulations now which would authorize our consuls there to ascertain about that fact and to punish any attempt that might be made fraudulently to take East India sugars and send them here for the products of Hawaii. I merely desire to offer an amendment to the bill that shall remedy this defect. Otherwise you leave the door open to the introduction of any amount of rice and sugar in a fraudulent way, for you cannot distinguish the different kinds of rice, whether one is the product of Hawaii or the product of China, nor can Hawaiian sugar be distinguished from that of India. It need not be said, as it may be by some who are very zealous for the sudden and instant passage of this bill, that the House of Representatives will not be willing to pass an amendment that shall bar out this opportunity for fraud. I therefore ask the candid judgment of the Senate upon an amendment which I shall propose and which Senators, if they will examine the subject, will find is indispensable, if they would prevent these frauds. We have now a law, section 1737 of the Revised Statutes:

If any consul, vice-consul, commercial agent, or vice commercial agent falsely and knowingly certifies that property belonging to foreigners is property belonging to citizens of the United States, he shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than three years and by a fine of not more than $10,000.

I want to impose a fine; that, if he shall certify that any sugar or rice is the product of Hawaii when it is not, there shall be a law to punish the offense. I will say to Senators that while the Secretary of the Treasury has power to issue rules and regulations, he has no power to punish for a violation of such rules and regulations. Therefore while I know that my friend from California will be impatient at the slightest reference to any amendment, though it is merely to prevent a large amount of frauds, yet I do insist that in point of even decent legislation such an amendment is indispensable and will not in the least hazard the passage of the bill. I present the following amendments and ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont proposes amendments, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 22, after the word "force," it is moved to insert "subject, however, to be suspended whenever the conditions and stipulations contained in articles 2 and 4 of said convention shall not be faithfully observed by His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands."

Mr. MORRILL. That is in accordance with the usual practice under such treaties, and there is no provision by which this treaty can be terminated short of waiting until Congress should convene, provided the Hawaiian government should at any time fail to execute it according to its terms. I wish to leave power in the Executive to terminate this treaty if they shall so fail at any time. That is one amendment. There are others. Let them be read.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are three reasons in way of objection to the amendment, either of which in my opinion is fatal to it or sufficient to show that the amendment itself is unnecessary. The first is that the Hawaiian government, if this treaty be at all favorable to the people of that country, and especially if it be favorable to that people in any degree proportionate to the representations made by Senators upon this floor who oppose the bill, will prevent by their own policy and their own conduct any fraudulent practices in their custom-houses. That first reason is connected with the second, which is——

Mr. MORRILL. Let the other amendments be read. You have only heard part of them.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I thought I had heard the whole.

Mr. MORRILL. No.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then it is worse, probably, than I supposed.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is also proposed to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized from time to time to make and prescribe, in addition to requirements for the verification of invoices under existing laws, such rules and regulations and conditions relative to the evidence, which shall include the declaration under oath of the owner, shipper, or manufacturer, and the certificate of the consul, vice-consul, commercial agent, or vice-commercial agent, that any articles of merchandise proposed to be exported from the Hawaiian Islands and to be admitted into the ports of the United States of America free of duty under the first article of the convention aforesaid are the growth and produce or manufacture of the Hawaiian Islands, as may be necessary for the protection of the revenue and in conformity to article 3 of the aforesaid convention.

SEC. 3. That if any consul, vice-consul, commercial agent, or vice-commercial agent shall falsely and knowingly certify that any merchandise about to be exported from any port of the Hawaiian Islands to any port of the United States is of the growth and produce or manufacture of the Hawaiian Islands, he shall on conviction thereof in any court of competent jurisdiction forfeit and pay a fine of not exceeding $10,000, at the discretion of the court, and be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, those supplementary clauses seem to relate to the main proposition which is first stated in the amendment, and would not therefore change the views which I entertain concerning the proposition itself.

First, then, it is not necessary, because the Hawaiian government has a reason for fulfilling the treaty in its precise intent, which is strong in proportion to the advantages which the people of that country are to derive from the treaty; and just as strong as is the opinion or the representation of the Senator from Vermont or his associates who oppose this treaty that it is advantageous to the people of Hawaii, just in that proportion is the strength of our security that they will maintain inviolate the treaty in this particular.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will excuse me, I have not represented that this was going to be any advantage to the people of Hawaii, but only to the planters. I think it will not be of any advantage to the people.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will ask the Senator by what process he supposes this treaty has been attained on the part of Hawaii; that is, what influences in the islands have induced the Government to assent to the treaty?

Mr. MORRILL. I would rather not discuss the influences that have brought about this treaty.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I will assume one of two influences, either derived from the people of whom we speak on the one hand, who as is said by the Senator from Vermont are not to derive any advantages from this treaty, and therefore it follows that they had no power in making the treaty and will have no interest in keeping it, and hence will have no capacity to annul it. But if there are people in the Hawaiian Islands who are interested in this treaty, the probability is that they had some agency in the process on the part of the Hawaiian government by which it was secured, and the influence of that body of people in the Hawaiian Islands will remain and their influence will be exerted to secure the faithful performance of the stipulations contained in the treaty, and they will exert themselves in that direction just in proportion to the advantages they derive from it.

Further, the amendment is entirely unnecessary from the circumstance that it proposes that when the Hawaiian government violates the treaty the treaty shall be abrogated. We do not need legislation to secure that. By the well-understood and uniformly practiced law of nations, whenever a treaty is violated on the part of one of the contracting parties the other contracting party has a right to annul the treaty; and therefore we do not need to legislate, because we have better security than legislation can furnish. If the treaty is not faithfully kept by the Hawaiian government, we shall have the right in good faith and according to the law of nations to annul it.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me a moment to call his attention to the fact that the bill which is pending is an exact copy of the law found in volume 10 of the Statutes at Large to give effect to the reciprocity treaty with Canada, where the subject was articles which were the growth or produce of Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, &c. We have followed the exact precedent. In regard to the penalties, the other portion of the amendment, section 5442 of the Revised Statutes provides:

> Every consul, vice-consul, commercial agent, or vice-commercial agent who knowingly and falsely certifies to any invoice or other papers to which his certificate is by law authorized or required, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 and by imprisonment for a term not more than three years.

It applies to this; it applies to everything.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But I beg to say to my honorable friend from California that a reference to the proceedings of Congress in regard to the reciprocity treaty with Canada would be the most unwelcome precedent for my friend from Vermont that could be offered.

Mr. SARGENT. That I am aware of.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I imagine that his chief reason for objecting to this treaty is the apprehension he entertains that it may be a precedent at some future time for another reciprocity treaty with Canada or some other country on some side of our own territory.

But the third reason is that the amendment is for the time being fatal to the bill. We know perfectly well that at this stage of the session to adopt an amendment to this bill and send it to the House is to dispose of it for this session of Congress.

I do not claim that because this Senate by a two-thirds majority has ratified a treaty it is bound to pass such laws as are necessary for the execution of the treaty; but I do say that having ratified a treaty by a two-thirds majority, and the facts remaining substantially as they were when the treaty was ratified, this Senate cannot take a different position or fail to carry into effect its own treaty ratified after debate and due consideration. If there were new facts, if there was any disclosure of any improper proceedings concerning the negotiation or the ratification of the treaty, if in any sense it was calculated to produce results different from those anticipated at the time the treaty was negotiated, then the Senate might take advantage of its "sober second thought," supported by new facts and new information. But in this case nothing has occurred, and nothing, I may say, has been stated on the floor of the Senate in the debate upon this bill that was not stated substantially, and I think indeed with more elaboration and detail when the treaty itself was under considertion.

I accept this treaty and the consequences of this treaty not on account of the mere advantage one way or the other of the slight trade that is going on between these islands and the United States, and if the losses of revenue were twice what they are shown to be it would not disturb me in my opinion that as a measure of public policy this is one of the best opportunities the country has had for the enlargement of its trade and the advancement of its commercial influence in the Pacific and toward the great nations that lie upon the other side of the Pacific Ocean. If there be any reason which can be assigned that has substance in it as tending to show the cause of our present financial difficulties, the depression of trade, the loss of work, it is that as a great producing country, with immense intellectual resources applied to inventions and improvements, we have advanced in production beyond the capacity of the markets we command; and the country will, I believe, enter upon a new career in this respect looking to the hundreds of millions of people in China and Japan who are not our equals in the capacity to produce, but who still have the means of purchasing and consuming vast quantities of the products of the labor of our people and of our machinery. Now this is one step in the right direction. It is not a very long step, but it is half way toward the four or five hundred million people on the other side of the Pacific Ocean.

Another reason to my mind is that while we do not desire, and certainly for one I do not design, to annex these islands to the United States, I still desire to see them in such a condition that when the ruling class in that country shall disappear there shall be established in the place of the present government a republican Government under the control of Americans and animated by the ideas of Americans; and if we thrust these people away they must now seek aid and protection somewhere else. If we reject this treaty we transfer these islands either to France or to Great Britain, and we diminish our markets, we diminish our political power, we limit the influence of our institutions, we circumscribe American ideas, we retard the progress of American civilization in its advance westward. Any one of these considerations is worth more to the people of this country than the one-half million or more dollars that you say will be lost by this treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate lay aside the pending order informally that we can take up the concurrent resolution for adjournment.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand we can have a vote on this proposition in a very short time. I believe there is only one other speech to be made. I make this suggestion to the Senate: that by going on without taking a recess we can adjourn the Senate by midnight. If we waste time in the discussion of the order of business we cannot do it. Now let us run on smoothly, and I have no doubt we can adjourn by that time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK I have been waiting patiently nearly all day. I have no disposition to interfere with the passage of the bill of the Senator.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand that; I make the suggestion in perfect good faith. I think we can adjourn to-night.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If we take up the resolution of adjournment and fix a time——

Mr. SARGENT. That very thing may prevent our adjournment, because things may arise and Senators do not like to talk again at that time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the time was fixed it certainly could be changed if a change should be found necessary.

Mr. SARGENT. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suppose the regular order is my motion.

Mr. LOGAN. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is my motion. I should like to test the sense of the Senate. I feel as unwilling to interfere with this bill as any one——

Mr. SARGENT. We can get this out of the way in twenty minutes, I hope.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest to the Senator to let the vote be taken on the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the vote can be taken, I shall not interpose.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand that one Senator wishes to state his views merely, not occupying much time. Then I believe we can have a vote. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate but a very few moments in reference to this question. I look upon the measure as one of very great importance to this country, and I differ with the views of certain Senators whose ideas seem to be in reference to a question of this kind merely dollars and cents. I fear that our statesmanship of to-day appertaining to all of us differs very materially from what American statesmanship was in times gone by. It was once considered good statesmanship to look somewhat to the future and the great development of this country and at that which would aid in its development and advancement; but nowadays it seems to be statesmanship whenever a question arises to take out a pencil or a pen and cipher up how many five-cent pieces the United States of America will lose at the present time if some measure shall be enacted into a law.

The idea that this proposition should be ciphered and figured on in reference to dollars and cents, when the amount is a mere bagatelle at best, is something that strikes me as unsound in statesmanship. My friend from Georgia, [Mr. NORWOOD,] who has great sympathy for the laboring people of Georgia, the colored people—and I admire his sympathy for them—is very much alarmed, if this bill should pass, for fear that some poor colored man will not be employed to do a day's labor in the cultivation of rice. Therefore he says this bill is inhumanity itself, because it destroys the labor of those people in the South that are now engaged in rice cultivation. It was very amusing to me. I do not know how it affected other Senators. The idea that the rice landed from the Hawaiian Islands in San Francisco, or on the coast of California, should have an effect on rice-raising in Georgia, taking into consideration the great distance of travel, the manner of transportation, and all the items that must be taken into view, does strike me as something very extravagant. It would have just about the same effect upon rice production in Georgia, or in any other State, that the tariff on a hand-saw would have on the price of pigs in Illinois; just about the same.

So it is with my friend from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] He is terribly alarmed too for fear the importation of a few hogsheads of sugar from the Hawaiian Islands will affect the sugar crop or the price of sugar in Louisiana or some other southern district of country—Texas, or somewhere else. Now, when we discover that the amount of duties on all the articles received in our Pacific ports from Hawaii is about $300,000, how is that small amount of importation of sugar to affect Louisiana and affect Texas and affect the sugar-producing portion of the country? That is an argument of course on a certain line, but it is an argument in a narrow groove, one of the most narrow grooves that any man's mind can possibly act in. What possible effect could the importation of this small amount have upon the sugar production of our country? I do not want to get into it; it is too small a business. I do not wish to take out my pencil and count the five-cent pieces that might be accumulated in future ages by continuing these duties. I will say to my friend from Vermont, who represents an agricultural people, that the effect upon his constituents of the taking off the tariff on sugar landed from the Hawaiian Islands on the coast of California will be just about the same that the tariff on wool would have on the price of tobacco. If any man can calculate that, that is about the influence it would have, and that is about the value of the arguments that have been made in reference to this proposition.

What is the proposition? The proposition to my mind is something of more magnitude than this. It is a proposition having at least grandness in it so far as the future is concerned. It strikes my mind the same as a question of this kind would if the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Vermont were in command of an army to-day moving on an enemy and they were approaching close to one another and they found a stream of water and but one stream to furnish the soldiers with water; the question would arise which one should get possession of that stream first, and there the fight would occur, as all men know who are conversant with these things. The question then for the benefit of the army is the question of that water, the one that gets possession first. So when armies opposed to each other find a hill in advance, either one, two, or three miles, of the valleys where they are they naturally seek possession of that hill as an outpost, to which the army can be moved for defensive purposes. That is one of the rules we always find closely adhered to when we are moving in matters of that kind. So it is between the governments of France, England, and the United States. These islands in the North Pacific are the outposts of the western coast of the United States of America; and in time of war they are like the hill or the stream of water that I have described to the United States of America, and there the battle would occur for the possession of the islands as a coaling station, and every man who has thought on this question knows it to be a fact. Then, the man who looks at this matter, not as to the effect on this country in the future, but as to the number of five-cent pieces we may lose or might lose by our action, is looking at it as I said in a very narrow groove.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. How will the ratification of this treaty contribute to the military possession or the naval possession of these islands?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the Senator as best I can. It will contribute to it in this particular and in this way: If we do not ratify the treaty and pass a law carrying out the existing stipulations of the treaty, and by that means have the friendly relations existing between that government and ours that would naturally give us that right, and would naturally cause it, like the ripe apple on the tree, to fall into the hands of the one who first shakes the tree, we are prevented from finally getting possession of that which is desirable to this country. If we strike this down and allow other nations to take the position we have now a chance to get by commercial treaties of the same character, they would cause these people to desire friendly relations with them more than with us, and they would affiliate with them and not affiliate with us. If affiliation and sympathy and feeling exist between the two governments, that naturally will in time to come give us possession of the islands which are desirable to us at this or at any other time. That is my answer.

Mr. WEST. As the Senator has kindly answered that question to his satisfaction, will he tell me how the Government of the United States by ratifying this treaty can hold these islands against a struggle with Great Britain, without fortifications and defenses; and must we not necessarily after consummating this treaty so fortify these islands that we may make a stronghold there?

Mr. LOGAN. That is a question that the Senator himself knows has nothing on earth to do with the passage of this bill.

Mr. WEST. That may be, but I should like to have the Senator's answer to it.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I will give the Senator this answer: It would not necessarily at all require us to fortify the islands. Our friendly relations are a fortification in our favor to a certain extent and give us the right of occupancy in a time when we might be in danger. It is the fortification of good-will toward this Government which is as strong a fortification as that that may be made by military science, and the only kind of a fortification that exists between governments having friendly relations is the fortification of good-will, of kindly relations between the two. That is all the kind of fortifications that can exist between governments. That is my answer to that question, and if the Senator has another I will try to answer that.

It does seem to me that my friend from Vermont and my friend from Georgia are trying to demonstrate the necessity in this country of adopting the Chinese-wall system, having no relations whatever with any other nations of the earth; walling yourselves in until the time of peril comes and then the walls must fall; walling yourselves in from that which every man by looking on the map can see is of vast importance to us now and will be in the future. Without going over the history of the recent war we find that vast importance was attached to these islands at that time, and certainly it is not expected that they will not be of the same inportance in future years if the same state of things should exist, and the same state of things may exist that did at that time.

Now, sir, my theory in reference to these islands and all other contiguous islands to the United States of America dotted around our coasts that stand as an outpost, that stand merely as the little company of advance guard that you send out in front of an army to look-out and spy out the enemy, is that we ourselves in times gone by have not looked as well to our interest as we should have done. If we had, the outposts surrounding us to-day would have been in the possession of the Government of the United States, and with these outposts in our possession this Government might defy the combined power of all the nations of the earth. When I say "outposts" I mean all those outposts which approach our borders either east or west. I am for that kind of statesmanship that does look to the future and that does not wait until the time comes when we are called upon unprepared to make that exertion which the nation cannot without great preparation make. We have had some experience in reference to preparations that are necessary to be made when a surprise comes upon us, and the tale is told in the annals of this country in the last few years, in the annals in reference to its blood, in reference to its failures, in reference to its successes, in reference to its expenditures. The tale is amply unfolded there, giving warning to us that the necessity exists at all times to be ready for that which cometh at the hour we know not of.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, the concluding remarks that have just been submitted by the Senator from Illinois meet my sanction; there is no difference of opinion between us on that subject; but I contend in furtherance of that very idea, that the step that you are now about to take will defeat it virtually and positively; that you are about to so subsidize these islands as to actually remove them beyond your domain or your possible occupation or ownership of them at a future and a proper time.

The Senator said in response to a question that I put to him a while ago that this treaty would so Americanize these islands and so contribute to our influence upon the spot that it would be an easy matter at all times to maintain friendly relations and profit by them. Does he know what the history of our relations with the islands is at the present time? Does he know that to-day they are as much Americanized as if the American flag flew over the islands? If he does not, here is the only authentic history we have on the subject, and I will read it to him.

Mr. LOGAN. I have read it. You will not add to my information by reading it.

Mr. WEST. It is very difficult ever to give the Senator from Illinois any information; but perhaps it may benefit some others. Mr. Nordhoff says:

> It is plain that the island trade is so largely in our hands that no other nation can be said to dispute it with us. If our flag flew over Honolulu we could hardly expect to have a more complete monopoly of Hawaiian commerce than we already enjoy. Moreover, almost all the sugar plantations, the most productive and valuable property on the islands, are owned by Americans, and the same is true of the greater number of stock farms.
>
> Our political predominance on the islands is as complete as the commercial. In the present cabinet all the ministers except one are Americans.

I submit what possible advantage do you gain, what possible advance do you make toward the possession of these islands by subsidizing them for the period of seven years. I repeat again, does it plant one gun, does it raise any fortification, or contribute in any way to our military or forcible maintenance of the islands against any European power? Does not the Senator know that immediately upon the outbreak of hostilities between this country and Great Britain, to use his own figure of speech, that would be "the very stream of water," that would be the very vantage-ground which would be sought to be occupied by both countries? If we want these islands as a military protection, let us buy them, let us fortify them and make them useful, but not give away the money of the people of the United States in a useless piece of speculative diplomacy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] spoke of the great advance that this country had made in production beyond the capacity of consumption. He said that this was a step, but not a very long step, toward the commerce of the 400,000,000 or 500,000,000 people of the East. Yes, "it is a step, but not a very long step." What are you reaching out and grasping for? The commerce of 50,000 people, I repeat again, and that is all. What becomes of this magnificent vision that looks to the increasing and growing industries of this country to be promoted by this measure? It is a mere vision, and embraces no greater commerce than pertains to one-third of the population of this city. He said he did not care if it cost twice the treasure, twice the estimate that was put upon it at the expense of this country so long as we could acquire possession. Then we are to understand that according to his estimates he is willing to spend $4,000,000 a year to get a treaty with these islands; $28,000,000 frittered away in seven years for what? At the end of that time that people and those enriched sugar-planters on those islands will turn to you and tell you, when they have had the benefit of your subsidy for seven years, they will endeavor to maintain their independence.

Sir, the Senators on this floor who desire the acquisition of these islands by the ratification of this measure present the only stumbling-block that appears to my vision in the way of that acquisition. We cannot acquire them under this proposition; it is idle to talk of it, and due reflection would bring us to that conclusion.

May I be permitted to say one word in connection with the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Vermont, and that is in regard to smuggling. There can be no question but what foreign sugars will be introduced into these islands to the extent of their consumption by all the native population, and perhaps more. Every pound that they can produce will be sent to this country. There you will have side by side with their native production the foreign import, and I ask you when such an inducement as will be held up to them or to their merchants or to those engaged in commerce to adulterate that sugar and adulterate that rice with a foreign product whether they are not likely to succumb to temptation? You can adulterate Sandwich Island sugar and Sandwich Island rice 20 per cent. with the production of India and nobody can detect it, not the most efficient expert that we have in our employ.

Then the Senator from Massachusetts argued that the people there would be interested in preventing this smuggling. Are not the honest people all over this land interested in preventing smuggling? Does not the illegal introduction of smuggled goods into this country immediately conflict with the legitimate profits of your honest trader? Do the efforts of the honest trader in this country prevent illegitimate productions, and will it not do so there? The amendment that has been offered is eminently proper.

This treaty, as it reads in the third article, says:

> Under such rules and regulations and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the two governments may from time to time respectively prescribe.

I ask what has this Government prescribed for the protection of the revenue in that case? Can the Secretary of the Treasury, under existing laws, make the needed regulations? I think not.

Mr. SARGENT. He did so under the reciprocity treaty with Canada.

Mr. WEST. There never was any attempt there, that I am aware of, to evade them, and the proposition is idle that because a certain number of honest men are interested in seeing the laws faithfully administered that is an insurance that they will be, without penal provisions for their violation. I think the amendment is eminently proper, and without it you will not only be obliged to pay this revenue to these islands, but you will be defrauded by one-fifth of it at least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely wish to say that there is a provision in the treaty that the Hawaiian Islands shall not concede similar privileges to any other country. If that should be violated, then it would be in the power of the President to terminate the treaty under my amendment. I think that the time between our adjournment from March and the next succeeding session of Congress might sometimes be too long to wait. Of course Congress can terminate the treaty whenever they please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire action on all the amendments at once?

Mr. MORRILL. No; on the first one by itself, to insert in the first section the power of suspension on the part of the Executive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment proposing to insert additional sections.

Mr. MORRILL. In spite of all that has been said, I do insist that there will be no power to punish fraud that may be committed unless this proposition shall be adopted. I therefore ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state that on this bill, and, as I understand from my friend from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL,] also on these amendments, I am paired with the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who is now necessarily absent from the Senate. I wish to say also while I am up, not to take any time, that while I agree to what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has said about the desirability of political control or friendship at least with these islands and all others, the gravity of the question as it will ultimately result is in the circumstance that under our particular form of government when any of these islands become a part of the United States it will almost necessarily be followed by their being introduced into the government of the country and they will assist in making laws for the people of the United States, and unless their populations are homogenous with our own and their local institutions are similar to ours, it will be an element of unhappiness and discord and injury rather than of public benefit. I should, therefore, hesitate a long time before I took any step that would look to the incorporation into the American Union of these outlying islands on either side of the continent, for that involves too much for republican liberty dependent upon considerations that have often been mentioned. But on this particular topic, as I have stated, I am paired.

I wish to say also that I do not agree with what has been stated by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] that we are under any more obligation to pass this law than we were to agree to the treaty. We agreed to the treaty with the express stipulation that it should not take effect until the legislative department of the Government, the Senate and House of Representatives and the President acting in that character as a check upon legislation, should also pass the necessary laws to carry it into effect. I do not hold, therefore, that we are bound to carry this treaty into effect by law unless in our judgment we believe it right in itself that it should be carried into effect. There is no point of honor or of public faith, that I can see, that is involved in it. If it were otherwise it would be perfectly useless to incorporate into a treaty such a limitation; and it would be just as absurd to my mind as it would be where an agent is making a contract for his principal without authority to stipulate that the contract should not have force until the principal should agree to it, and then to assume that the principal was bound to agree to it because the agent had made that conditional arrangement.

I am not by any means prepared to say that the President and Senate would not have had absolute power under the Constitution to make this treaty without any such provision for legislation. I am not going into that. But it being in it, it appears to me to be perfectly plain that the legislative branches of the Government are under no obligation except the obligation to do right in respect of the subject.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should vote for the amendment if I did not believe the matter was already provided for by law. I think section 5442 of the Revised Statutes provides for it expressly. It renders it criminal for any false invoice to be made in regard to any foreign merchandise whatever. Believing, therefore, that it is already provided for, I shall vote against the amendment.

I voted for this treaty before; and when the Senate by two-thirds ratify a treaty, while I will not say they are compelled to act upon it, it at least puts us in a false position unless some change in public affairs has taken place after such action of solemn ratification of a treaty not to vote for the legislation to carry it into effect. I shall, therefore, vote for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called) I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] I should vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MORTON, (when his name was called.) Some few hours ago, supposing I was going out of the Senate for a while, I paired with the Senator from California [Mr. BOOTH] on this question. He is not now here and perhaps has gone out supposing that I would be absent. If he were here he would vote for the amendment and I think I should vote against it. I shall not vote.

Mr. McCREERY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this Hawaiian treaty with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT.] He favors the treaty and I am against it.

Mr. KELLY, (after first voting in the negative.) On Saturday I paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] and as I thought the pair would expire this morning, but he has gone away understanding that he is paired all the session. I shall have to withdraw the vote I gave against this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn, if there be no objection.

Mr. KELLY. I understand the Senator from Virginia went home on account of sickness in his family.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 7, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cockrell, Gordon, Key, Morrill, Norwood, Patterson, and West—7.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Sargent, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, and Windom—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morton, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—34.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MORRILL called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, it was my purpose to have spoken upon this bill at some length. I am physically unable, however, to do so this morning, even if I thought it advisable; but after the last vote, which has so overwhelmingly defeated the important amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, the object of which was to protect the interest in behalf of which I intended to speak, it would be a sheer waste of time to attempt an elaborate argument. I shall therefore content myself with protesting against this proposed legislation to carry into effect a treaty so partial in its operations and so unjust to one section or one portion of the people of this country. There were a number of objections to this treaty to which I proposed at one time to address myself. One objection is local; another is general in its character. One objection lies against its policy, another against its principle. It aims a death-blow at important interests in one large section of the country without any corresponding benefit to other sections, and therefore it ought not to pass. It is at least of doubtful constitutional sanction; it places in jeopardy the good name of the Government for fair dealing with other nations with whom we have treaties, and on these accounts ought to be rejected.

But, as I said, I propose simply to offer my protest, and not only mine, but the protest of the people whose interests are involved, most lamentably involved, by this partial and short-sighted policy. Sir, I know the southern rice and sugar planters, and it is not too much to say of them that no portion of the American people are more capable of self-sacrificing patriotism; and if you will propose a measure which shall admit duty free or upon light duty all articles of foreign manufacture which the people of this country consume, they will yield to it as cheerful a support as the people of any other section. They have inherited by birth and have maintained through their entire lives the doctrine of free trade, or rather the imposition of duties for revenue alone; but, sir, is it surprising that they should antagonize with all their feeble power a bill which proposes to single out from all importations those productions upon which all their prosperity depends? I myself am a free-trader in the sense of a tariff for revenue alone, and whenever there shall be introduced into the Senate a bill to open our ports to English iron, to English steel, to French manufactures, to Great Britain's manufactures, and to the manufactures of all the world, I shall go as far toward its support as is consistent with the security of needful revenues and as far probably as those who now so actively support this partial, one-sided, obnoxious measure.

I am here to vote for general laws, for equal burdens, and equal rights, and I can never, though I should stand alone, give my sanction to any bill which discriminates against the interests of any portion of the American people. It is not just, Mr. President, and begging the pardon of the majority of the Senate who choose to force this legislation at a heavy cost to the people of my section, I must say that it is not only unjust, but it is inconsistent with that mutuality of interest and that equality of burden which was guaranteed by the Constitution and by the very organism of the Union itself.

Is it just to experiment for the benefit of the whole people and for the benefit of a foreign people in the South's productions and the South's cost? Much less is it just or politic or statesmanlike to try that experiment at the hazard of the sole material interests of that portion of the southern people who by the vicissitudes of war have been made poorer than any people in all the history of the past.

Senators tell me that this legislation will not interfere with the interests of the rice and sugar planters. But, sir, when Senators tell me that they are better advised of the interest of these planters than the planters themselves, who are intelligent, cultured, capable—the peers of any who hold seats upon this floor; when legislators thus answer arguments, then debate is useless. I repeat, sir, these planters know their interests, and they feel that upon this bill hangs not only their future interests, but may involve their ability to gather their growing crops. They feel that the passage of this bill may involve the possibility and even the strong probability of having their plantations abandoned on the very eve of their harvest. Yet Senators tell us that they are to be the judges, and that all these apprehensions are groundless. I trust they may be; but I will never consent to legislation which is of such doubtful constitutional support, of uncertain effect upon the general revenues, and which by its discriminations fills with alarm so large and intelligent a body of citizens, whose whole fortunes, already palsied by disease, are to bear all the burden of the change. I do not expect the Senate to heed these admonitions; for it has just voted a proposition to so amend this bill as to make it certain that no other rice or sugar shall be admitted free except that grown upon these islands. Sir, what guarantee have you that there will be admitted into San Francisco and the Pacific ports only the productions of those islands? Is there anything in the law, is there anything in the character of the people with whom you are treating, is there anything in your ability to enforce this law by spies and informers, by ships and cruisers, that guarantees to us that these islands will not become a great funnel through which will be emptied into your ports free of duty the productions of Cuba and India and China? We are not dealing with Canadians or Englishmen; but with semi-savages, whose moral sense would be less shocked by a violation of the treaty than by the loss of the profits which gigantic smuggling will insure. I am not a merchant; but a shrewd trader with capital could organize an establishment in the city of San Francisco, another on the island of Hawaii, and another in Cuba, and another at Hong-Kong, and could pour into your Pacific ports year by year free of duty more rice and sugar, in spite of all your laws, than the Hawaiian Islands are worth or ever will be worth. Will enterprising gentlemen be wanting in such a scheme? How will you prevent it? Are you going to send your men-of-war to enforce your law in these far-off islands, and make this great western ocean Pacific only in name? Is this the price we are to pay for so contemptible results as are promised or can be secured by this treaty? Sir, I am amazed that the proposition submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] received but seven votes in this body. It will not be twelve months before we shall have hogsheads of sugar by the thousand grown on the island of Cuba, tierces of rice by the myriads grown in China, entering our ports with the frank of Kink Calico (Kalakaua) upon them.

But, Mr. President, as I said, it is idle to discuss this measure. I will not take the time of the Senate any longer. Let me once again repeat, however, that you are proposing a grave injustice—injustice to the southern planter of rice and of sugar; injustice to the laborer who produces these commodities; injustice even to the West, whose productions of wheat and corn and meat these planters are now able to consume, but which they may no longer be able to purchase when this bill shall become a law. It cost originally $100 per acre to redeem these rice lands from the swamps; they have cost since the war $50 to $70 per acre to resubdue and refit them, and they now cost from $10 to $20 per acre per annum to cultivate them. And when they shall become no longer valuable because the product which has made them valuable becomes itself almost valueless, then these laborers must abandon these fields, and these lands themselves be abandoned to the waters from which they have by the labor of generations and so great an expenditure of money been redeemed.

One word more and I shall close. These planters, intelligent, well-informed, and honest, believe that they are in absolute danger, if this bill shall pass, by reason of the panic which it will create in the minds of their laborers of having their plantations abandoned and their present crops lost.

Now, Mr. President, I appeal to fair-minded Senators to postpone the consideration of this bill until the present crop shall have been gathered. Then, if the panic shall come, let it come when these burdened and paralyzed people shall be better prepared to meet it. But do not bring upon them this disaster after they have engaged their labor and planted their crops upon the supposition this great Government would be incapable of such partial law-making or of making them an exception to its rule of protection. Sir, what would Pennsylvania say if it were proposed to introduce iron free? What would Connecticut say if her products were brought into competition with free imports from some other nation? Georgia, Louisiana, South Carolina, Alabama, and Texas only ask that the consideration which has been shown to other States shall be shown to them; and, if nothing more, that they at least shall be spared this blow until their harvest is ended. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the second Tuesday in December next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves the postponement of the bill until the second Tuesday in December next.

The motion was not agreed to—ayes 8, noes not counted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] He would vote for the bill, and I should vote against it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, (when his name was called.) On this bill I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. ROBERTSON.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. KELLY, (when his name was called.) I was paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS;] but the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] has kindly agreed to pair with the Senator from Virginia for me, so that I am at liberty to vote. I vote yea.

Mr. CLAYTON, (when Mr. WITHERS's name was called.) As has been stated by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY,] I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCCREERY, (when Mr. WRIGHT'S name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT.] He would vote for the bill, and I should vote against it.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. On this bill I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. BARNUM.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 12—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cragin, Dawes, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Sargent, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, and Windom—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Jones of Florida, Key, Morrill, Norwood, Patterson, West, and Whyte—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—30.

So the bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery;

A bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 24) providing for the postponement of the publication of the Army Regulations.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of July 24, 1876, a statement of the number of civil officers employed in the Treasury Department from 1859 to 1875, inclusive; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, for the purpose of submitting a few remarks, which will not take more than ten or fifteen minutes, I move that the Senate now take up the resolution to print the President's message in relation to the Hamburgh massacre.

Mr. SARGENT. Cannot the Senator make his remarks on the report of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. I shall take no more time on the one than on the other, and I may as well make my remarks now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Arkansas. I gave notice this morning that as soon as this Hawaiian matter was finished I should again ask the Senate to take up the House resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. I can finish my remarks while Senators are discussing this question, if the Senate will allow me to take it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But somebody else may want then to say something on the same question. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion and let me call up the constitutional amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will give way, I will ask to take up a conference report, and he can make his speech on that just as well as on anything else; and it is a conference report that ought to be taken up.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well; I am willing.

Mr. LOGAN. I move——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was wishing to make a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take up the conference report on the subject of artificial limbs for crippled soldiers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Kansas objected to that report to-day.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take it up; it was reported on Saturday.

Mr. INGALLS. I made no objection to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be taken up on motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the motion will not be agreed to, for it will lead to considerable debate; and now while the Senate at this time in the day is somewhat fuller than it is at any other time, I wish to get a straight vote on the question of the constitutional amendment. I shall not occupy the floor myself, if I do at all, for exceeding ten minutes, and I am advised that very little is to be said on the other side as very little could be as a matter of course as everybody understands, and therefore I hope my friend will not insist upon that but will let me get a vote on the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to ask the Senator a question. He says the report will lead to considerable debate. I ask him why it will lead to debate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because I have understood my friend from Kansas to say that it would, and that it changes the state of the law as it has hitherto been understood to be. It may be a correct change. I say nothing about that.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state what the proposition of the conference report is. The law has been for years that every soldier, sailor, or marine who had lost an arm or a leg in the service of the United States should have every five years either a leg or arm supplied or commutation therefor. The last Congress gave to the soldiers who had lost an arm above the elbow or a leg above the knee $24 a month pension, and provided that they should not receive commutation for an artificial limb. This bill re-instates that provision that they shall have it, and they ought to receive it more than any other men. That is all there is of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not debate the merits.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not going to debate the merits, but I am stating the proposition so that the Senate shall understand it. Now I move to take it up, and we shall see whether it leads to debate or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope we shall not take it up until we dispose of the constitutional amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I may as well give up the constitutional amendment. I can neither get the floor nor a majority of the Senate.

Mr. GORDON. I think if we take the division over again there will be a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, the Chair understands. The ayes have it, and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will count the Senate. I do not want to make any disturbance if a majority of the Senate is opposed to taking up the constitutional amendment, but I wish the Chair to count the Senate and see whether there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (after counting.) There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 897) granting a pension to Andrew Evarts.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1042) to provide for the publication of the report of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap;

A bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS TO DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House concur in the first and second amendments of the Senate, as follows:

In line 1 strike out "persons" and insert "officer, soldier, seaman, and marine."

In line 5, after "application," insert "or commutation therefor as provided and limited by existing laws."

The House concurs also in the proviso added to the end of the bill with an amendment of the word "not" inserted between the words "shall" and "be" in the first line; so that it will read: "That this act shall not be subject to the proviso of an act entitled 'An act to increase pensions,' approved June 18, 1874."

JOHN A. LOGAN,
J. B. GORDON,
NEWTON BOOTH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. M. RUSK,
A. V. RICE,
JOHN C. BAGBY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I favor the adoption of this report. I believe that this Government ought to furnish aid to these disabled soldiers. I am not right sure whether the Government ought not to furnish aid to some of the soldiers who have been disabled since the war in some of the Southern States. I am not right sure whether this Government ought not to furnish aid to some of the widows and orphans who have been made widows and orphans because the Government would not give them that protection which it has given to its citizens in foreign countries; but upon this subject I shall make no further remark. I have risen for another purpose.

Mr. President, a duty which I owe to the State of Arkansas impels me, even at this late day in the session, to refute certain erroneous statements which have been made in this Capitol and elsewhere concerning its State debt. It has been asserted by democratic speakers, democratic newspapers, and within the past few days by an honorable member of the other House, that the debt of the State of Arkansas has been under republican rule increased to the extent of about $15,000,000. How erroneous these assertions are, I shall now proceed to show. I send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the RECORD of August 10, containing a speech delivered by Hon. THOMAS L. JONES, of Kentucky, and ask that so much of the same be read as is marked:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

But as the American mind, especially in these degenerate days, is apt to inquire how the money is handled, how collected, and how disbursed, whence it cometh and whither it goeth, and the answer to these questions makes up the verdict of the American people as to the honesty and morality of their public servants or rulers, perhaps no better illustration can be given of the condition of the Southern States and of the character of their rulers than the table which I submit, showing the debts of those States at the end of the war when their governments were in their own hands, and what they were at the end of reconstruction when their governments were in the hands of others.

Virginia.—Debts and liabilities at close of the war, $31,938,144.59. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $15,480,542.21.

North Carolina.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war—principal, $9,690,500; interest, $1,261,316; whole amount, $10,951,816. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $34,887,467.85.

South Carolina.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, $5,040,000. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $39,158,914.47.

Georgia.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, nominal. Debts and liabilities June, 1871, $50,637,500.

Florida.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, $221,000. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $15,763,447.54.

Tennessee.—Debts at the close of the war, $20,105,606.66. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $45,6c8,263 46.

Arkansas.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, $4,036,952.87. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $19,761,265.62.

Louisiana.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, $10,099,074.34. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $50,540,306.91.

Texas.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, nominal. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $20,361,010.61.

Alabama.—Debts and liabilities at the close of the war, $5,939,658.87. Debts and liabilities January 1, 1872, $38,382,967.34.

Thus it will be seen that the republican Legislatures, composed in the main of negroes and carpet-baggers, elected at the dictation of the party in Federal power, involved the ten States enumerated in the enormous aggregate debt of more than $284,000,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President——

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to yield that I may move that the concurrent resolution sent from the House for the adjournment of Congress be taken up. I wish to move an amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not at the present time.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move to take up the concurrent resolution.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope it may not be taken from the table. The Indian appropriation bill has not passed yet, and cannot pass if there be a single objection to it until to-morrow. Certainly it is not expedient to pass the adjournment resolution fixing a time prior to that to which the Indian appropriation bill may be postponed.

Mr. PADDOCK. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to say that the Indian appropriation bill cannot be reported this evening.

Mr. WINDOM. It cannot be passed until to-morrow if there be a single objection to it. One objection carries it over. It was reported from the conference committee to-day and a single objection carries it over until to-morrow. It certainly would not be prudent to pass the resolution until we know that that important bill can be passed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Arkansas give way to me to move for a recess from half past five until eight o'clock?

Mr. WEST. No, we had better sit it out.

Mr. PADDOCK. On the statement of the Senator from Minnesota, I shall withdraw my motion for the time being.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say that I reported the bill some time ago and would be very glad to call it up, but an objection has been made and I am unable to do so at present.

Mr. PADDOCK. I wish to give notice that at the earliest practicable moment after the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of I shall call up the concurrent resolution for adjournment, because I believe this Congress ought to adjourn.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield to a proposition for a recess from five o'clock to half past seven, or whatever time may suit the Senate?

Mr. WEST. That will involve a session to-morrow.

Mr. CLAYTON. After the conclusion of my remarks I will yield.

The honorable gentleman after undertaking to give a statement of the ante bellum and existing debts calculated up to January 1, 1872, of ten southern States, winds up by saying:

> Thus it will be seen that the republican Legislatures, composed in the main of negroes and carpet-baggers elected at the dictation of the party in Federal power, involved the ten States enumerated in the enormous aggregate debt of more than $284,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, a gentleman who undertakes to deal in figures affecting the credit of ten States ought to be at least correct in his arithmetic. Let us see whether he is or not. By adding together the amounts stated of the debts of each of the ten States at the close of the war it will be found to aggregate $88,333,000, and by adding together the entire debt existing, as stated, on the 1st of January, 1872, it will be found to aggregate $360,661,686.01; deducting the ante bellum debt from the entire debt we have what is claimed to have been created under republican rule, amounting to $272,328,432.68, instead of over $284,000,000, as stated by Mr. JONES; a difference of about $12,000,000. If in the simple matter of addition and subtraction the honorable gentleman is so inaccurate, what must we expect from him when he undertakes to ascertain down to the very cent the exact debt of each of the ten States alluded to?

To show that he is as unreliable in the detail of his figures as he is in his sum-total, I need only expose the error in his statement of the debt of Arkansas, which he fixes at $19,761,265.62 on the 1st day of January, 1872, and of the creation of which he attributes $15,725,312.75 to republican rule. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a copy of the Little Rock Daily Herald of August 10, 1876, one of the organs of the democratic party in Arkansas, which contains a tabulated statement* "showing the bonded and floating debt of the State of Arkansas to June 30, 1876," for which the editor states he is indebted to the courtesy of Hon. W. R. Miller, the present auditor and democratic candidate for governor in the State of Arkansas. I find this statement also published in the Gazette, another democratic organ, and vouched for as accurate. In this statement the total debt of the State is given at $17,306,823.50, being $2,454,442.12 less than the amount stated by Mr. JONES. It will be seen by reference to this statement that the debt has been increased since 1872 as follows:

Statement showing the bonded and floating debt of the State of Arkansas June 30, 1876.*

Character of bonds.	Principal.	Interest.	Total.
5 per cent. State Bank bonds 1837	$10,000 00	$19,750 50	$29,750 50
6 per cent. State Bank bonds 1838	108,000 00	215,400 00	323,400 00
6 per cent. Real Estate bank Bonds 1838, letter A	538,000 00	953,815 53	1,491,815 53
6 per cent. Real Estate bank Bonds 1838, letter C	45,000 00	85,500 00	130,500 00
6 per cent. funding bonds 1869	944,000 00	253,975 00	1,197,975 00
6 per cent. funding bonds 1870	2,265,000 00	516,690 00	2,781,690 00
10 per cent. ten-year bonds 1874	276,500 00	26,996 00	303,496 00
7 per cent. levee bonds	1,986,773 74	625,335 45	2,612,109 19
6 per cent. bonds 1875, (Loughborough Bonds)	256,000 00	11,760 00	267,760 00
	6,429,273 74	2,709,222 48	9,138,496 22

RAILROAD-AID BONDS.	Principal.	Interest.	Total.
Memphis and Little Rock	$1,200,000	$270,090	$1,470,090
Arkansas Central	1,350,000	366,960	1,716,960
Little Rock, Pine Bluff and New Orleans	1,200,000	326,175	1,526,175
Little Rock and Fort Smith	1,000,000	288,000	1,288,000
Mississippi, Ouachita and Red River	600,000	167,235	767,235
				5,350,000 00	1,418,460 00	6,768,460 00
				11,779,273 74	4,127,682 48
Outstanding Treasurer's certificates redeemable with ten-year bonds						1,354 65
Total bonded debt						15,908,310 87
8 per cent. State scrip					21,433 77
5 per cent. State scrip					1,300,389 54
No interest-bearing State scrip					76,689 32
						1,398,512 63
Total debt						17,306,823 50

In September, 1869. Real-estate bonds, No. 1 to 500, inclusive, dated January 1, 1840, amounting, principal and interest, January 1, 1870, to $1,370,000, were converted into funding bonds, dated January 1, 1870, and numbered 491 to 1860, inclusive.

The indebtedness of the State on these bonds is as follows:

Thirteen hundred and twenty bonds* outstanding June 30, 1876		$1,320,000 00
Interest from January 1, 1872, to June 30, 1876		356,400 00
Total due as funded		1,676,400 00
Of the above 338 Real Estate Bank bonds, letter A, are held by the Treasurer of the United States in trust for the Smithsonian Institution. Principal		538,000 00
Interest to June 30, 1876, after deducting amount credited from the 5 per cent. fund and all payments through the State treasury		953,815 53
Total		1,491,815 53
One hundred and sixty-eight funding bonds of 1870 are held by the Secretary of the Interior in trust for various Indian tribes. Principal	168,000 00
Interest to June 30, 1876, after deducting amount credited for keeping United States convicts in the State penitentiary and all payments through the State treasury	25,200 00
		193,200 00
Total held by the United States as trustee		1,685,015 53

Treasurer's certificates, redeemable with ten-year bonds, bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

* NOTE.—Fifty of the 1 370 bonds have been received into the State treasury in payment for swamp and internal improvement lands, leaving outstanding 1,320 bonds.

Ten per cent. ten year bonds, issued in 1874	$276,500 00
Six per cent. bonds, issued in 1875	256,000 00
Total	532,500 00
To this should be added bonds issued in aid of the construction of railroads since 1872	900,000 00
Also the accumulated interest on the State debt since that time, which I find amounts to about	3,000,000 00
Making a total increase of debt	4,432,500 00
When we add to this	2,454,442 12
Which is the difference between the actual debt as shown by the statement just referred to and the amount stated by Mr. Jones as existing in 1872, we find an error in his statement amounting to	6,886,942 12

In other words, he has simply fallen into an error of about $7,000,000 in stating the debt of Arkansas alone. The error which may exist in his statement of the debts of other States I will leave for others to say, though I do not doubt that it will be found that they are equally extravagant and erroneous. When we deduct these erroneous figures from the figures given by Mr. JONES, which are $19,761,265.62, we find the actual debt of the State to be $12,874,323.50. This was the actual debt at the time he states. Deducting from this amount $5,051,265.62, which was the ante bellum debt, we have $7,823,057.88, which is the amount of debt contracted under republican rule at the time to which the gentleman refers, a difference of about $8,000,000 between his statement and the correct figures.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in relation to the character of this debt. Over $5,000,000 of it was entailed upon the people by ante bellum democratic administrations, and grew out of the State loaning its credit to two worthless banks which failed soon after receiving the loan. The history of their transactions, if I had time to detail them, would in comparison make the worst case of carpet-bag financiering respectable. Four million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the debt of the State arose from the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of railroads under an act of the Legislature which was submitted to the people and ratified by them almost unanimously, only about five thousand voting against it.

Whatever may be said as to the impolicy of issuing bonds to aid in the construction of railroads will apply to other States of the Union and to the United States itself, and in this case the responsibility must attach to the people of Arkansas without regard to party; for they not only favored it, but ratified it with their votes. Under this law the railroad companies were required to pay both the principal and interest, and the people never were taxed one cent for that purpose. While the republican party were in power the railroad companies were made to pay the interest, but since the democratic party have come in power they have been relieved from that requirement by a repeal of the law. This rather saddles this debt upon the people or repudiates it altogether.

Three million dollars of bonds were issued for the construction of levees, and were based upon the swamp lands of the State and made receivable for the purchase of the same, in which manner about one-third of the issue has been liquidated. The people of the State were not taxed one cent for the payment of interest on these bonds.

Of the floating debt of the State nearly one million was created to pay the expenses of the militia which were called into the field during my administration to suppress the Ku-Klux rebellion of 1869. Had the democratic party in Arkansas obeyed the laws under republican rule as we do under democratic rule, this debt would never have been incurred, and much valuable property and many still more valuable lives would have been saved.

Mr. President, it has been charged for several years, and more especially of late by democratic orators and democratic newspapers, that in the States of the South where the republican party has been and is in power the governments have been and are characterized by robbery, peculation, and all manner of fraud and corruption. But I assert as a fact which I think cannot be denied, especially so far as relates to my own State, that since the democratic party has come into power there they have not through their courts been able to fix upon a single republican formerly holding official position the crimes and corruptions they have charged upon them. What is true of Arkansas I believe to be true of other Southern States which were formerly under republican rule and now under democratic.

What does this prove? Either one of two things, that their charges have been false, or that the democratic party does not punish crime. That it does not punish crime in many instances where the criminal is a democrat and the victim a republican I am well assured; but I do not believe that the democratic party in the South would be very loth to punish crime when perpetrated on the people of those States by those they call the thieving radicals.

Now, Mr. President, does it not seem, in the interest of good government, to protect the people in the future against crimes, that if these crimes were perpetrated by republicans in the South they should have been fixed upon their authors, who should have been brought to condign punishment. Are we to believe that southern democrats are so enamored with southern republicans as to shield them from the just punishment of such great offenses? I think not, but rather that when brought to the test they are unable to substantiate the charges they have so industriously circulated.

A few words upon another subject, Mr. President. It is asserted of late, and our democratic friends take great pleasure in it, that wherever the republicans are in power in the Southern States the condition of affairs is characterized by disorder and lawlessness, and that wherever the democratic party is in power there peace and quiet is the result. Well, Mr. President, I do not admit that this is so. I know that in many instances it is not. But suppose we admit it; what does it show? It simply shows that the republicans in the South obey the laws and respect the existing authorities, whether those laws or those authorities be republican or democratic; while on the other hand it can be shown that democrats do not obey the laws when administered by republicans and do not respect the authorities when those authorities happen to be republicans. I need only cite you to a few cases that have national reputation. Trenton, Coushatta, Vicksburgh, Grant Parish, and lately, Hamburgh, to show that what I say is correct. It is true we have quiet in some of the Southern States, my own among the number, that are now under democratic rule, and why? Simply because republicans do not organize Ku-Klux Klans and do not resort to violence, assassination, and murder to secure their political ends; and for that reason you have peace. Mr. President, we should have had no war, all would have been peaceful and lovely, perhaps even to the present time, if it had not been for the fact that the democratic party of the South was called upon to live under republican rule in 1861. Rather than do that they deluged the country in blood, and rather than do so to-day they are ready to resort to such atrocities as characterized the late proceeding at Hamburgh, in the State of South Carolina. I wish I could believe that in case the republicans should carry the coming election in Arkansas the democrats would live under our government as peaceably as we have under theirs. The history of the past leaves but little room for such credulity.

Mr. President, much has been said of late about the fact that men who held positions in the confederate army occupy seats in this and the other Chamber. Let me say that in any Southern State where the democrats are really in the majority it is right that they should send democrats to represent them here, and when they do send democrats, I hope they will continue to send here the men who bore the brunt of battle in a gallant attempt to sustain a cause which I believe they thought at the time was just. So far as I am concerned, I would much rather see them here than see the men who when the war swept over the South urged their neighbors to the front but staid themselves at home upon the pretext that they were the owners of the required number of slaves which under confederate law exempted them from military service, men who when the Federal armies marched into the South were Union men and when the Federal armies marched away were confederates. In my experience during the war I saw many such men, and I am compelled to say I have but little respect for them. I say I would much rather welcome men who fought for the flag of the confederacy here representing democratic constituencies than these other men to whom I allude. They fought gallantly and well in a cause which is now lost forever, and which although now known to be a bad one, as before said, they then believed to be just, and no word has ever or shall ever fall from my lips detracting from that gallantry.

So far as I am concerned, I take great pleasure in embracing this opportunity to say here that I make no complaint because southern democratic constituencies have seen fit to send to represent them men who followed the flag which at that time the whole mass of the southern people unfurled.

With these few remarks, Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate longer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that at five o'clock the Senate take a recess until half past seven.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate take a recess from five o'clock until half past seven.

Mr. ANTHONY. Say from half past five to eight.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will accept that; half past five to eight.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the Senate take a recess from half past five until eight o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this a debatable question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I must ask for the yeas and nays, because of a matter that the public have a good deal of interest in. Senators may not get here in the night.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Christiancy, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Mitchell, Paddock, Patterson, and Spencer—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McMillan, Maxey, Morrill, Oglesby, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wadleigh, and Whyte—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Morton, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—33.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, believing that the bill upon which the report of the committee of conference has been made was in violation of an existing statute, that it was intended to circumvent a provision of that statute by indirection, and that it was in its provisions discriminating and unjust to classes of pensioners who are not named in the bill, I took occasion when it was before the Senate on its passage to call attention to those facts and to urge certain reasons why the bill, in my opinion, should not become a law. I am in favor of the most liberal pensions to all classes who can properly be held to be within the purview of a pension law; but I am opposed to discrimination, to invidious partiality, and to an attempt by any one whatever to accomplish by indirection what it is deemed impossible to effect by direct methods. This bill proposes to give to soldiers who are unable to use artificial limbs commutation once in every five years. I call the attention of the Senate to the remarks that were made by the Senator from Illinois when this matter was previously before the Senate as to what was the object and intention of the law. The remarks were made on the 22d of July, which was Saturday, and appeared in the RECORD of the following Monday:

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it differ from the law?

Mr. LOGAN. It does not differ at all except to change from the Secretary of War to the Quartermaster the furnishing of transportation. It is the same bill precisely except these changes and extending to every five years, which was the intention of the law.

Further on the Senator from Illinois said:

I am now willing to make that change—

That is, the change suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY]— and make it conform to the original law. That is all there is of the bill. The Surgeon-General gives a construction that he cannot re-issue these artificial limbs. The commutation is the same and everything is the same, except the change I have stated.

In the course of the debate I called the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the provisions of the law approved June 18, 1874, which increased the rate of pension to persons who have lost either a leg at or above the knee or an arm above the elbow to $24 a month. The proviso is:

Provided, That no artificial limbs, or commutation therefor, shall be furnished to such persons as shall be entitled to pensions under this act.

The Senator from Illinois, when his attention was called to this act, expressly declared that the bill which is now under consideration was not, and was not intended to be, in conflict with the provisions of that law. I asked him whether the intention of the bill was to give the pensioner increased pension and commutation for a limb that he could not use. He replied:

Mr. LOGAN. There is no such object at all. The law was passed without reference to the pensions. The object is just what is expressed on the face of the bill, to give the man an artificial limb who lost a leg or arm in the service.

I replied to him that he had the right to that now. The Senator from Illinois then said:

Mr. LOGAN. He had the right to it except that the Surgeon-General construed the law not to extend further than the first five years. Hence it cuts him off; and this is only to extend it every five years as the original intention of the law was. That is what the bill means, and that is all it was intended it should mean.

He repeated that statement once or twice more, and the bill was passed, with an amendment inserted upon my motion:

Provided, That this act shall be subject to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to increase pensions in certain cases," approved June 18, 1874.

Now, to show that I was right in my construction of the object and purpose of this bill, and to show how disingenuous the advocates of the bill are, it comes back with an amendment suggested by the committee of conference to the amendment offered by me by the insertion of the word "not" between the words "shall" and "be," expressly excluding the bill from the operation of the law of June 18, 1874, showing that the view I then took of it was correct, and that the statements which were made by the Senator from Illinois are not borne out by the facts, and that the object and purpose is as I stated, to accomplish the circumvention or repeal of that part of the law of June 18, 1874 by indirection and to accomplish this by the report of a committee of conference.

I think it is unjust, as I said, because it discriminates in favor of one class of pensioners and against all other classes who are not named in the bill. The bill ought not to pass for another reason, and that is because it is retroactive. It provides that the period at which the commutation shall be given shall date back to June, 1870—more than six years. But if the Senate desire to pass the bill, if they desire to have accomplished by this method what the advocates of the bill are unwilling to submit as a distinct proposition, I have nothing to say. I felt that, as the chairman of the committee having these subjects in charge, being intrusted to a certain extent with the administration of the revenue of the Government in this direction, it was my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the objects and purposes of the bill and to the unfair and incorrect argument upon which the bill is attempted to be forced through.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary for Senators to defend themselves every time that other Senators think some little advantage has been taken of them. I presume there is no desire to take any advantage of any one; I know that there is not on my part; and I say to the Senator from Kansas now that at the time we were discussing the bill I understood it just as I then stated it, nor did I know at that time that he or some other Senator or some committee had inserted a proviso in a pension law recently that deprived a part of these soldiers of this apparatus. I did not know that; hence I stated what I did. The House committee that reported this bill may have noticed that. I had not, and until my attention was called to the provision which I will read I was totally ignorant of it. The only distinction I could discover between this bill and the original law was the change that I stated which applied to the Quartermaster-General instead of to the Secretary of War, and that the word "person" was used in this bill instead of "officer, soldier, sailor, marine." These were the only two changes; but on examination I find that the Pension Committee in reporting a bill in 1874 put this proviso to a little short bill. This is the bill:

That all persons who are now entitled to pensions under existing laws, and who have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, shall be left in the second class and shall receive $24 per month.

The proviso is, "Provided that no artificial limbs or commutation therefor shall be furnished to such persons."

That is the proviso which the Senator had reference to that I was totally ignorant of. That is to say, they got a proviso in a pension bill in 1874 that prohibited all persons who had lost an arm at or above the elbow and all who had lost a leg at or above the knee from receiving this apparatus. If there are any soldiers in this country who have been so unfortunate, and there are a great many, as to have lost an arm at or above the elbow or a leg at or above the knee, it does seem to me that they are the ones who should be entitled to this apparatus, as much so as any others certainly. This bill does change the law so that the commutation shall be furnished by the Quartermaster-General instead of the Secretary of War, and it does change the law so as to include these particular persons who are made an exception. All other persons under the law as it exists now can receive this apparatus, except those I have mentioned. That exception being put in a pension law, this bill cures that defect, and my attention was called to it. As I said, the House committee had noticed it; I had not.

When we examined the bill before the Military Committee it was not in reference to the pension law, but in reference to the existing law as to limbs; and this was the only change I saw in the bill, and I so stated. That was the only error there was in the statement; but I say now, although that error was made innocently on my part, yet had I known this exception to exist at that time I would have persisted in the passage of the bill with just as much earnestness as I persist in the passage of it now, because it was right then and it is right now. If the Senator thinks that it is right to furnish an apparatus to all soldiers who have lost a hand, or a foot, or both feet, or both hands, and that it is not proper to furnish them an apparatus if they have lost both legs above the knee or both arms above the elbow, then I am willing to say that his theory ought to be adopted by the Senate of the United States; and that is all there is in this.

The House concurs in all the Senate amendments except this one, and they insert the word "not" in that, and the managers on the part of the Senate agreed to it, for the reason that by examination of the law and a comparison of the law we find that all persons receiving pensions who had lost a limb in the war were entitled to this apparatus except those who were so unfortunate as to lose a leg above the knee or an arm above the elbow, or both. We thought they certainly were entitled if anybody else was.

Now a word as to the proposition the Senator suggests in reference to its being retroactive. The law as it stands, section 4788 of the Revised Statutes, is:

Every person entitled to the benefits of the preceding section may, if he so elects, receive, instead of such limb or apparatus, the money value thereof, at the following rates, namely: For artificial legs, $75; for arms, $50; for feet, $50; for apparatus for resection, $50.

This, then, re-enacts the law as it stood in 1874. In 1874 all persons had received this apparatus or had received the commutation money; hence this bill does not give commutation to any but those who made the second application. It does not apply to the first application, for that has already been received, but only gives them authority to make the application once in every five years. The law in section 4791 provides that the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to furnish to the persons embraced by the provisions of section 4787, and we change this so as to use the words "Quartermaster-General" instead of "Secretary of War."

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is a trifle unjust in the argument that he makes when he attempts to suggest or intimate that the intention of the Committee on Pensions when they recommended the passage of the law that was approved on the 18th of June, 1874, was to exclude certain classes of pensioners from the benefits of the law. The fact is that by that act the men who had suffered the class of disabilities therein named were raised from the third to the second class; the rate of their pension was increased, I think, $9 per month upon the representation of the Commissioner of Pensions and a bureau of medical officers there that they ought to receive that sum in consideration of the disability which the loss of the leg or arm at the points named inflicted upon them. They were therefore placed in the possession of a much higher pension than they had before, and the object of that was to compensate them for the loss that they had suffered, and the Pension Bureau and the board of examining officers thought that the sum of $24 per month was a reasonable sum to pay them, taken in connection with the general standard that had been adopted for various bodily injuries. And at that time, in consequence of the fact that every man who has lost a leg, whether he can use an artificial leg or not, applies either for the leg or for the commutation, the Commissioner of Pensions thought that justice to all these classes of men required that when these men accepted this higher grade of pension they should not be entitled to the commutation for the limb unless they could use it. That was the sole object of the law. There was no discrimination against a given class of pensioners. On the contrary, they were rated in the class above what they had previously been rated at, and the object of the law was to give them compensation which the Bureau said was a reasonable equivalent for the loss they had received when compared with those allowed for other classes of injuries.

Mr. LOGAN. I will ask the Senator, does he believe that because a man is so badly wounded that he cannot use the apparatus he ought not to have a higher pension than the man who can use the apparatus?

Mr. INGALLS. Why, Mr. President, I do not believe that the rate of pension is high enough to make it a proper equivalent in any of these cases. The Senator from Illinois would not lose his leg for $24 a month; neither would any of us. It is in no sense whatever an equivalent or compensation; but it is the rate that has been established by the Government as the nearest approach to equity when it is taken into consideration with the sums that are allowed for other bodily injuries, such as the loss of a finger or the loss of a hand or the loss of the sight of an eye. This is not an independent, isolated case to be considered by itself. Of course we all admit that the pension of $24 per month is no equivalent for the loss of a leg; neither is the $8 a month that is paid to the soldier any equivalent for his total disability; nor is $50 a month that is paid to those who require the constant care of others any equivalent or compensation for their absolute helplessness; but the Government can afford to pay only so much; they have established a certain rate, and they have apportioned between the different classes of disabilities the different sums named in the pension law, and this is one that was adopted upon consideration and upon what were believed to be equitable grounds, and for the purpose of avoiding the continual claims that are made for artificial limbs or commutation for them by persons who cannot use them. Of course if the man cannot use the artificial leg, if he is so injured that he cannot use the artificial leg, there is no reason why the Government should pay him for it. If the rate of pension that he receives is not high enough, give him more; but do not pay him a pension and at the same time give him an equivalent for an artificial limb that he is not able to use in consequence of the injury he received.

Mr. LOGAN. I have only to say in reference to that that if a man has his arm off at the wrist and you can give him a hand, that is all right; he is entitled to it; he may make use of that; but if his arm is off above the elbow, so that he cannot use it for any purpose whatever, he can only get the same character of pension as others, but he is not entitled to an artificial limb. Why?

Mr. INGALLS. Within the last two years in consequence of that very inequity that the Senator complains of, in consequence of the injustice that he complains of, they have been raised from the third to the second class. That was why the bill was passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that they have been raised somewhat. Some get $8 a month and some get $15 and some $4 a month only, and on up to $24 a month. Those who can use their arms or legs get $24 a month? Now you add an apparatus that others cannot use to walk about. If they cannot use that apparatus they get $75 a leg. That is a little more than $1 a month additional. Every five years he gets $75. For the sixty months he gets a little over a dollar a month. That is all. I ask the people of this country if a man is so badly wounded that he cannot use an apparatus to walk around on whether they object to increasing his allowance in this way $1.25 a month? That is all it means. I do not think this Government ought to be so niggardly as it is in reference to these things. If a poor cripple who cannot walk a step comes into this Hall and asks for a little increase of pension, there is as much noise over it as if it was a one-hundred-thousand-dollar cotton claim.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] was speaking, as I understood him, of men so disabled that they cannot use an artificial hand or leg. I should like to inquire of him or of the Senator from Illinois what, in the view of the Senator from Kansas, would become of cases like this? Here is a man whose arm is off below the elbow; he can use an artificial hand; or his leg is amputated and he can use an artificial leg. That man afterward becomes disabled. He is partially paralyzed, or he is overtaken by disease, or he gets too weak to do manual labor and go about. He would not profit by the higher rate of pension given to men who were originally so disabled that they could not use an artificial limb; nor would he in any way that I can see receive anything as the equivalent for his limb; but he simply would become a loser of so much, owing to the fact that he had become so much more prostrate, so much more helpless. It strikes me that there must be a pretty large percentage of such cases; and I suggest to the Senator from Illinois, in aid of his argument, that whatever there is in them tends to show that the idea for which he is contending is a just and proper one.

Mr. LOGAN. There are, I will say to the Senator, as I understand—I have not the data so exactly that I can state the number correctly—but I have been informed by those who have inquired—that there are about fifteen hundred persons of this character, called pensioners of the second class, with a leg off above the knee or an arm off above the elbow. It is to them that this applies, and none other. The rest all get this apparatus, or get their commutation, except this fifteen hundred, or whatever the number may be. I understand fifteen hundred have a leg off above the knee or an arm off above the elbow. They are excluded. This bill puts them back and makes some other changes. I think they are more entitled to it than anybody else, and that this provision ought to have been inserted in the law.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if under the present law soldiers who have been crippled in this way can renew the apparatus or get commutation for it?

Mr. INGALLS. By express provision of law they are entitled to artificial limbs or commutation therefor once in five years.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Then I think those who cannot wear them are clearly entitled to commutation.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the point exactly.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the soldier who can wear it is given the apparatus and then $9 a month is added to his pension, with a view to recompense that man, but no future issue of apparatus, then it will be fair to give those soldiers who cannot wear it a commutation. If the soldiers who can wear the apparatus are entitled to an arm or a leg every five years, surely the soldiers who cannot wear it are entitled to commutation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the first act, which was passed on the 16th of July, 1862, there was simply provision made for the purchase of artificial limbs for soldiers and seamen disabled in the service, to be expended under the direction of the Surgeon-General. The first amendment to that law was on the 28th of July, 1866, and the Secretary of War was then directed to furnish transportation to disabled soldiers to and from their places of residence to the places where they could procure the artificial limbs. In 1868 a provision was made extending the benefits of the law to officers, providing that all officers in the military and naval service should be entitled to the same that the soldiers and marines were entitled to receive. On the 17th day of June, 1870, the law was passed to which reference is made in the bill. That law provides—

> That every soldier who was disabled during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and who was furnished by the War Department with an artificial limb, or apparatus for resection, shall be entitled to receive a new limb or apparatus as soon after the passage of this act as the same can be practically [practicably] furnished, and at the expiration of every five years thereafter, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Surgeon-General of the Army: Provided, That the soldier may, if he so elect, receive, instead of said limb or apparatus, the money value thereof, at the following rates, viz: For artificial legs, $75; for arms, $50; for feet, $50; for apparatus for resection, $50.

And this was placed under the control of the Surgeon-General. On the 30th of June, 1870, an amendment was passed to that law providing that the benefits of all the acts then in force should be extended to all officers, soldiers, seamen, and marines; and there is where the words come in which have been put into the bill in the conference committee by amendment instead of simply "officers, soldiers, seamen, and marines." The law of June 30, 1870, was incorporated into the Revised Statutes, and was amended by the law of June 18, 1874.

It does seem to me that justice, equity, and fair dealing, as exhibited in all the legislation of Congress from 1862 up to June 18, 1874, require that the provisions of this bill shall be extended to the officers, soldiers, seamen, and marines, and I do hope that the bill will pass as the conferees agreed to it. I think it is nothing more than simple justice and equity to these soldiers that the provisions of the bill shall be extended to them. It simply fixes the date, the 17th of June, 1870, as the beginning of the period of five years, and during every five years from that date they shall receive an artificial arm or leg, or in lieu of it every five years they may receive $75 or $50. This is a very small sum; it does seem to me they are entitled to it; and I hope the report will be concurred in.

The report was concurred in.

PARTITION OF REAL ESTATE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate take a recess from five o'clock until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me to call up a bill which I have tried to get up and which has been read twice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BURNSIDE. If I do not lose the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. It is only to alter the date in regard to the pavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to make a conference report which the House wish acted upon.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I see no reason why the Senator from Vermont should interpose his bill now. He can have it passed at any time.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me to make a conference report?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 3168, entitled "An act relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia," respectfully report that that they have met, and after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "may" in line 3 of said amendment and insert "in the direction of the court be compelled in any court of competent jurisdiction to make or suffer partition of such estate or estates. In proceedings for partition, all persons in interest shall be made parties in the same manner as in cases of equity jurisdiction. And in proceedings for partition under this act the court may, in addition to the powers herein conferred, exercise such powers as are or may be conferred by virtue of the general equity jurisdiction of the court.

"SEC. 2. That the court, in all cases in decreeing partition, may, if it satisfactorily appears that said lands and tenements, or any estate or interest therein, cannot be divided without loss or injury to the parties interested, decree a sale thereof and a division of the money arising from such sale among the parties according to their respective rights and interests.

"SEC. 3. That in all such sales, unless the court shall by special order direct or require on good cause shown that the sale be made for cash, the purchase-money shall be payable one-third on day of sale, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years thereafter, with interest, the deferred payments to be secured to the parties, according to their respective interests, by good and sufficient mortgage upon the premises so sold, which shall be subject to the approval of the court."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
J. W. STEVENSON,
T. O. HOWE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. LAWRENCE,
SCOTT LORD,
GEO. F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senator from Rhode Island to yield to me for the purpose of having the Senate concur in House bill No. 4085. The bill has already been read, and I think there will be no opposition to it. If there is to be any debate, I will withdraw it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will yield, if I do not lose the floor for my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4085) to repeal part of section 5 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," approved July 19, 1876. It repeals all that part of section 5 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," approved July 19, 1876, which provides "that said pavement shall be fully completed and ready for use December 1, 1876."

Mr. DAVIS. Has there been any amendment to the bill since it came from the House?

Mr. MORRILL. It is just as it came from the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senator from Rhode Island to allow me to take up and pass a bill appointing a joint commission on the silver question, which was proposed by the House to which there was an amendment of the Committee on Finance, in effect the same as the joint resolution of the House but putting it in the form of a bill and appropriating enough money to carry it out.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall object to taking up that bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. LOGAN. I will not object to taking it up after awhile.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate take a recess from half past five to eight o'clock.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to yield to permit me to offer a resolution.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the question will be taken on my motion now, and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend from Rhode Island will not press his motion. I have no doubt he has a very good dinner at home, but yet I trust he will not press this matter. Let us go on and finish the business now, without a recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate take a recess from half past five until eight o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

ALABAMA ELECTION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the late election, August 7, 1876, in the State of Alabama——

Mr. COOPER. I object.

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to have the resolution read for information.

Mr. COOPER. I object.

Mr. SPENCER. I have a right to have it read for information.

Mr. COOPER. Not without notice, I take it.

Mr. SPENCER. I think I have a right to have the resolution for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be reported for information.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the late election, August 7, 1876, in the State of Alabama for State officers and members of the Legislature——

Mr. COOPER. The resolution cannot be read under the rules, objection being made. I objected and I object now. The reading is not in order.

Mr. SPENCER. You can object to the consideration, but not to the reading of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can object to the consideration, but the Senator from Alabama asks for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Alabama can read it himself and avoid dispute.

Mr. COOPER. But can it be read by the Clerk without unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee objects to its being read at the desk. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests that the Senator from Alabama read it.

Mr. INGALLS. Rule 14 provides that—

When the reading of a paper is called for, and the same is objected to by any Senator, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate, and without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. INGALLS. It does not lie within the power of one Senator to object.

Mr. COOPER. The point of order I make is this: There is no question before the Senate and a Senator cannot call for the reading of a paper unless there is a question before the Senate, under that rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama move the reading of the resolution?

Mr. SPENCER. I suppose it is in order for me to give notice that I shall offer on the first opportunity the following resolution:

Whereas it is alleged that the late election, August 7, 1876, in the State of Alabama, for State officers and members of the Legislature, was characterized by great frauds, violence, and intimidation, whereby the freedom of the ballot was in a great measure destroyed, a reign of terror established, ballot-boxes stuffed, precincts where large republican majorities existed were not opened for voting, obstacles were interposed to prevent registration, so that a popular majority of more than 10,000 was overcome and in its place was given an apparent but fraudulent majority of more than 40,000; and whereas the Legislature thus chosen will have the election of a Senator to represent that State in this body; and whereas, if these allegations are true, a great number of the citizens of the United States have had their rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States wickedly violated: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair to investigate the truth of the said allegations and the circumstances attending said election, with power to sit during the recess, to visit said State to make their investigations, to send for persons and papers, and to use all necessary process in the performance of their duties; and to make report to the Senate during the next session of their investigation and findings; and that the said committee be authorized to employ a clerk and a stenographer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to submit on this question of order that under the rules the Senator from Alabama has a right to submit his resolution, but it must lie over for consideration one day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think he had a right to have it read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He had a right to offer it, but objection was made to its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the Chair had been led to acquiesce in the notion that the resolution could not be submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all. The Chair stated that if objection was made to the reading the question would be submitted to the Senate. There being no business before the Senate, the Senator from Alabama had a right to submit his resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely suggest that on being submitted, it being a paper properly submitted, we should have a right to hear it, as a paper which has not incidentally come in, but a thing submitted for the action of the Senate; and for that purpose the Senator had a right to have it read at the desk, and if anybody objected it must lie over for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee, the Chair understood, rose to object to its reading, but as the reading was in order, he now objects to its consideration, and the resolution goes over under the rule.

COAST SURVEY REPORTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution to print extra copies of reports of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the use of the office, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. It is the usual resolution which when presented is always passed. There is no provision for gratuitous distribution, but it merely provides for the printing of copies for the use of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much will it cost?

Mr. ANTHONY. There are only two thousand copies; I move its present consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That 1,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year ending June 30, 1874, and that the same number of copies of his report for the year ending June 30, 1875, be printed for distribution by the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

The resolution was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the resolution of the House providing for the final adjournment of Congress be taken from the table.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask my colleague to give way one moment, in order that I may ask the Senate to proceed to consider the bill which I asked to have considered this morning.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. After this is acted upon my colleague can get his bill up.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] require unanimous consent?

Mr. LOGAN. In that case I object.

Mr. WEST. The resolution was reported on Saturday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution was reported on Saturday and lies on the table. The motion is to take it from the table, which is in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. To pass that resolution now is to decree that we shall give up all the business now before the Senate. We cannot act upon the constitutional amendment, we cannot act upon a very important matter which the President has submitted to us with regard to Indian hostilities, and we shall not transact our executive business. It puts it in the power of any Senator to prevent the completion of any business now before us. We ought to transact our business first, and then pass the resolution.

Mr. PADDOCK. I suppose the idea is to amend the resolution which came from the House and fix a later date.

Mr. ANTHONY. We can fix the date when we finish the business.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to say a word?

Mr. WEST. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I have but this to say. I do not see what the anxiety of the Senator from Nebraska is. There are some two or three measures here that he has taken a very great interest in during the session. He exhibited considerable interest in the passage of a certain bill that I am very desirous of getting up. It is now on the Calendar and I hope we shall reach it. It is known as the bounty bill, and I hope the Senate will not adjourn until it votes upon that measure. Besides, there are other matters. The conference report on the Indian bill has not been agreed to, and there are quite a number of things. I cannot see why the Senate is so desirous of taking up the adjournment resolution at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Illinois what the condition of the bill is with reference to Indian hostilities?

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that the Indian hostilities bill is now on our table awaiting the action of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir, it is. There is another matter I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to, and it is this: Several days ago, at the suggestion of the President of the United States and the Secretary of War, we passed a bill and sent it to the House authorizing the recruiting of twenty-five hundred cavalrymen for the purpose of filling up the ranks of the cavalry to go against the Indians who are perpetrating acts of hostility upon the white settlers on the frontier. That bill has not yet been acted on by the House. I say to the Senator from Nebraska who was very anxious, as both the Senators from Nebraska were, a few days ago to have a resolution passed calling for volunteers, that I cannot understand his anxiety about the resolution for final adjournment.

Mr. PADDOCK. Not a few days ago, but a few weeks ago.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; a few weeks ago, then. If the House fail to act on the bill authorizing the filling up of the cavalry regiments, I have a resolution in my pocket to offer to the Senate which I will then ask the Senate to pass authorizing the President to call out volunteers; but I do not desire to do that if the House will act upon the other bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to say to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that I wish he would introduce his resolution at once.

Mr. LOGAN. I propose to introduce it if the House fails to act on the other bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know how long a time is requisite to convince the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether or not the House intend to pass either of the bills for the increase of military forces in the Northwest. I have a recollection of a promise from the honorable Senator, made several days ago, that if the House failed on that day he would before the close of the session of the Senate on that particular day report a bill to allow the acceptance of volunteers by the President.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have a recollection, too, that the House did fail on that day to pass the bill, and that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs also failed to make that report.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, if the Senator will allow me, I will say that I do not get up here for the purpose of criticising the House or the Senator, but the idea that the Senator should say he had a promise from me to report a bill I do not understand. I am only the organ of the committee. The committee would have to act on it and agree to it. He is making a statement that is going a little further than is necessary. I said then, and say now, that if the House refused to act upon the bill I should introduce a proposition to call for volunteers; but if the House will act on the bill I consider it better than to call for volunteers. Cavalry regiments can be more readily filled up to go against these Indians than to make a call for volunteers and organize them. For that reason I prefer the bill which has gone to the House, and I hope the House will act upon it. If they fail to act, however, we shall take the next best means we can. Inasmuch as the Senator lives on the border and has been so desirous with reference to protection against these hostilities, it does not seem to me that it is the best course for him to ask for an adjournment until the House act upon a measure of so much importance.

Mr. WEST. I must insist that, as I obtained the floor from the Chair, there shall not be a cross-firing here between Senators the whole time. Some other Senators want to say a word. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate the condition of our affairs here, and to show that it is impossible for us to adjourn to-day unless we have the unanimous consent of the Senate; that any one Senator's objection will continue the session until to-morrow, because the Indian appropriation bill lies on the table. It has been reported to-day, and unless we get unanimous consent to consider it we must sit to-morrow. If we can have an understanding here, under the guidance of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that that bill shall be considered, we shall know that we can adjourn. Otherwise any Senator has it in his power to make us sit to-morrow. Now let us consider that bill, and if there is objection to it we shall have to sit to-morrow.

Several SENATORS. Let us take it up now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Louisiana says we cannot adjourn to-day. I have said nothing about adjourning to-day. I have simply asked to take up the resolution in order to fix upon some time to adjourn. I believe we can and ought to adjourn to-day.

Mr. WEST. Suppose somebody should object to the bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not believe any Senator on this floor will take the responsibility of preventing action on the Indian appropriation bill, which he can do by a single objection.

Mr. WEST. Try it and see.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If he does I am perfectly willing that he shall take that responsibility. I certainly have no desire to dictate to any Senator on the floor, but I believe that after nine months of weary, almost useless, session—because I believe there has been but little good and a great deal of evil done—the country and the Senate, a majority of them, are ready to adjourn and adjourn promptly. I certainly think a majority of the Senate might be registered upon that question.

Mr. WINDOM. I have been pressed to call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill, and I now ask unanimous consent to proceed to the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has moved to take up the adjournment resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask if it does not require unanimous consent to take up the report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does. The report will be regarded as before the Senate unless there is objection to its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. WEST, (to Mr. HITCHCOCK.) I told you so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I renew my motion.

Mr. WINDOM. Is there any way under the rules by which the report can be taken up? I want that understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection prevents the report from being considered to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the adjournment resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The idea of our agreeing to any definite moment of adjournment until the business that is indispensable is disposed of, and we know that it is disposed of by the signature of the President to every appropriation bill, not one of which can he sign constitutionally after we have adjourned, is perfectly absurd, as it appears to me. I do not intend to stand in the way of the Indian appropriation bill being considered at the proper time and its due order; but other bills have had the consideration of the Senate, and we have endeavored to get them up from time to time, and they have been laid aside, that are very worthy of great consideration, and I do not intend that anything shall be taken up out of its regular order, reported from a committee to-day, until other matters of at least equal public importance are disposed of. That is my reason for objecting, and until they are disposed of I shall continue to ask that the rules of the Senate be enforced. I am as anxious to go home as anybody else is, but the idea of now agreeing that the resolution of the House with a future time named, as it must be, of course—it is perfectly competent to take it up, I admit, and amend it—but the idea of fixing any hour until we shall have known that the business which is indispensable is disposed of, is in my opinion entire folly. As soon as the business absolutely indispensable is disposed of, then we can take up this resolution and put the time twenty minutes ahead, and if the House agree to it we are dissolved. They would not wish to agree to it any sooner. They ought to reject a time themselves if we were to send it over now, until we know that essential measures to carry on the Government have received the approval of the President. I hope my friend, therefore, will not insist on pressing this taking up now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, that the Senate take from the table the adjournment resolution from the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, and Whyte—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, West, and Windom—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Johnston, Merrimon, Morton, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—26.

So the motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution was not agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. OGLESBY. No recess now.

Mr. EATON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken resulted—yeas 23, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, West, and Windom—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, and Whyte—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Merrimon, Morton, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—26.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until eight o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia.

THE SCHOOL AMENDMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House resolution for the amendment of the Constitution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, the Senate, by a majority vote, has substituted the article reported by the Judiciary Committee for the article proposed and passed in the House of Representatives and sent here. The article sent here by the House declared that—

No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect or denomination; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations.

That was the proposed article which had been brought to the attention of the public many months ago by a gentleman of distinction [Mr. Blaine] in the party with which he acted and very well known to the country; and I believe that it met with no considerable opposition in any quarter. It declares that money raised in a State by taxation for the support of public schools or derived from any public fund therefor or any public lands devoted thereto shall not be under the control of any religious sect or denomination, nor shall any money so raised be divided among the sects or religious denominations. Were this before the Senate I would support it.

I should be opposed, if the people of a State were entirely of one denomination, and that the one to which I belong, to placing moneys raised for the support of public schools under the control of that religious denomination.

But there has been another article proposed here and adopted by a majority of the Senate; and as I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this proposed article I will read it. I invite attention to the various provisions of it.

ARTICLE XVI.

No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under any State. No public property, and no public revenue of, nor any loan of credit by or under the authority of, the United States, or any State, Territory, District, or municipal corporation, shall be appropriated to, or made or used for, the support of any school, educational or other institution, under the control of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination, or wherein the particular creed or tenets of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination shall be taught; and no such particular creed or tenets shall be read or taught in any school or institution supported in whole or in part by such revenue or loan of credit; and no such appropriation or loan of credit shall be made to any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination, or to promote its interests or tenets. This article shall not be construed to prohibit the reading of the Bible in any school or institution; and it shall not have the effect to impair rights of property already vested.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to provide for the prevention and punishment of violations of this article.

I cannot, with my views of what is wise either for the Federal Government or for the people of the respective States, vote for this proposed article. I ask the attention of Senators to the leading principle or idea which the wise men who framed the Constitution of the United States followed in framing it. It was that the Federal Government, which was to be the Government and to act for the people of all the States, should have those powers which were essential to action by that Government on subjects as to which the people of all the States had a common general national interest. It was to be a Government with power to make treaties with foreign countries, to provide for the general defense, to furnish a currency, to regulate commerce, and to have jurisdiction over other matters of like character in which all the States had a common general interest and upon which the people of the several States could not properly act. The framers of the Constitution believed also that it was wiser and better that the people of the several States should reserve to themselves and exercise all those powers of government which related to home rights, if I may use that term, to the internal affairs of the State, to the regulating of the domestic relations, to the title to property, the modes in which it could be transferred; in a word, that the people of each State should have the exclusive power to manage their local and internal affairs as they thought best for their own happiness and prosperity. I think all experience shows how wise this was and is.

It was and is wise in reference to the perpetuity and strength of the Federal Government, which extends over a very wide section of country, over communities living in different States and having different views as to their local matters and State governments. The Federal Government will be strong and the people contented while the people of each State manage their own local affairs and the Federal Government in its action is restricted to general national affairs. But when in reference to these local affairs of a State, these home matters, the representatives from Massachusetts or New York have a voice as to what shall be done in California as to local State matters, the people of Ohio shall have a voice in the local affairs of Missouri, we can readily see that there will not be as much contentment, and I do not believe there would be as much of good government and prosperity, as if the people of each State managed these local affairs for themselves. It makes the Federal Government strong to leave local affairs to the people of the State, because the people of different States then do not come in conflict in the Halls of Congress as to local government and policy, in regard to which they may have very different interests and views. The founders of the Federal Government had the wisdom to perceive the advantage of leaving to the people of each State the control and management of their local State matters.

Believing this to be wise, believing that nothing but evil will grow out of allowing the Representatives of one State to have a voice as to the local affairs of another, I have believed, and all my teaching and experience confirm me, that we should have power in the Federal Government only over those matters as to which the people of all the States have a common, general interest and as to which the people of a State could not act for themselves.

Now, Mr. President, in my judgment this wise principle which has worked so well in the past is violated by the proposed amendment reported to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee, and which is now under consideration.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask the Senator this question, whether the amendment as it came from the House does not violate the principle for which he is contending?

Mr. KERNAN. I answer with entire frankness that to some extent it does.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does to every extent as far as it goes.

Mr. KERNAN. I will answer frankly that I believe that the matter of educating children may be wisely left to the people of each State. I believe that it is a home right; I believe that it will be exercised best in that way. I believe that our experience shows that there is no serious difficulty in its being exercised wisely and well by the people of each State for themselves. But I recognize that moneys raised to support common public schools are a fund to support a system which pervades the Union; this system is regarded with great interest by a large portion of our people; and it is a single subject. Inasmuch as there was danger that sectarian dissensions would arise in regard to the common-school moneys, inasmuch as it was asserted that efforts were being made to divide these moneys between the religious denominations, and there was great danger that the subject of the common schools would be made a political question and sectarian prejudices aroused as an element in political contests, I was willing to adopt the Blaine amendment, in the hope and belief that it would quiet these groundless fears as to the common schools and avert the evils which spring from religious prejudices.

Therefore I say that while I believe that it is wiser and better to leave the people of each State free to maintain their schools as they see fit and I do not believe there will be any diversion of money raised for the support of common schools to other purposes, especially as in many State constitutions, as in that of New York, there are provisions which forbid the application of money raised for common schools to any other object. Yet if it would allay that which I regard as the greatest evil that ever comes among a community, strife and bitterness in reference to religious creed, I was willing to vote for the Blaine amendment, although, as the Senator from Indiana says, it is against the principles I believe to be wise. But I consider the proposed amendment now before the Senate as going far beyond that proposed by Mr. Blaine; and in my judgment, instead of allaying strife and dissension, it will increase them and bring evil to our schools, to our institutions, and to the people of our country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly tell us——

Mr. KERNAN. As I promised to get through in a few minutes, and want to state my views without arguing them, I must decline to yield now, and after I am through, if my friend wishes, I will answer him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was asking for light.

Mr. KERNAN. I know my friend wants light, but he has got a fine intellect and he does not expect to get it from me, I fear; but if he does, what little light I can shed will be shed more intelligently by allowing me to proceed quietly in stating what my views are.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the Senator declines to allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KERNAN. Yes, sir.

As I said, I think the proposed amendment before the Senate violates seriously, in many ways, the principle to which I have alluded of giving the Federal Government supreme power only over national subjects; and as to internal affairs, local matters in the States, the people of the several States should exercise the power as they reserved it in the original Constitution, untrammeled.

I have said that, in my judgment, the proposed amendment would be a very wide departure from correct principles. As to the first clause I have no comment to make; this declares that—

No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under any State.

That provision has my most hearty commendation; but for all that it is not necessary to put it in the Federal Constitution. That matter was discussed in the convention that made the Constitution, and it was not thought wise to put in any such provision, but to leave it to the States; and we have gone on little less than a century, beginning with clauses in the constitutions of many States, making distinctions on account of religious creeds, and I believe they have all disappeared from every State constitution except that of the State of New Hampshire; and I venture to say that will soon be changed. There is a provision in the constitution of that State that no one can be elected governor unless he is of the Protestant religion, and so as to members of the Legislature of the State. But I am willing to trust that to the people of that State, believing that very soon in this age of ours and in this country of ours they will adopt the liberal provisions which are found in the constitutions of the other States on the subject of the sacred rights of conscience. In the constitution of my own State in reference to any interference with a man's conscientious convictions as to religion it is declared:

The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State to all mankind.

It makes no religious test a qualification for any office; and this I believe is true as to other States except New Hampshire. Therefore I assume as to this provision which I have read, the first clause in the article, there is really no need for it. It would be an insult to the people of every State in this Union, New Hampshire included, to say that there was danger that they would begin now to establish a State religion, or begin to prohibit its exercise, or make religious belief a test or qualification for holding office.

I cannot conceive that there is any need of our having a constitutional amendment to guard the people of a State against anything of that kind, and I say it very sincerely, because I realize that if there is a prejudice of that kind perchance it exists most strongly against those with whom I believe in reference to matters of religion.

But I ask attention to what follows:

No public property, and no public revenue of, nor any loan of credit by or under the authority of the United States, or any State, Territory, District, or municipal corporation, shall be appropriated to, or made or used for, the support of any school, educational or other institution, under the control of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination, or wherein the particular creed or tenets of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination shall be taught. And no such particular creed or tenets shall be read or taught in any school or institution supported in whole or in part by such revenue or loan of credit.

In the constitutions of some of the States the people have thought it wise to insert a provision that no funds or property of the State should be given to any private institution, but should be used only to support the institutions of the Government; but this provision under consideration is not of that character. This seems to be aimed at something else. This leaves the United States Government to vote away any amount of public land to a corporation to build a railroad or do some other work; but the United States Government could not under this amendment give a piece of land to Bishop Whipple for an Indian school or church. I allude to him because I know he is the zealous Episcopal bishop of Minnesota who has taken such an interest in trying to civilize and protect and christianize the Indians. While we may give to railroad jobs under this proposed amendment any amount of public lands, we cannot give him a site out of the public land for his little church or for his mission school, because of course he would teach the Indians the creed of that denomination of which he is a bishop.

Let us go a little further. How are you to get on under this amendment? This Government has soldiers' homes; it has, I believe, some hospitals in this District that it aids to support, and some other good Christian benevolent institutions; but what will be the effect of this amendment? "No particular creed" is the language "or tenet" can be "read or taught" in your soldiers' home or in your school for orphan children or in any other institutions supported or aided by the Government. Take the soldiers' home. A man is there who has gone there and is taken care of there because of the wounds he received or ill-health he incurred in the public service. He may have never belonged to a Christian sect; but the time comes when he does desire religious ministrations. He is on a bed of sickness. He has from the mother that reared him perchance, or from his friends, or from other associations, a leaning to the Methodist denomination and sends for a clergyman of that church and asks that he may be taught that form of Christianity; and yet with this amendment in force, he cannot in that institution be taught that creed. So with an orphan asylum supported in whole or in part by the United States. You may say there are but few such institutions under the Federal Government, and I shall spend no time on them. Come to our State governments. Here are juvenile reformatories. The children are gathered in there, the little waifs whose parents are either dead or from some misfortune or vice do not care for them. They have committed a petty offense, the first step in crime.

In the State of New York we have two or three reformatories for children under sixteen who have committed crime. The State reformatories are supported entirely from the public treasury. Do my friends mean to say that we shall put in the United States Constitution an iron rule to bear upon the people of every State that they shall not permit any Christian creed to be "read or taught" in such an institution to these children? It is at war, it seems to me, with all that is wise and all that is good in the State. Go to States where such institutions exist, and there is no difficulty, if we keep this out of politics and act like wise Christian men, like Christian men where each believes he is right and ought to have the means to practice that which he believes to be his duty in reference to worshiping his Maker and means to allow everybody else to do the same and will be zealous that everybody else shall have the same right. In the reformatory at Rochester, New York, there is no trouble. It is a State institution; the board of trustees arrange that the clergymen of the various denominations can go there and the boys can attend the religious service and teaching according to their faith or that of their parents. We cannot deal with juvenile delinquents so as to reform them except by endeavoring to supply the place of parents, by teaching them some form of the Christian religion; and in a country like ours in these institutions the only way is to allow the children to be won back to the ways of morality and religion by allowing the clergymen of the denomination for which they have a preference, and against which they have no prejudice, to instruct and teach them the creed of their parents. But this amendment would prohibit the teaching them any creed.

Take the State prison. We send men there for reformation; and under this provision, as it is a State institution maintained by State funds, there could be no particular creed or tenet read or taught to a man either in the chapel, where they have one, or in his cell.

A man is under sentence of death in prison. He had a mother of some religious creed who taught him in his boyhood the prayers and the observances of the church to which she belonged. He has committed crime; he is to be executed as a criminal; he is to face his Maker, and the memory of early years comes back, and he asks to have brought to him a clergyman of the denomination to which his mother belonged. The clergyman comes to him and is ready to teach him as he wants to be instructed, in that creed which he has from some cause or other, conviction or prejudice, a desire to be instructed in; and yet under this amendment he cannot read or teach him the religious tenets and creed that he wants to know and the faith in which he wishes to die.

Take your State hospitals and prisons. They are institutions of the State, supported entirely by the public money, and in every one that I ever heard of in our State, in every jail, every reformatory, and every prison, the keeper that would not send for the minister of the gospel of that religious persuasion which the inmate wished and allow him to teach him and read to him and have him unite with him in the religious service to which the person was attached, or instruct him in that which he wished to be instructed in, would be denounced, and there would be a cry of indignation at such a violation of the rights of conscience by people of every creed. But this amendment forbids the reading or teaching of any creed or tenet of religion in any such institutions.

I happen to have—and I speak of it with commendation to the State of Massachusetts—the law which was enacted in that State in the year 1875, April 15; and yet that law cannot be carried out in their public institutions if this amendment to the Constitution of the United States were in force except as you incur the penalties which Congress may enact under it. I will read that law:

MASSACHUSETTS.

[Chapter 126.]

An act to provide for religious instructions in prisons.

Be it enacted, &c., as follows:

SEC. 1. No inmate of any prison, jail, or house of correction in this Commonwealth shall be denied the free exercise of his religious belief and liberty of worshiping God according to the dictates of the conscience within the place where such inmates may be kept or confined, and it shall be the duty of the officers and boards of officers having the management and direction of any such institutions to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the intent and provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the discipline of any prison as far as may be needful for the good government and safe custody of its inmates.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

(Approved April 15, 1875.)

A man in one of the institutions named in this act desires to be taught and instructed in the tenets and creed of one of the religious denominations or he desires to have the service of the church he belongs to read to him; they would be reading or teaching the tenets of some creed, and although they would be obeying the law of Massachusetts, it would be violating the Constitution of the United States if this amendment were adopted.

Another law, that I chance to have in my hand, is one recently enacted in the same year, 1875, by Ohio. Allow me to read that and see how the spirit of that law which I submit every Christian man will approve would be crushed out by this constitutional amendment.

OHIO.

A bill to secure the liberty of conscience in matters of religion to persons imprisoned or detained by authority of law.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That as liberty of conscience is not forfeited by reason of conviction of crime or by reason of detention in any penal, reformatory, or eleemosynary institution, or any house of refuge, work-house, jail, or public asylum of the State, no person in any such institution shall be compelled to attend religious worship or institution of a form which is against the dictates of his or her conscience; and it shall be the duty of every director, trustee, superintendent, or other person having in charge any such institution to furnish equal facilities to all such persons for receiving the ministrations of the authorized clergyman of their own religious denomination or persuasion, under such reasonable rules and regulations as the trustees, directors, managers, or superintendents shall make; but no such rules shall be so construed as to prevent any clergyman of any denomination from fully administering the rights of his denomination to such inmates: Provided, That such ministration entail no expense on the public treasury.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

That is the spirit of our institutions; that is the spirit in which the people of the States are acting, providing that these criminals even, these outcasts that go to the poor-houses or reformatories, may call upon a Christian minister of the religious denomination which he prefers, and there he shall be allowed to teach and minister to him in the State institution; this would be in violation of this amendment if it were made a part of the Constitution.

But go a little further. We all know that in our communities, and especially in our cities, there are large numbers of children who are gathered by the benevolent and the charitable and the good of every creed in our land; orphan children who have no mother, no father, no one to keep them from running in the streets right into the State prison and becoming a curse to the community and becoming a destruction to themselves. The Protestant ladies appeal to the benevolent and they build their asylums as they have done in almost every city of our State, in some of them more than one. They appeal to the benevolent to help them; they have collections in the churches, they have fairs. The institution is mainly erected and supported with donations. They gather in these children, and occasionally the State gives them aid or the city gives them aid Upon economical principles they can afford to give them aid, because it is the cheapest way of preventing them from becoming criminals and making them useful members of society; and yet must they go on without teaching those children any religious creed? If it chances to be members of the episcopal denomination who founded and have the charge of such an institution, they teach and bring them up in that form of creed and worship which they themselves believe in. In a word, they make themselves fathers and mothers to the fatherless and to the motherless, and they do by them just what every sincere Christian father and mother would do by their own children; and yet that is to be forbidden. If the institution chance to be in distress, if—as now and then happens—the whirlwind takes the roof off their asylum or the flames destroy it, they cannot receive from the State or city a donation if this amendment is adopted, except on the condition that no religious creed shall be taught the children.

In my own city (and it is a good illustration of what I want to say) there are two orphan asylums that are a credit to any place. They have gone on side by side in the utmost harmony; the promoters of each think better of the other for what they are doing. One is under the Protestant ladies' board of trustees; the other is under the Sisters of Charity, who look after the Catholic orphan children. There is no prejudice there. If a Protestant lady finds an orphan child whose parents were Catholics she takes it to the institution under the charge of the Sisters of Charity. If the others find destitute orphans of Protestant parents they take them to the Protestant institution and ask them to take them. We have a poor-house; it is a good establishment, and it is the only place the county can send the orphan children to that are paupers. There are no means for education in the institution. More than ten years ago it was suggested, and the board of supervisors of the county ordered, that all the children under a certain age that came to the poor-house should be sent to one of these asylums. The board directed, in the real spirit of doing good, the superintendent to send the children who came there, if of Catholic parentage, to the Sisters' asylum, and to send all the others to the Protestant asylum, and the county pays them less for educating and caring for them than it would cost in the poor-house. Thus we have brought up and educated in these asylums children that would go from the poor-house without instruction, without the habits of usefulness. They readily get places as they advance a little in years. Each of these asylums teaches the children, as children in my judgment should be taught, that religious creed which those having the institutions in charge believe and practice.

Our State has occasionally given them aid, and there has been no jealousy and no trouble. When they have been overburdened there has been inserted in appropriation bills a clause giving each aid; there has been no jealousy, no wrangling, but real good, a great relief to the community from the expense of paupers and from the expense of criminals. But this could not be done under the amendment. Each is under the control of a religious denomination—in each a religious creed is taught.

The best practical principle is to leave all these matters to the State and to the neighborhood. You will there find Christian charity among all. The only strife will be which will do the most good to these little children for the sake of that Saviour who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

Take hospitals. Such institutions have to be supported in some degree usually by public funds and in part by contributions from the benevolent. A man in the hospital sick, brought to thoughtfulness by his condition, warned perchance by the nurse or the physician that he will soon have to appear before his Maker, asks them to send for a minister of one of the religious denominations, selecting one for himself. He tells him "I had a little religious instruction in youth, not much; I want to be taught the tenets of your church; explain them to me; teach them to me." It cannot be done; the hospital is supported in part by the State. He does not want a mere general form. He asks to be instructed in that which he wishes to understand.

I submit, Senators, that when you reflect on a few of these things there is no need of doing that which is detrimental to the good that is done in this way. But come to private hospitals, got up as they are by the contributions of the benevolent and charitable members of some church. These hospitals occasionally apply to the State or the city for aid. They are doing good. They are caring for the poor sick cheaper than they can be cared for in public hospitals. Take the hospital in my own city. It is in charge of ladies of a particular creed who give their services because they think it their duty. They started without anything and they have won their way so that they are sustained alike by Protestants and Catholics. Every sick person who is poor and has no place to go to is received without regard to creed; and every clergyman is invited to visit and every patient may send for the clergyman he likes and he comes there and reads and teaches and administers unto him according to the form of worship that patient desires.

In the Protestant hospitals, under Protestant trustees, if there was a Catholic there, though they might not think well of his creed, if he desired the priest of his religion, they would send for him and have him come and read to and teach him and administer to him the rites of the Catholic religion. Yet all that must be stopped because these private institutions very generally get some aid from the public treasury.

This is a land of charitable, benevolent, and Christian people. Say what you please, you will find in every corner of it, in every denomination people who have fervent convictions for their own creed and people who would always give every other person, and especially in an institution, public or private, opportunity of having precisely the ministrations that he desired and which he believed essential to his salvation. If it is a public institution under this amendment, you must shut out all denominations having any creed or any particular tenets. If it be one erected by private benevolence which does a great deal of good and relieves the State from a great deal of pauperism, takes care of paupers better than they can be elsewhere, you may apply to the State, and if the State gives you aid you must at once shut out the ministers of the gospel of every creed, although your patients desire to have their ministrations before they go in their last sickness, to meet their Judge, to account for all they did or omitted to do on earth.

I object to this amendment. It is not, in my judgment, wise; it is not, in my judgment, in accordance with the spirit of Christian charity as it exists in every denomination of Christians.

But it has been said that it applies only wherein a particular creed or tenet is taught. Each denomination believes that its creed and its forms and its doctrines are true. If children are under their charge, they will so bring them up in that creed. In sickness they will have the patients attended by a clergyman teaching the creed which the patient believes in.

Now, I submit that we should not say that all these institutions which get aid at all from the public funds or which are established by the State must bar their doors against every such thing. In this country where the denominations of Christians differ in form and in tenets of religion to some extent, you can only bring up the child in the asylum; you can reform the criminal only by giving him an opportunity to practice in the institution where he is that creed to which he is attached or as to the truth of which he has convictions.

How does this amendment look to a Christian? In our fundamental law we not only provide that the Federal Government shall give no money for any such purpose, but throughout this broad land in every State we are to put in the Federal Consitution an iron rule that they shall not aid an institution of charity because it is under the control of the Methodist denomination or they teach its doctrines to the inmates. Although they are doing a great work for those who have been criminal, who were and are of their faith, to those who are orphans and of their faith; although they do good and are benefiting the State by bringing them up in morality, by instructing and inculcating and indoctrinating them with the views of Christianity they profess, yet you say we will cut them off, we will shut out Christianity and anti-Christianity. I cannot quite conceive what state of things there is to be in an orphan asylum, a hospital, or a reformatory. These charitable institutions will be founded and they will be managed by zealous hands and active feet belonging to one or the other of Christian denominations. They have their faith, and so believing they do not want to protrude their views upon others, but they gather up their own pauper children, their own pauper sick, their own pauper aged in these institutions. Yet you say the State shall not encourage them in their need by aiding from the treasury according to the will of the people of the State, because they teach that creed that makes them these ministering angels and zealous workers.

No city can aid the institution, no country can do it, no State can do it. While they can give to any other enterprise they shall not help with the public funds these zealous people who give their labors and their lives to this work. All Christian denominations have these zealous men and women, and by this amendment you say neither State nor city shall aid them, although a roof cannot be closed over the orphan children who are being cared for, in a place where they can be brought up and where it is the will of the State they shall be brought up, unless you banish religion and religious teaching.

I trust therefore that we will dismiss this idea. Take the ragged school; take any other school that is gotten up by benevolent people. Take the city of New York, where they have schools for these ragged boys that were running to destruction, and where they teach them in schools under charge of almost every denomination. Our State has thought it wise, where so much has been done by these denominations to relieve the State from pauperism and crime and make good citizens of those who else would be a burden, to aid them, and we have done it and done it very cheerfully. Certainly if it was a Protestant institution I would do it all the more cheerfully, because they were educating those children in the creed which the parents and friends of the children wish them to be educated in. But this amendment cuts them off from aid if they teach the child the religious creed of its parents.

Therefore I am opposed to putting anything in this Constitution that becomes a bar upon the people of the State as to what they may deem wise as to all these institutions. They are home duties; they are home objects; the people will correct if there is any abuse. These institutions reform those who otherwise would go untaught for want of parents, that would go to destruction because the poor boys and girls would learn crime in the way they were left long before they learned anything about that creed and that Savior who died to save them and whose Christian people they should grow up to be.

One further suggestion. The last clause is:

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to provide for the prevention and punishment of violations of this article.

If the article stood without this, laws in violation of it would be void. The courts would have to so declare them. But by this you transfer to Congress the questions. Of course I entertain great respect for Congress; but it is not the best body in the world to be legislating on the subject of this amendment.

There will be irritating contention and litigation as to the meaning of this article. It may be claimed that while there can be no appropriation to an institution under the control of one religious sect there may be to an institution under the control of sects united. Then what is the meaning of the term "particular creed or tenets?"

I trust, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted, but that we shall leave the States to manage their domestic institutions as the people in each State may choose. The Federal Government will be stronger; there will be more satisfaction with it, and the affairs of the State will be better administered than we can do it in Congress, where it is so difficult to legislate much, and where from our not being familiar with the wants of the people of the States it is so difficult to act wisely or well concerning matters which affect them peculiarly.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, Protestant though I am, and sprung from ancestors who belonged to the straightest sect of Irish Presbyterians, and imbibing the prejudices which I must confess attach to such surroundings, nevertheless I fail not to remember that I was born in a State colonized by Roman Catholics, in whose soil the banner of religious toleration was first planted on this American continent. For the obtension of religious as well as civil liberty the Roman Catholics of Maryland, represented by the patriotic Carroll of Carrollton, pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors in the revolutionary struggle. Should I, as a representative of Maryland, vote for this amendment, I should deem myself faithless to the spirit of the history of my native State. In my judgment the danger is not present which this article, proposed in response to an ephemeral popular demand, is designed to avert; and it seems to me, to use plain words, nearly an accusation against a large body of fellow-citizens as loyal to republican liberty as we proclaim ourselves to be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHYTE. I am going to speak but three minutes by the watch, and I beg my friends not to interrupt me. I will yield, however, for a question if the Senator desires to put one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question I wished to ask was precisely in point to what the Senator was saying, that there was no present danger of the kind to which he alludes, whether he had read the mandate ordinarily called the encyclical letter and the syllabus of errors promulgated by the holy Pontiff in 1864 on this very subject?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes; but 1864 is not 1876 by a long shot.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It lacks twelve years of it.

Mr. WHYTE. And a good many things which people did in 1864 they do not do to-day, I am happy to add.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that he understands that the principles or declarations of this letter have been changed, or withdrawn, or modified?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see the proof of it.

Mr. WHYTE. Has the Senator read Archbishop Purcell's recent letter on this very subject?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Archbishop Purcell is not the Pope.

Mr. WHYTE. But Archbishop Purcell, I suppose, would not speak in opposition to the desires of the Pope——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know.

Mr. WHYTE. Any more than some gentlemen here speak in opposition to the will of the republican party.

I was about to say that the first amendment to the Constitution prevents the establishment of religion by congressional enactment; it prohibits the interference of Congress with the free exercise thereof, and leaves the whole power for the propagation of it with the States exclusively; and so far as I am concerned I propose to leave it there also.

Called away from this Chamber, Mr. President, to discharge other duties for my State, and fearing that I may be absent when the vote on this amendment is taken, I desire thus publicly to record my opposition to the passage of any such amendment, whether coming from the House of Representatives or emanating from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I have already once called attention to the resolution as it came from the House. That resolution proposed to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to prevent any moneys raised for public schools, or lands dedicated for public-school purposes, from being under the control of any religious sect or denomination, or from being divided among them, and that is all there is of it. It did not propose to prohibit any State or the United States from raising any amount of money by taxation, or from voting any amount of property for the support of any religious sect or denomination, or for any sectarian or denominational school, but the division of money already raised for public schools or the diversion of property already dedicated to the support of public schools is in the most solemn manner by this resolution of the House declared by the House and every man who voted for it a great public evil; not only an evil, but an evil of such magnitude and of such imminence as to call for a constitutional prohibition. Such is the clear declaration which the House have made to us, and every man who voted for that resolution has made to us, of the evil to be guarded against. What is this evil? In what does the evil consist? Certainly it is no greater evil to do this wrong, for the resolution admits it to be a wrong, indirectly than it would be to do it directly. What then is the evil, and what are the principles which would be violated without this constitutional provision? I take it to be this: In a country situated like ours, where the conscience is left free, where religious toleration is universal, where the people are divided into a great number of churches and sects, with a very large proportion, if not a majority, of the population belonging to no church or sect, and where our public schools could never be maintained unless placed upon a footing of substantial equality among all people who may choose to send to them, it would be wrong to raise money by taxation or to appropriate property belonging to the whole people for the support of any one of those denominations. That I take it is the real principle upon which it becomes wrong to do this very thing which the House proposes to prohibit. The principles, it will be seen therefore, are much broader than the resolution; and what has been an enigma to me is that those who can go so far as to admit the evil stop so far short of a remedy.

Now, Mr. President, is the thing itself any worse when done indirectly, by first raising the money or devoting the property to public schools and then dividing it among the various sects for the support of their sectarian schools, than if the same result were accomplished directly by raising the tax or appropriating the money or property directly for the purpose of supporting the same sectarian or denominational schools? If there be any difference, is not the latter the more obvious and manifest, and the one which would naturally first occur to the mind of any man seeking by a constitutional amendment to provide a remedy? What would be thought of the lawmakers who should provide carefully for the punishment of aiders and abettors in a crime, but leave the principal offenders to go free and unpunished? Able and honest minds, in attempting to provide an enactment against a direct wrong, or one committed by direct means, do sometimes from a failure to foresee the various methods by which the same wrong may be indirectly committed fail to make sufficient provision against it when committed by indirect means. But this is the most notable instance which has ever come under my observation where the author of an important prohibitory provision has so clearly seen and provided against the wrong when attempted indirectly and has yet been utterly oblivious of, and made no provision against, the same wrong when done or attempted directly. But such is the fact. While this resolution prohibits the division among sects or for sectarian schools of any money first raised by taxation for or property which may have been devoted to public schools, it leaves both the national and State governments at perfect liberty to raise by taxation any amount of money and to appropriate any amount of money or property directly to or for the use of any such religious sects or denominations and for any schools or institutions under their control or direction, though the main or entire purpose of such schools may be instruction in and the propagation of the peculiar denominational or sectarian system of religion or religious belief or catechism of such sect or denomination. It does not prohibit even the diversion or division to or among such sects or sectarian schools of any money or public property unless raised by taxation for or devoted to public schools. Now we all know that as a general thing and in most of the States the various church or denominational schools are private schools and not properly included under the designation of "public schools" at all.

I will not charge upon the authors or supporters of this House resolution any wrong motive and am confident that many, if not most, who gave it their support entertained no sinister purpose; but I am compelled to say that if I had been the warmest advocate for sectarian or denominational schools and for taxation and the donation of public property to their support, and could have been base enough to wish to deceive Congress or the nation by a mere sham which should pretend to discountenance or prohibit taxation or the donation of public property for such purposes, but which should leave the power completely intact to continue or perpetuate the same wrong directly which it professes, and only professes, to prohibit being done indirectly, I should not only have given the House resolution a silent but an active support. But I confess I should have felt not a little tremulous lest the trick might be discovered, and lest the figure which I had presented as a veritable lion in the combat against sectarian influence in the schools should, by the ears and hoofs protruding, stand exposed as a very different animal dressed in the lion's skin.

But, Mr. President, believing that neither any church nor any denominational school should be supported or aided by taxation or by appropriation of public property, I have from my youth up steadily advocated this view. It is a principle essential to the success of any system of public education in this country, and is, or at least should be, far above all mere party politics, and I am as intensely desirous as any man can be to place it entirely beyond and outside of the field of party politics, where it may always be safe whatever party may be in power. This is a favorable time to accomplish this desirable end, and I hope we shall avail ourselves of it and ward off at once and forever all the threatened dangers to arise from the violation of this great principle. All this will be accomplished if the resolution reported by the committee shall pass and become a part of the Federal Constitution.

I can see no possible reason, resting upon any true or just principle, why all men who are in favor of an entire separation of church and state, in favor of full religious toleration and freedom of conscience and of perfectly equal rights among all churches, sects, and societies should not support this substitute offered by the committee.

The only ground on which the House resolution can be justified at all rests upon a fundamental principle which justifies and requires all the provisions of this substitute; and the principle itself can only be effectually secured by such a constitutional amendment as this substitute proposes. When this is done the question is taken out of politics, but not before.

Mr. President, I certainly did not think, and I am not yet convinced, notwithstanding the able argument of the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] that the meaning of this substitute is such as he has attributed to it in reference to hospitals and institutions of that kind. I certainly had seen no difficulty of that kind, and I am quite satisfied that the fair construction of the substitute proposed by the committee will not justify the remarks made by the Senator from New York; but on that point the chairman of the committee who presented the amendment will undoubtedly answer for himself.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the resolution as it came from the House embodied every objection upon principle which it seems to me can be raised to the amended resolution as reported by the committee, but it was imperfect. I presume by inadvertence, I assume not by intendment, it was imperfect, and would have amounted to but very little. It simply prohibited a State from diverting a fund raised for public schools, set apart for public schools, to the support of sectarian schools. It prohibited a State from diverting a fund raised by the sale of land or by taxation or from any other source, avowedly and originally a school fund, from being afterward changed from this original purpose to the support of sectarian schools, but it did not prevent a State from levying a tax directly for the support of sectarian schools. It would not prevent a State from appropriating money out of the general treasury for a sectarian school; it simply protected a fund already made and set apart originally as a school fund from being afterward diverted to the support of sectarian educational institutions.

Now, does it require argument to prove that that resolution is imperfect and will amount to scarcely anything when any State in the Union without violating it can lay a tax of five mills or ten mills for the support of sectarian institutions? The principle contended for by the Senator from New York is that all such matters should be left exclusively to the State. If it is proper to interfere and prevent States from diverting school funds created for that purpose to the support of sectarian schools, if it is proper to interfere with a State in that respect, is it not equally proper to prevent a State from levying an original tax for the support of sectarian schools? I think the argument of my friend from New York upon that point was imperfect, for he admits that it is proper to prevent a State from taking an original school fund and diverting it, but the House amendment allows a State to levy a tax for the same purpose.

Then the amendment as it came from the House violated every general objection that can be offered. The Senator from New York took the ground that the Constitution of the United States should not interfere with a State upon the question of schools or religion, and my friend's argument amounts to this—and if I do not state him correctly I wish he would correct me—that the States should be left free if they see proper to establish sectarian schools by public taxation, and that if the State of New York desires to levy a tax and collect money of the people to establish, if you please, Protestant schools on the one hand or Catholic schools on the other, should be left free to do that, and we should not interfere by a constitutional amendment to prevent her. That is my friend's argument, that the States should be left free to establish a religion or to establish sectarian schools; in other words, to give the power to give a particular religious sect the advantage of the government and support by public taxation. That is my friend's argument I think, and if I do not state it correctly I want him to correct me, because it is a very important point.

Mr. EATON. In other words——

Mr. EDMUNDS (To Mr. MORTON.) That is not the friend you called for.

Mr. MORTON. No, it is not.

Mr. EATON. I hope the honorable Senator from Vermont will call on me by and by.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I never shall, you may be sure.

Mr. KERNAN. I said that it was violating what I believed to be the true principle to put in the Constitution restrictions on the States in reference to schools. Now, having answered frankly, permit me to say another thing. I am and always have been entirely opposed to favoring one sect rather than another by any appropriation. Hence, even as to these charities, I argued in our constitutional convention of 1866 that I was in favor as to these institutions in the State, if the people found there was any abuse, of having a provision which would require when they gave to these hospitals, orphan asylums, and things of that kind, that they should either give each pro rata according to the number they supported or cut them all off. My principal point is that I do not think it is wise as a principle, though I was willing to waive that for the purpose I stated, to put in the Federal Constitution restrictions on States in reference to these domestic institutions.

Mr. MORTON. I am glad then to find that I was right. My friend says that he would be opposed to having a State legislate for the benefit of a particular sect. I certainly understand that to be his feeling; but that is not the point. It is not a question of what his preference is or my own might be. The point I make is that my friend insists that each State shall be left free, if she sees proper, to establish and support at the public expense denominational schools, Catholic schools if you please, or Protestant schools; that the State shall not be deprived of the power to establish that kind of a school if a majority of her people are in favor of it. That is the important point upon which I am glad to find that my friend admits that I stated him correctly.

Mr. KERNAN. You do not understand me to say that I favor that?

Mr. MORTON. O, no; my friend does not favor it; he is opposed to that kind of legislation certainly, but he does favor this: he favors the idea that New York should be left free whenever such a thing occurs, if she sees proper, to establish Catholic schools and have them supported by public taxation, or to establish Protestant schools and have them supported by public taxation. There is where the great danger comes in. This admission made by my friend covers the whole ground of this proposed constitutional amendment.

My friend says there is no danger. Well, Mr. President, in my judgment there is danger. That cloud is looming above the horizon; it is larger than it was a few years ago; and I might ask my friend if there is not danger in his own State; I might ask him if there have not been abuses in his own State.

Mr. KERNAN. There never has been the least danger in that State, and I do not think there has ever been any abuse of any serious character.

Mr. MORTON. I ask my friend if there have not been large amounts of money given for the support of denominational institutions in his own State, given out of the public treasury or raised by public taxation?

Mr. KERNAN. Money has been given to institutions of this character, hospitals, orphan asylums, conducted by various denominations; but never in my judgment was there any serious abuse. I believe there has been a good deal of fairness in the division among the various sects.

Mr. MORTON. I shall not go into a history of the legislation of the State of New York. I have been reading and hearing very much on that subject for some years past. It is in my opinion an essential principle of American liberty and one upon which the perpetuity of our Government depends that we shall have perfect freedom of religious worship, that there shall be no established church, no religion established by law that is taught by law, and that so far from the States being left free to establish a church if they see proper, or to establish denominational schools at public expense, I believe that the safety of this nation in the far future depends upon their being deprived of any such power. I believe that the example of one State establishing a religion, or doing what amounts to the same thing in principle, establishing denominational schools to be supported at public expense, endangers the perpetuity of the nation. The support of a school by public taxation is the same thing in principle as an established church. If we can appropriate money to establish, if you please, a Catholic school, it involves the whole principle of supporting the Catholic Church at public expense, or if you please a Protestant school and the support of a Protestant Church at public expense. The power to educate children in a particular faith at the public expense involves the same principle as the support of that church at public expense, and the one inevitably leads to the other.

Now, sir, that there should be perfect freedom of religious opinion in our country is essential to our life as a nation, and we cannot have that and we cannot have perfect equality except upon the condition that religion shall not be maintained at public expense and that denominational schools of religion shall not be maintained at public expense. Every sect is left free. The Catholics may have as many schools as they see proper and teach their religion, and so may Protestants—no abridgment of their freedom. They have the largest liberty; but when it is done at public expense and all are taxed for their support, then the principle of equality is gone.

Mr. President, I have heard some talk to-night about hospitals and orphan asylums. My friend from New York has said something on that subject. I do not intend, so far as I am concerned, to be diverted from this great question by what is said in regard to orphan asylums and hospitals. There is a great principle underlying this amendment, and it seems to me it is one that should receive the support of all parties. It may not be perfect in its phraseology; perhaps it is susceptible of improvement in that particular; but I am speaking of the general and broad principle. If the phraseology does not suit my friend, let him offer to improve it, let him suggest where it can be corrected, but his objection goes to the whole amendment. That brings me back to the great admission made by my friend that each State should be left free, if she sees proper, to establish a church and to establish denominational schools and support them by public taxation, and that there should be no interdiction of such a thing in the Constitution of the United States. There is the broad principle on which we separate. I regard that doctrine as being fatal, if carried out, to the liberties of my country.

My friend from Maryland spoke about the history of Maryland, that Maryland was colonized by Catholics who established religious toleration, and that, as I understood, he would insult them if he voted for this amendment. Perhaps I did not understand my friend correctly

Mr. WHYTE. I said I should be voting against the spirit of its history.

Mr. MORTON. Why against the spirit of its history? Are not the Catholics left free as ever in Maryland? Are they interfered with more than Protestants? Certainly not. How then is it against the spirit of Catholic sentiment and toleration in Maryland? If Maryland is prohibited from establishing Catholic schools and supporting them at public expense, and if Protestants are prohibited from doing the same thing, are they not still on an equality, and I ask how the spirit of Catholic toleration can be violated? If there is that spirit prevailing among all denominations in Maryland, should they not embrace the great doctrine that religion shall be left to the individual? They may support it, they may teach it, but they shall not force it upon their neighbors through the schools or in the church. The principle is precisely the same; the right to establish a denominational school and support it at public expense as the establishment of religion and paying the officiating clergyman out of the public treasury. The fact is the first would be the most effective in the accomplishment of the purpose.

Now, Mr. President, if there are objections to this phraseology, I hope our friends will point it out. If this amendment can be improved in its language, let us have it done. Do not let us stand criticising phraseology to-night. The question is too great, it is too far-reaching. I hope my friends will object to the phraseology, if they do not like that; but my friend from New York did not put it on that ground; he put it on the broad, great principle that every State should be left free, if she sees proper, to establish a church or establish denominational schools and support them at public expense. There is a principle we can all understand. We can all be on the one side or the other side of that question. I am glad to have it brought here to-night. If this resolution is broken down or if it shall fail to receive the two-thirds majority, the country ought to know the ground upon which it is placed.

It is very important to have this resolution specific. In framing constitutional amendments the objection is that they are too general in their character. The fourteenth and fifteenth amendments which we supposed broad, ample, and specific, have, I fear, been very much impaired by construction, and one of them in some respects almost destroyed by construction. Therefore I would leave as little as possible to construction. I would make them so specific and so strong that they cannot be construed away and destroyed by courts.

This is not a new idea. The idea of free schools not denominational but general, the idea of a free church not supported by the government or maintained by the government is an original one in American liberty. It has always prevailed in this country. Now it is proposed to give it form and put it in the Constitution. It has been in the minds of our people for one hundred years; but circumstances have occurred in the last fifteen or twenty years proving that there is danger and that the time has come when this idea which has been somewhat nebulous in its character should receive distinct form and enunciation and go into the fundamental law. There can be no danger in putting it into the Constitution, in saying that no State shall establish a church or establish a religious school supported at public expense. What danger is there in it? Why should any man oppose it, unless he wants the State to do that in a particular case? If any one believes that a particular church ought to be established by law or that children ought to be educated in peculiar doctrines at public expense, then he ought to oppose this amendment. But if he thinks that all such education should be at private expense and that that given by the public should be general in its character, if he believes that no church should be established, why oppose this amendment? It is no more for Protestants than it is for Catholics. It is no more against Catholics than it is against Protestants; it puts all on the same level precisely, takes from one church precisely what it takes from the other. It is not a measure of favoritism. Let my friend bear it in mind that this is offered in a country where to-day the majority in every State are Protestants. It is offered in what may be called a Protestant country. But I trust that men of all parties, of all religious, and of every kind of education recognize the importance of maintaining this as a free country in which there shall be no established religion, and religion shall not be taught by law at public expense.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. My friend from Indiana used this language, if I have him down right: "Circumstances have shown that there is danger." I use his own words. Will he be kind enough to say to the Senate in what the danger consists?

Mr. MORTON. Well, Mr. President, my friend perhaps would like me to go into some particular history of the last fifteen or twenty years; but my friend knows perfectly well, without giving names here to-night, that there is a large body of people in this country, sincere, earnest, and pious, I have no doubt, who believe that our public schools in which religion is not taught are infidel and wicked, and who are not in favor of any school that does not teach religion. Does he not know that the public-school system of this country has been condemned and has been interdicted? I am not arraigning the sincerity of any man or any class of men in this country; I believe in the general sincerity of all men, and I am a believer in the goodness of men. My friend cannot be ignorant of the fact that there is a large and growing class of people in this country who are utterly opposed to our present system of common schools, and who are opposed to any school that does not teach their religion. I ask my friend if that is not a danger.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to say that I assure my friend in entire sincerity that those people who believe that it is their duty either in the family or in the school to have their secular education accompanied with instruction in their faith, yet do not want that done at other people's expense, not any of them in my judgment, and certainly not myself or those I represent. All they say is if our Protestant friends prefer to have schools where there is no religion taught, it is their right; we concede it to them; we would not take it from them; but we feel it our duty to bring our children up in our own faith. I state it as clearly and as fairly as I can, and I assure my friend that when he expresses the idea that those to whom he alludes would take from Protestants the right to have their children educated just as they see fit, he does them great wrong. We hold it to be their right and their duty to have their children educated in the way they think right and the way they think best, and we only ask that we should be allowed to educate ours as we think best, in all kindness, without the slightest unkind feeling or dissent about it.

Mr. MORTON. I do not call in question the sincerity of my friend or his liberality; but he admits in his statement the main point, that there is a large body who are opposed to schools in which religion is not taught.

Mr. KERNAN. No; they are opposed to such schools for their children, not that they would interfere with their neighbors.

Mr. MORTON. My friend will see——

Mr. KERNAN. Free education we want.

Mr. MORTON. My friend says they are opposed to schools for their children in which religion is not taught; therefore they are opposed to the present system of free schools because religion is not taught in them, because that is not made the primary purpose, that which gives color and direction to all the education that we give. That is the point. Therefore my friend would have no schools at all unless religion is taught. He would have the school fund divided.

Mr. KERNAN. No.

Mr. MORTON. If you raise a school fund say of a million dollars, then he would have an enumeration of the children made, so many of one denomination, so many of another, and divide the fund. But he is opposed to general taxation for the support of schools in which religion is not taught. Am I not correct about that?

Mr. KERNAN. No. We recognize what is practical. In a country like ours we cannot have all our children taught irrespective of creeds. Where free public schools are taught for all, there they must be free from any religious teaching at all. They must be when at the public expense just like a school to teach mechanics, where we all send, and then we say that those who cannot adapt themselves to that must go elsewhere because it cannot be done practically, teaching the children there any creed. We believe—I certainly do, and in our own State I have often talked of it—that the public schools must be, as they are by our Constitution, schools to which every child in the State can go and get secular learning without there being anything offensive to the creed of any one. Those who cannot get along with them must educate their children in private schools. We have not made any attack to overthrow the system.

Mr. MORTON. If that is the position of my friend from New York and of those whom he represents, we have no difference whatever. That is precisely what we are for, that there shall be public schools at public expense in which there shall be no particular creed taught. That is just what this amendment is intended for. But that does not change the great fact that whatever my friend's views may be, there is a large, powerful body of men in this country, increasing in number, who are opposed to being taxed for that kind of school at all. They will not send their children to it because they believe that religion should be a part of education from the very beginning, and when those people get the power in any particular State or in any particular city human nature perhaps would have to undergo some change——

Mr. KERNAN. Will not my friend allow me? I can assure him that if those to whom he refers of the people in this country, prizing all the justice and mercy which they enjoy, if they should get the power, would never attempt out of public funds, if there was one person who did not want it done, to support their own schools. The thing is not practicable at all, and they would not seek to wrest public moneys for such a purpose out of those who might not believe with them, no matter how small the number, and attempt to say "We will have schools where our children can be taught according to our notions, and yours you cannot send conscientiously." But, on the contrary, in the public schools practically the only way is not to teach any particular creed, and then have that which is distasteful to the conscience of the Hebrews or others, though it is no particular creed. To make them really just, as I have said, they must be like schools where you send your boy to learn mechanics, and those who want him taught anything but mechanics must have him taught at their own expense, and not out of the public treasury.

Mr. MORTON. I can only say that if I understand the spirit and the purpose and the sincerity of the people that I allude to, where they have the power they would never tax themselves one cent to establish a school to which they would not send their children. That I understand to be the ground of the objection now, that they are taxed for the support of schools to which they will not send their children. They will not send their children to the public schools because they are non-sectarian, simply because they are not sectarian, and do not teach the religion that they believe in. There comes the point. I do not question their sincerity at all; but their doctrine is that they must not send their children to a school in which their religion is not taught from the first, and is not made the primary object. That idea carried out is fatal to our common schools, as everybody knows. It requires no argument to prove that.

Mr. President, I have been drawn into saying more than I intended to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the fundamental question which has been opened by the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] is one which he surrenders himself. He says that he is opposed to any interference with State-rights respecting schools, but he is in favor of the amendment of the Constitution proposed by the House of Representatives. That is the attitude, the singular position which seems to be taken by the whole body of our brethren on the other side of the Chamber. At every stage of this proposition which was sent to us by the House after a long period of consideration and reflection, while our friends on the other side here are to a man opposed to the principle of any amendment at all, they are in favor of the practice of adopting the proposition of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I beg to correct the Senator from Vermont. I stated very distinctly on Friday night last in this Chamber that I had anxiously worked for the amendment adopted by the House of Representatives. And yet the Senator says that all on this side of the House, without exception, are opposed to any amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am very glad to be corrected. I will except my honorable friend; and if any other Senator has been unduly treated in this respect, I should be glad to have him stand up and "swear off," as the saying is.

Now, let me take my friend from New Jersey for a moment. He is in favor of the House proposition and not in favor of the Senate proposition. He is in favor of the principle, then, of not having public money that is raised for free schools, devoted to sectarian instruction; but he is not in favor, if he speaks to the House amendment, of having any other public money that is not specifically raised for that purpose kept from being used in exactly the same way.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not think the Senator from Vermont has any right to put into my mouth words that I have not uttered, or to try to extract from my head ideas that he perhaps knows nothing about. I do not propose that the Senator from Vermont shall undertake to state my proposition; I am quite capable of doing it myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, if my friend is through, I will agree with him again. Mr. President, I shall never attempt to extract ideas from my friend's head. I shall never attempt to put words in his mouth. He is the sole master of his individual liberty in both those particulars, and I should be presumptuous in applying in either of these respects. Now, I repeat that if my honorable friend is logical and consistent, as we all know he is—I took that for granted before—when he says he is in favor of the House proposition, which declares that—

> No money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect or denomination; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations.

When he is in favor of that and nothing more, being logical and intelligent, while he is willing to protect the particular money that is raised for a particular purpose in a particular way, which I can demonstrate in a moment to be the sheerest moonshine that was ever brought to a man's attention, he is still in favor of leaving the same State to raise money by general taxation and put it into its treasury, and then give it to any sectarian school that it likes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. By what authority does the Senator state that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I state it by the authority that I must impute to the Senator some little degree of logic and consistency in his proposition.

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will say, first, that whether I am logical or not is not for him to determine; and, next, that inasmuch as the House amendment did not treat of that particular phase of the subject I was not called upon to make any expression of opinion one way or the other about it. I will say further that if the House amendment had contained the very provision of which he speaks, I should have voted for the amendment just as cheerfully as the Senator from Vermont. And now, if he will permit me to interrupt him a moment further, I have felt from the beginning, whether right or wrong, that the whole purpose of the Judiciary Committee was to delay, to thwart, to stop, and not to permit to pass that amendment to the Constitution, which most men believe is effective and quite good enough.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much obliged to my honorable friend for that. He has shown the same amount of consistency in that opinion as he has in supporting the House amendment as it stands. Now I come back again to the point.

Mr. RANDOLPH rose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will permit me to have my opinion about his logic, though he may not think it to be good. If he can sit still and bear that we can both go on in peace.

Now, Mr. President, I repeat that the inevitable logic, that no man has denied or attempted to deny, of this House proposition is, simply treating of this particular subject, to say that special moneys raised for a special purpose shall not be diverted from that purpose to a religious control; and it stops right there. It leaves you to appropriate the general revenues of a State to the support of a sectarian private school or a sectarian public school, and only professes to protect what the House is supposed to believe ought to be protected, public schools supported by the general revenues of a State, from sectarian doctrines, denominational control; and yet the Senator says if a little more had been put into this amendment he would have gone for it with equal pleasure.

What is the duty of a Senator? I had always supposed it was that according to his belief and his faith he would contribute his opinions and his motions to improve and perfect legislation either in the form of amendments or laws that are brought before him for his action.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Any attempt to amend will defeat the whole matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly. If you alter a letter of this delusive and deceptive performance that was sent to us, it would defeat the whole matter, because it would expose the extreme shallowness of the performance. That is it. The Senate, then, must go on the idea that the thing that was sent to us was almost intended to be a delusion, or, if not, it was so inadequate, and coming from a body itself that was so inadequate to the occasion, that it would not do for any member of this body to propose to correct it in any particular. That is rather an extraordinary idea to legislate here. I give to the honorable Senator from New Jersey the benefit of the invention.

Now if I can be allowed to come back to this extraordinary thing again for a moment, I will do so. This House proposition involves the principle that it is until that public revenue, that all men and all creeds are obliged to contribute to according to property, shall be devoted to promoting the religious creed or tenets of any denomination to which it may or may not belong; in other words, that this is a land of equal rights, and that it is not consistent with republican liberty, as our fathers even in Maryland understood it, that any aid in any form, whether by established churches or schools or hospitals or asylums, should be given to the doctrines of any church, or that any man should be made to pay for supporting the conscience of some other man, except so far as the conscience of some other man might say that he would not suffer himself to be taxed to build a public highway unless images of the Holy Virgin should be set up once a mile to mark the length of it or unless a Protestant church with its Episcopal spire and cross should be built at every cross-roads. The liberty of conscience does not go quite so far as that. We must have public institutions; we must conserve the public interest by instructing the youth of this country in those things essential to the preservation of the Government itself, essential to understanding the true principles of liberty and individual conscience and freedom of opinion, upon which alone a republican government can rest. But when any man undertakes to set up his conscience between his paying taxes to support a public highway or a public asylum or a public school, on the ground that his conscience does not permit him to believe in highways or asylums or schools, then he is asking too much of others upon his conscience.

The liberty of conscience, while it is universal in every church but one, is not a liberty of conscience to stand in the way of these great and necessary acts to which I have referred; but it does stand in the way (and the security of the Republic is bound up in it) of imposing upon any man or set of men public burdens to promote the religious opinions particular to sects and denominations of any other set of men. That is the proposition that the Judiciary Committee has reported, and that is the proposition that every democrat in this body opposes in every step in its progress. It gives me great grief to say it. I had hoped, I had believed that, for once in this Chamber, an amendment so catholic, in the highest and best sense of that term, so democratic, in the highest and best sense of that term, so republican, in the highest and best sense of that term, would have met with universal approbation in respect of the prinoiple upon which it was founded, and, if the phraseolegy reported by the committee should have been found to be the subject of just criticism, that we should have had the friendly propositions and observations of gentlemen upon it in order that this great and fundamental principle might go into the organic law with the prayerful good-will of all men of all parties. But for some reason we find that this mere delusion, this scrap of moonshine that has been sent to us, is hugged as if it were the very heart of love by all our friends, and one and every proposition to embody the principle in an effective form is resisted in every way possible.

Mr. President, the public schools of this country are dear to the hearts of almost all American citizens. They have seen in them for a hundred years the very life-blood of intelligent and progressive republicanism. I do not mean party republicanism, as it is now called; I mean that republicanism that gave the name of a republic to this nation. They have seen in that system the fountain-spring of the wonderful and marvelous material prosperity of this country. They have seen in it the growth of manufactories, the growth of farms, the enterprises of railways, the telegraph, and the steamboat. They have seen in it, too, more, and, better than all, the tolerance of opinion that grows from a respect for equal rights; and, so seeing its great fruits, they will not consent to see it ridden down by any hierarchy or by any party; and the moment they feel the whiff of danger they will, as they have done in State constitutions and otherwise, defend this fundamental ground-work of the Republic, and no amount of the dialectics of sophistry can beat them out of it.

But, Mr. President, my honorable friend from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] has said—which is rather apart from this discussion, but still we ought to do something for the truth of history—that Maryland, founded by the adherents of the hierarchy to which I have referred, was the first to plant religious toleration on this continent. Mr. President, with all deference to the distinguished citizen of that State, I beg to suggest that he is mistaken. The religious toleration that began with the beginning of Maryland was a toleration that was inaugurated as well by Protestants as by Catholics. There were immigrants and settlements in that State of both denominations; and in the face of a common danger, and far away from any common support or fountain of aid, like wise and true men they agreed on all hands that each should be at liberty—as everybody else should who should come to them—to worship God and to teach His religion according to the dictates of their own consciences. There is no special right, therefore, in the Catholics of Maryland to claim that they are the authors of religious toleration in that State. I am sorry that my friend from Maryland has left the Chamber; because I am sure if he were here I could recall to his mind the early events in that State, which would convince me, if he meant to be understood otherwise, that I am correct.

But, Mr. President, the fundamental difference shown in the discusion between the Senator from New York and the Senator from Indiana is that there is a feeling well grounded, as far as any feeling can be well grounded, in its present attitude, that there is a particular sect that believes, in all sincerity undoubtedly, that the public schools of this country as at present conducted, non-sectarian, or if sectarian, if there are any such—if there are I do not know it—by other sects than one, are not justified by the principles of religion; that they are wrong, and that it is the duty of a well-ordered state to teach in its public institutions the particular tenets of a particular denomination. If they believe that to be the duty of the state, if they are consistent and true men, when they get the power in a state the particular tenets of that denomination will be taught, and ought to be taught in the logical sense. There is no escape from it. If I believed it was the business of a free state to teach episcopacy, the particular creed to which I happen to adhere, if I had the power of the state, I should not be honest if I did not put that power in motion to teach episcopacy. So, if there be any power in this world that reaches into this matter or exists in it that believes it to be the duty of the state to teach catholicism when that power controls that state, it necessarily follows that catholicism must be taught, and that public schools will be compelled to teach that particular doctrine.

Mr. President, to convince you that I am right in what precisely this issue is, I beg the Secretary to read some extracts which I have made from the encyclical letter of the Holy Father, dated the 8th of December, 1864, and the syllabus of errors which he condemns, which follow.

The Secretary read as follows:

The encyclical letter of Pope Pius IX.

To our venerable brothers, the patrfarchs, primates, archbishops, and bishops of the universal church having grace and communion of the apostolic see.

Pius P. P. IX. Health and apostolic benediction.

* * * * * * *

And those our predecessors, who were the assertors and champions of the august Catholic religion, truth and justice, being as they were chiefly solicitous for the salvation of souls, held nothing to be of so great importance as the duty of exposing and condemning, in their most wise letters and constitutions, all heresies and errors which are hostile to moral honesty and to the eternal salvation of mankind, and which have frequently stirred up terrible commotions and have damaged both the Christian and civil commonwealths in a disastrous manner. Therefore those our predecessors have with apostolic fortitude continually resisted the nefarious attempts of unjust men, of those who like raging waves of the sea foaming forth their own confusion and promising liberty while they are the slaves of corruption, endeavored by their false opinions and most pernicious writings to overthrow the foundations of the Catholic religion and of civil society, to abolish all virtue and justice, to deprave the souls and mind, of all men, and especially to pervert inexperienced youth from uprightness of morals, to corrupt them miserably, to lead them into snares of error, and finally to tear them from the bosom of the Catholic Church.

* * * * * * *

Now, although hitherto we have not omitted to denounce and reprove the chief errors of this kind, yet the cause of the Catholic Church and the salvation of souls committed to us by God, and even the interest of human society, absolutely demand that once again we should stir up your pastoral solicitude to drive away other erroneous opinions which flow from those errors above specified, as their source.

These false and perverse opinions are so much the more detestable by how much they have chiefly for their object to hinder and banish that salutary influence which the Catholic Church, by the institution and command of her divine Author, ought freely to exercise, even to the consummation of the world, not over individual men, but nations, peoples, and sovereigns, and to abolish that mutual co-operation and agreement of counsels between the priesthood and governments which has always been propitious and conducive to the welfare both of church and state—Gregory XVI, Encyclical, 13th August, 1832.)

* * * * * * *

Contrary to the teaching of the holy Scriptures, of the church, and of the holy fathers, these persons do not hesitate to assert that "the best condition of human society is that wherein no duty is recognized by the Government of correcting by enacted penalties the violators of the Catholic religion, except when the maintenance of the public peace requires it." From this totally false notion of social government they fear not to uphold that erroneous opinion most pernicious to the Catholic Church and to the salvation of souls, which was called by our predecessor Gregory XVI (lately quoted) the insanity, (encyclical, 13th August, 1832) (deliramentum,) namely, that "liberty of conscience and of worship is the right of every man; and that this right ought, in every well-governed state, to be proclaimed and asserted by law; and that the citizens possess the right of being unrestrained in the exercise of every kind of liberty, by any law, ecclesiastical or civil, so that they are authorized to publish and put forward openly all their ideas whatsoever, either by speaking, in print, or by any other method." But while these men make these rash assertions, they do not reflect or consider that they preach the liberty of perdition, (St. Augustine, Epistle 105, al. 166,) and that, "if it is always free to human arguments to discuss, men will never be wanting who will dare to resist the truth, and to rely upon the loquacity of human wisdom, when we know from the command of our Lord Jesus Christ how faith and Christian wisdom ought to avoid this most mischievous vanity. (St. Leo, Epistle 164, al. 133, section 2, Boll. edition.)

* * * * * *

Amid so great perversity of depraved opinions, we, remembering our apostolic duty, and solicitous before all things for our most holy religion, for sound doctrine, for the salvation of the souls confided to us, and for the welfare of human society itself, have considered the moment opportune to raise anew our apostolic voice. Therefore do we by our apostolic authority reprobate, renounce, and condemn generally and particularly all the evil opinions and doctrines specially mentioned in this letter, and we wish that they may be held as reprobated, denounced, and condemned by all the children of the Catholic Church.

* * * * * * *

PIUS PP. IX.

Given at Rome from St. Peter's this 8th of December, 1864, the tenth anniversary of the dogmatic definition of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary, mother of God, in the nineteenth year of our pontificate.

* * * * * * *

The syllabus of the principal errors of our time which are stigmatized in the consistorial allocutions, encyclical, and other apostolic letters of our most holy father Pope Pius IX.

* * * * * * *

45. The entire direction of public schools in which the youth of Christian states are educated, except (to a certain extent) in the case of episcopal seminaries, may and must appertain to the civil power, and belong to it so far that no other authority whatsoever shall be recognized as having any right to interfere in the discipline of the schools, the arrangement of the studies, the taking of degrees, or the choice and approval of the teachers. (Allocution in consistoriali, 1st November, 1850. Allocution quibus luctuosissimis, 5th September, 1851.

* * * * * * *

47. The best theory of civil society requires that popular schools open to the children of all classes, and generally all public institutes intended for instructing in letters and philosophy, and for conducting the education of the young, should be free from all ecclesiastical authority, government, and interference and should be fully subject to the civil and political power, in conformity with the will of rulers and the prevailing opinions of the age. (Letter to the Archbishop of Fribourg, Juum non sine, 14th July, 1864.)

48. This system of instructing youth which consists in seperating it from the Catholic faith and from the power of the church, and in teaching exclusively or at least primarily the knowledge of natural things and the earthly ends of social life alone, may be approved by Catholics. (Id., ibid.)

* * * * * * *

77. In the present day it is no longer expedient that the Catholic religion shall be held as the only religion of the State, to the exclusion of all other modes of worship.—Allocution nemo vestrum, 26th July, 1855.

78. Whence it has been wisely provided by law, in some countries called Catholic, that persons coming to reside therein shall enjoy the public exercise of their own worship.—Allocution acerbissimum, 27th September, 1852.

79. Moreover it is false that the civil liberty of every mode of worship, and the full power given to all of overtly and publicly manifesting their opinions and their ideas, of all kinds whatsoever, conduce more easily to corrupt the morals and minds of the people, and to the propagation of the past of indifferentism.—Allocution unquam fore, 15th December, 1856.

* * * * * * *

—Pastoral letter of Archbishop Spaulding &c., &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You will perceive, Mr. President, that in this letter of the Holy Father he points out in general the principles upon which the doctrines of that church proceed, and he then appends a syllabus of the errors of our own time, among which are stated to be the precise proposition that the House amendment advances; and that is that public schools so far as public money goes should not be the subject of sectarian control, and in many other respects that I will not take up your time to refer to.

The Senator from Maryland said that this had been changed; that it was eleven or twelve years old. I should be glad, more than glad, to have any Senator stand up and show the Senate that this is not now the official doctrine of the Roman hierachy; and I pause for a reply. The supposed infallibility of the Holy Father would be a sufficient refutation of the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Maryland, for it is the greatest maxim of executive affairs in that hierarchy, semper eadem—it never changes; and, so far as Iam informed, as a fact these dogmas and commands put forth in 1864 are at this moment the earnest, effective, active dogmas of the most powerful religious sect that the world has ever known, or probably ever will know—a church that is universal, ubiquitons, aggressive, restless, and untiring. I do not speak of it as impugning the right of any man to believe all this; it is just as much his right to believe it as it is mine to believe in the duty of preserving public schools from that sort of domination; but as any other man believing this believes it to be his duty to entirely revolutionize our systems of public instruction, it is also, by the same sign, my duty and yours to resist it by every constitutional amendment and by every law in our power. It is a broad issue and one which cannot by any party device or moonshiny trick of ineffective constitutional amendments be kept out of the sight of the intelligent people of this country; and if we in all our State constitutions, in the Constitution of the United States, and in our practice of a hundred years, have been right in supposing that the very foundation of republican liberty and republican progress was in freedom from just such control as this demands, then, I take it, it is a part of our duty to take every step possible to preserve that freedom. And yet we find here by a strange coincidence of accidents, or something else, that the great body of a party whose very name implies the opposition to notions of this kind persistently resists any step in respect of preserving the fundamental principles upon which the Republic was founded. I do not know why it is. As I have said, I am amazed and sorry that it is so; but I cannot at this late stage occupy your time in dilating upon that branch of the topic.

I now will come to some of the criticisms made by the honorable Senator from New York upon the substance of this amendment itself. He did not criticise, neither have any of our friends upon the other side criticised, the form in which the House of Representatives sent us this resolution, which was this—

That the following be proposed to the several States of the Union as an amendment to the Constitution, namely—

when the Constitution itself declares that every amendment of this character shall be specifically submitted either to the Legislatures of the several States or to conventions to be called in the several States to act upon it. Therefore, if we had taken the blind adoration that our friends on the other side have seemed to have for this House proposition and put it through, we should have had an amendment that would have been absolutely void upon its face, not submitted to any tribunal that the Constitution of the United States authorizes to act upon it; for, as I have said, the Constitution in this particular is absolutely specific. The fifth article says:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

The House of Representatives proposed to send this amendment to the States without proposing either mode of ratification. I have no doubt that this departure from the constant form of the Constitution, which from the first amendment adopted to the last one has been used, following the form named in the Constitution, was purely an oversight, one of those accidents which of course will happen. But I pass from that.

Now, I come to some criticisms which the Senator from New York has made upon this phraseology. He says that we cannot teach the particular tenets or creed of a religious denomination in an orphan asylum. That is perfectly true. Why should we? If the principle that we stand upon is right, why should we teach congregationalism or episcopacy at his expense in the orphan asylum in the town where my honorable friend lives, if he does not believe that that kind of religious teaching is the true one? If the principle is right that one man shall not be taxed for another man's religion, why are you to except orphan asylums from that great principle? The Senator gave us no reason except that they were orphan asylums and that orphans ought to be taught. So they ought. They ought to be taught religion. So they ought; and let me say to my honorable friend that orphans and prisoners and everybody can be taught religion without being taught the particular tenets or creed of some denomination. There is an old saying, perhaps it puts it too broadly but it is a very good saying for the practical operations of this world, that somebody has put into the form of a verse that, I have no doubt, my friend, as I did, learned when he was very young:

O, brother-man, fold to thy heart thy brother;
Where pity is, the peace of God is there;
The noblest worship is to love each other;
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

That sort of religion can be taught in an orphan asylum, I take it, without violating either the Senator's creed or mine. The duty of man to man, the obligation to truth and personal purity, charity, virtue, intelligence, cleanliness, honor, all those can go into the orphan asylum. The great and golden rule that is in his creed and mine, that you shall do unto others as, under similar circumstances, you would wish them to do to you, and that charity covers a multitude of sins, can enter the open door of the prison or the asylum still. I do not think that the good of the young is very largely bound up while they are in the asylum, in being compelled to decide between contending priests whether the true theory and doctrine of the gospel is that of a trinity or a unitarian doctrine, or whether in the holy sacrament the elements show the real presence or only the symbolic and the memorial one. There can be still taught the homely virtues and the right-minded truth and purity that belong to the personal teaching of all creeds, can there not? Why, Mr. President, it seems almost a mockery and an insult to your understanding to stand up here and undertake to counteract the criticisms of that character which were made on this amendment. In the prisons in the State of Vermont as well I have no doubt as in those of the State of New York, some clergyman of some denomination, no matter what, conduct. services every Sabbath or every day; and yet he teaches no creed Do we not here, in this public Council Chamber of the nation, whose members probably represent all Christian creeds, daily from your desk hear prayer to Almighty God, not the prayer of creed but the prayer of man imploring the beneficent protection of His Creator. Yet the Senator, with a species of dialectics which I should characterize, if I characterized it with the happiest phrase that would come to me, in a way that might be thought to be offensive, and I will not do it, but with a species of dialectics which is worthy of the Middle Ages and the school men, undertook to convince you and the people of this country that this prohibition against organized sectarian institutional teaching of denominations and creeds is to shut out from the dying prisoner the last offices of his own church. This amendment bears no such construction. Ingenuity cannot push into it any such construction. Ingenuity may skillfully discuss words and plaster over the simple truth and plainness of this proposition with a convenient varnish that will deceive some man's eyes in the country perhaps and frighten him out of his faith in the great principle that lies in this. No, Mr. President, this sort of opposition will not succeed. The real substance of the question is whether the people of this country desire to protect themselves and each other for all time to come against the factions of partisan creeds in the several States by declaring that there shall be an absolute and universal equality, and that no man's religion shall be promoted at the expense of his fellow-man who does not believe in it. That is the proposition, whether it be in school or in prison or asylum, wherever it be, where an institution is carried on, borne by the general burdens and supported for the general benefit of the body of the people. That is the proposition and the only proposition upon which Senators are called to vote. Let those who do not believe that to be a sound proposition vote against it. Let those who do vote for it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I was one of the Committee on the Judiciary who did not concur in this amendment. I should not have voted for it if I had been present in the Chamber when it was adopted. I have seen no necessity for it. While I impugn no man's motives here, a religious discussion, appealing to passions which do not in my judgment belong to a deliberative body, at the end of a long session of Congress, seems to be out of taste and to be accompanied by no practical good.

I am not a Catholic; I am a Protestant from head to foot; but I will tell the honorable Senator from Vermont what the doctrine of the democratic party is on this subject. Long before this Constitution was formed, Mr. Jefferson, who more than any other man deserves the credit of being the father of the democratic party, was the author of that act of religious freedom in the State of Virginia adopted in 1785. He would have indorsed all that the Senator from Vermont has said, but he would have accomplished it by a different mode. Friend as he was of religious freedom, he would never have consented that the States, which brought the Constitution into existence, upon whose sovereignty this instrument rests, which keep it within its expressly limited powers, should be degraded and that the Government of the United States, a Government of limited authority, the mere agent of the States with prescribed powers, should undertake to take possession of their schools and of their religion; and had the speech of the honorable Senator from Vermont been uttered before Mr. Jefferson, he would have told him that he did not know what free government was.

No, sir; this power is not in the Federal Government. Kentucky does not want New England and other States to dictate to her what her schools shall be or what her taxes shall be, and least of all what her religion shall be; and whenever any religious denomination undertakes to interfere with this great right of religious freedom the free people of every State will find themselves potential enough and willing enough and able enough to crush it. There is our safety. But when you undertake to bring to the Federal Government the power of making the States hewers of wood and drawers of water you destroy the whole foundation-stone upon which this Government was reared and upon which only it can be preserved.

No man can mistake the object of this debate. We all see where it tends. But I hope the great issues of this campaign will not be covered up, however, in such system as this, of in this nineteenth century attempting to go to the Pope of Rome to scare the people of the free thirty-seven States of this confederacy that they cannot manage their schools and their religion and their various instrumentalities within their States and which was reserved to themselves when the Constitution was formed of managing in their own way.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, it was not my intention to have said a word in this debate; but I find myself drawn by a current which is irresistible, and I feel it to be my duty to say something in reply to the speeches which have been made by several Senators on this floor. The subject discussed is a most singular one for the American Senate, and I have doubted whether we were in the Senate of the United States or whether we had not been carried by some mysterious power to the ancient city of Rome, and there by that same mysterious agency placed in the Vatican council, presided over by the Pope himself, and with all the cardinals discussing those great religious subjects that were discussed there some years ago. I fancied that my distinguished friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] could well play the part of an infallible Pope, for if there be a member of this body who does play that part with more self-complacency than my friend from Vermont I really do not know him. Infallibility is a part of his nature; and of this fact he appears to be profoundly convinced. Hence, sir, upon all subjects which may be brought before this body, local or general, constitutional or statutory, private or public, reports of conference committees or the reports of other committees, the infallible Senator from Vermont puts in his infallible opposition; and this has been continued from day to day in this body for nine long months. Now, if he did not believe honestly that he knew a little better than all of us together, he certainly would not have undertaken to amend and improve and change and modify every law that has been proposed by any member of this body or comes from any committee of the body. If he were not convinced of his own infallibility, certainly he would not have the courage to do a thing of that kind. Hence I have fancied that I have been carried, myself and all of us, by some mysterious power back to the old city of Rome, standing upon those old seven hills made immortal by the great men who have written about them, and that we were all members of an ecumenical council and also all cardinals. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, seriously I think this discussion is much to be deplored. I think I know the motive and the animus which have prompted all this thing. I do not believe it is because of a great devotion to the principles of religious liberty. That great idea which is now moving the modern world is used merely as a cloak for the most unworthy partisan motives. The African race has played its part in this country; the negro is for party purposes in a manner dead; and these gentlemen, knowing that this thing is played out, and that "the bloody shirt" can no longer call out the mad bull, another animal has to be brought forth by these matadores to engage the attention of the people in this great arena in which we are soon all to be combatants. The Pope, the old Pope of Rome, is to be the great bull that we are all to attack.

My friend from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] gives me an idea. I think he is unjust to my friend from Vermont. He alludes to him as a cardinal. Now, I wish to look upon my friend from Vermont as the Pope, because I imagine he thinks of himself in that light, and I am not willing to think less of him than he does himself. He certainly has been the Pope of this body for nine months, doing what he pleases, opposing what he pleases, reporting from his committee what and when he pleases, and what does not please him he does not report. This is the Pope; who is infallible! And if in the course of events my friend had been a Roman Catholic, and placed in the papal chair, he would have been the most tyrannical and arbitrary Pope that ever swayed the mighty scepter of the Roman Church. This spirit is in him, [laughter,] and I say this in all kindness and truth, believing that I speak the common voice of this Chamber.

Mr. President, as I said a while ago, it was not my intention to have participated in this debate, and I regret that I am compelled to abandon my first intention. We have heard much about religious freedom, and freedom of conscience, and separation of church and state. Who in this day and in this country would oppose either or any or all of these great ideas? Who in this country is in favor of uniting church and state? Who in this country or in this age of the world is opposed to religious freedom? Who is opposed to those great principles that are now moving the modern world with a power which human language cannot describe? There would be no civil liberty without religious liberty. There would be no liberty, according to modern ideas, without entire separation of church and state. And when the gentleman from Vermont places before the mind of this nation what is called the syllabus of the Pope and his encyclical letter, he does it with the intention of arousing a feeling of opposition to the principles therein contained, believing that those principles are in opposition to religious liberty and to the separation of church and state, when in point of truth and of fact when well understood they are the very corner-stone of those great principles. The Pope of Rome is a religious officer, if I may use the term, and in that capacity he proclaims the truth to the church of which he is the head; and what minister of the gospel does not do the same thing even in this country? What minister, high or low, connected with any church, Jew or Gentile, but what does the same thing, if he be an honest minister? But does he speak as a temporal king? Does the Pope of Rome speak to the Catholic world as the king of Rome? He speaks to the Catholic world as the bishop of that church, speaking to them alone in the religious aspect, and in that aspect he has laid down the great principles of human government, telling all people that human government cannot exist without acknowledging the fact that as man springs from God, human society is of God, man himself is the creature of God, and that all human governments must understand that they move and exist and perform their high functions in this world for the good of mankind, subordinated to the great Being who created this world and all the other worlds; that there is a great divine Power superintending all creation to which all human governments, like all men, are responsible. Sir, to deny these great truths is to go back to the days of paganism; and indeed the tendency of to-day is to deny these truths and retrograde again to the paganism of the time when Jupiter from high Olympus governed the world, as believed by the men of that period.

Mr. President, so far from these amendments in my estimation at all affecting what some gentlemen think on this floor to be the views of the Catholics of this country, according to my understanding of them, they are in exact accordance, every line of them, not only with the convictions of the members of that church, but with the true interests of the Catholic body; and they carry out the view expressed by them upon the subject of education throughout the United States. I will read:

> No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Who will take the negative of that? Who is in favor of a State establishing a religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof? Protestant or Catholic? No; not one in this broad land of any sect or denomination, or whether he has any religion at all or not.

I will read further, namely:

> And no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under any State.

Who will take the other side of that question? Has it ever been applied? Yes. It does exist in the State of New Hampshire at this day, where no Catholic can hold office; but with the exception of New Hampshire there is no test of any description whatever existing in any State, and I would ask who is in favor of a religious test?

Again, I will further read:

No public property, and no public revenue of, nor any loan of credit by or under the authority of, the United States, or any State, Territory, District, or municipal corporation, shall be appropriated to, or made or used for, the support of any school, educational or other institution, under the control of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination, or wherein the particular creed or tenets of any religious or anti-religious sect, organization, or denomination shall be taught.

I do not know that I exactly approve of this thing, and I doubt very much if there be a man in this Chamber who does, because there are so many disjunctive and conjunctive conjunctions and verbs and adverbs and passive cases and objective cases, all mixed promiscuously together, that although I know my friend from Vermont is a great deal better grammarian than myself, yet I doubt if he was brought now before us as a class, to parse this sentence, whether he could do it successfully. I doubt it very much, and I believe it would be worth trying now to bring the Senator out and let him parse it for our instruction. [Laughter.] I am speaking seriously. There is an idea in this thing, I presume; but when you start with the words, "No public property, and no public revenue of, nor any loan of credit by, or under the authority of," by the time you have got through with it the idea that you had at the start has left you, vanished like a dream, and by the time you get down to the period, and pass over all the colons and semicolons and dashes in this long sentence, there is no idea left on the mind, all is lost in words; I cannot make it out. I do not know that it could be enforced; for indeed I do not think it could be parsed by any grammarian. But let us try; let us make an effort in good faith.

No public property, and no public revenue of, nor any loan of credit by or under the authority of, the United States, or any State—

I am lost already. [Laughter.]—

Territory, District, or municipal corporation, shall be appropriated to, or made or used for, the support of any school, educational or other institution, under the control of any religious or anti-religious sect—

If a sect is not religious is it correct to say it is anti-religious?— organization, or denomination, or wherein the particular creed or tenets of any—

Creed or tenets. I think one of these terms is a little broader than the other, and are not exactly synonymous—creed or tenets of any religious or anti-religious—

This is simply verbiage and ought not to be incorporated in the Constitution.

Now the term "creed of an anti-religious sect" or the tenet of an anti-religious sect I do not understand. While I do not know that my friend from Vermont has ever been a schoolmaster, I am satisfied he has been at school, and I furthermore well know that he is a good grammarian, which I do not profess to be. But, Mr. President, I would not object to this thing as far as I can understand it. Admitting I do not understand it very well, I am not in favor of appropriating property, public or private, nor any loan of credit for, on, or, by,—these cases are mightily mixed. [Laughter.] The explanation is plain. This thing was drawn by my friend after dinner. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite evident that this thing is drawn after dinner. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, my friend from Vermont put his pen to paper, he admits, [laughter,] after a good dinner. This is, indeed, very plain; yet it is not in accordance with the old maxim in vino veritas; but let that be as it may, it is ambiguous, and wordy, and full of verbiage, and I think ought to be recommitted to the committee, and if it should be, from my experience we shall not get a report back for a good while. [Laughter.] I know very well that we submitted to that committee a bill months ago for the establishment of an additional circuit court of the United States in my State, I think five months ago, and we have never heard a word of it from that day to this, although it had passed the House. The committee or my friend has squelched it. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. President, I seriously do not object to this; in other words, I am not in favor of voting public property in that way.

But this has been argued particularly by the gentleman from Vermont as if the Catholics, who, as he says, believed in the syllabus of the Pope, were opposed to the principles laid down in this amendment. I tell him that he is mistaken. He is as much mistaken about this as he is mistaken with regard to the history of Maryland, and as he was mistaken some time ago with regard to the history of his own section. I heard him proclaim here with all the assurance of an infallible Pope that the battle of Plattsburgh was fought in September, 1812. Yet the history of his own section will tell him it took place in 1814. This gentleman, infallible as he may be in his own estimation, yet committed this mistake.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But Plattsburgh, let me tell my friend, is not in the State of Vermont.

Mr. BOGY. Plattsburgh is not in his own State, but he was speaking of the troops that went from his State and were present at the battle of Plattsburgh, in the State of New York.

Mr. LOGAN. From Otter Creek.

Mr. BOGY. Otter Creek, I will let my friend from Illinois know, was a part of the discussion in relation to the river and harbor bill. I remember that discussion very well, and I think he of Vermont showed a great deal of infallibility on that subject. [Laughter.] Well, he was mistaken with regard to that little historical incident. He is mistaken with regard also to the history of Maryland. No man ought to deny at this day that the Catholics of the old colony of Maryland were the first men in the New World to unfurl the great banner of liberty and of religious freedom; and history sustains what I here say. The gentleman may say what he pleases about it, they were the first in the New World to proclaim it; not as a compromise and a concession, as he says, but in accordance with their honest convictions. This is the history of Maryland, and as written it will go down the ages. My friend from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] was right when he spoke of it awhile ago. But, sir, this subject has been argued by certain gentlemen upon the idea that in this country the Catholics were opposed to religious freedom because they perhaps were opposed to this amendment. I say it is not correct. In this country and in other countries too at the present day they are in favor of perfect religious freedom; and, what is more, a proper understanding of the syllabus, as it is called, will show that it contains nothing inimical to the great principles of liberty founded on what all enlightened men should acknowledge, "the divine law." All governments must have that broad foundation to exist at all, and he who denies that saps and destroys the very principle that sustains liberty and all good government among men. So far from these amendments being inimical to the Catholic Church in the United States, I as an unworthy member of that church say now what I believe from the first day I read these propositions, that they are protective of that church in every line and word as far as they can be understood.

The Catholics of the United States have been opposed to free schools, as stated by my friend from Indiana, as organized some years ago. And why? For the reason that they were sectarian. Even the very Bible which was used in the schools was a sectarian book, without going into a discussion whether the Protestant or Catholic Bible be the correct one. These schools were more or less sectarian, and, this being so, there is nothing strange or astounding or very remarkable that those who believed in their religion should not willingly sanction their children going where their religion was not only untaught but where they were really taught to believe it was not correct. There is nothing strange in that. Hence the Catholics have opposed throughout the United States the levying of public taxes for the purpose of maintaining public schools organized on sectarian principles, because they could not participate in the education conferred by them; not that they were opposed to education, not that they were opposed to free schools, but only because they were opposed to paying taxes for sectarian schools.

Now, Mr. President, the principles laid down in this proposition are in exact accordance with the view of the Catholics in the United States and with the position of the archbishop of Cincinnati as published a few days ago, and the effect of this would be in exact accordance with their wishes; that is, that no public tax shall be collected to maintain any school or any institution to which they themselves cannot send their own children. It is the very thing they want and what they have asked from the beginning. How far a thing of this kind can be carried out, I do not know. What is, strictly and logically speaking, sectarian teaching, I am not able to tell. What is religious teaching, it is very hard to say. To tell a child that there is a God is religion. To tell him that the Son of God was born and, as God, was crucified for the redemption of a fallen world, is religion. Yet the Unitarian would tell you that it is not true, as he does not believe in the Trinity. We have prayer here every morning; and no one listens to it with more reverence than I do; for I believe in prayer. I believe in expressing our wants and our wishes and our dependence upon the great Sovereign Creator of us all, and I pray with as much humility and reverence as my nature allows me every day. But is that sectarian teaching or not? Who can draw the distinction? What and where is it? We know that the gentleman who prays for us does belong to and is the minister of a church. He is sectarian, as a necessity which cannot be avoided. But where are you to draw the line? To tell the child that there is a God, the Creator of the universe, and that he must be obedient to that God, and that he will be responsible to Him when he dies, and that he will rise from the dead, are all great truths that have their foundation in religion and revelation. Where will you stop? Sir, you have got to go back to the days of pure paganism or teach the Christian religion which is necessarily divided into many sects.

The attempt is made to arouse feeling against the democratic party, and make it appear that it is dependent upon the support of the Catholics for success. I would ask where will the members of that church go after such sentiments as have been proclaimed on this floor? The puritan sentiment, enlightened and educated as it is, will not only not brook opposition, but will incessantly struggle for supremacy.

To oppose it is to bring about the conflict now going on in this country upon all questions, religious, political, social, and educational.

When this Government was formed it found States existing perfect in every respect. The autonomy of each was complete; and each one, the smallest as well as the largest, was as complete and as perfect in every respect as is the mighty government of Britain to-day. The Federal Government was formed from States thus pre-existing, where all the relations that necessarily exist in organized communities between the individual man and the government were known and regulated, and the object of the formation of the Federal Government was only to make from these pre-existing States a confederation, an indissoluble Union, and leaving the individual relations between man and government to be regulated by the States. And among the most sacred of these rights, lying at the very foundation of all liberty, was that of freedom of conscience and the right to worship God according to the dictates of each one's individual conviction. That was left to the States, and was not placed in the hands or under the control of the Federal Government. The attempt here to exercise this power takes from the States that right and gives it to the Federal Government. If the Federal Government has a right by amendment to say you shall not do a particular thing, it has the same right to say you shall do it. If you give the right here to the Federal Government to say you shall not establish a State religion, the same power that can prohibit can also create, and the day may come when a majority in the Federal Government may provide for one. The extent of power is the same. It was not intended by the framers of the Constitution that that power should ever be exercised by the common Government.

I will say to my friends who profess to be so much astonished at the position of the democratic party on this subject that it is owing to these well-understood fundamental ideas that the democratic party, true to them and to the rights of the States, cannot vote for this proposition, which is a concession of power denied by all its members. I for one am as much opposed to the proposition which passed the House a few days ago as I am to this amendment, for the reasons just given. For one hundred years the States have existed; and for all this time they have had the power of legislation on this subject; and who can rise in this Chamber and say that within that long period of time any one of them has in any way whatsoever attempted in the most distant manner to trample upon the rights of conscience?

Sir, the States will cease to have control of the subject if this amendment is adopted, and the Federal Government will be able to say you shall establish this or that religion, as the majority here may decide.

Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to provide for the prevention and punishment of violations of this article.

Under this clause there is no telling what might be done and what power might be exercised.

Mr. President, the safety of this Government is in the denial of all such powers to the Federal Government. Keep it where the fathers placed it, in the States, and maintain it there. As a State power it never has been abused in one hundred years, and, relying upon the patriotism and the intelligence of those who will come after us, I cannot believe it will be less safe hereafter than it has been heretofore.

Mr. President, it was not my intention in the beginning of this discussion to have said a word, and what I have said now has been without any preparation whatever. I have given expression to my views and long convictions. I am opposed to this amendment because, as I said, it takes from the State that which belongs to it, and for no other reason. I am opposed to it as a public man, as a citizen, and as an American Senator.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes. I have been greatly entertained, as we all have, by the wit and humor of the distinguished Senator from Missouri; but the Senator made several statements and made a declaration here which is of very great importance in elucidating the spirit of the opposition to this amendment. The Senator stated very frankly that he indorsed fully the Pope's encyclical to which reference was made by the Senator from Vermont. He said it contained the true foundation of religious liberty. Now, Mr. President, without intending to enter into any argument as to the merit of the Pope's encyclical, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a passage from it. In fact the whole of it is of the same character. I shall read this extract without making comment upon it. This encyclical was uttered in 1864. He says:

Contrary to the teaching of the holy Scriptures, of the church, and of the holy fathers, these persons (schismatics and others) do not hesitate to assert that "the best condition of human society is that wherein no duty is recognized by the government of correcting by enacted penalties the violators of the Catholic religion, except when the maintenance of the public peace requires it." From this totally false notion of social government, they fear not to uphold that erroneous opinion most pernicious to the Catholic Church and to the salvation of souls, which was called by our predecessor, Gregory XVI. (lately quoted,) the insanity, (Encyclical, 13 August, 1832,) (deliramentum,) namely, that "liberty of conscience and of worship is the right of every man; and that this right ought, in every well-governed state, to be proclaimed and asserted by the law; and that the citizens possess the right of being unrestrained, in the exercise of every kind of liberty, by any law, ecclesiastical or civil; so that they are authorized to publish and put forward openly all their ideas whatsoever, either by speaking, in print, or by any other method." But while these men make these rash assertions, they do not reflect or consider that they preach the liberty of perdition, (St. Augustine, epistle 105, al. 166,) and that, "if it is always free to human arguments to discuss, men will never be wanting who will dare to resist the truth and to rely upon the loquacity of human wisdom, when we know from the command of our Lord Jesus Christ how faith and Christain wisdom ought to avoid this most mischievous vanity.

I have no comment to make upon that passage. If the opposition to this amendment is to be found in the spirit and letter of that passage, comment is not required. At the end of this encyclical the syllabus of errors was published; it belongs to it:

The syllabus of the principal errors of our time which are stigmatized in the consistorial allocutions, encyclical and other apostolic letters of our most holy father Pope Pius IX.

These errors are stated and numbered, beginning one and running down to eighty. I have not time to read many of them, but I will call attention to one or two things that are denounced as errors and are under anathema:

Every man is free to embrace and profess the religion he shall believe true, guided by the light of reason.

That is pronounced an error under anathema. I might read many more. I will read another, numbered 77 in the list:

In the present day, it is no longer expedient that the Catholic religion shall be held as the only religion of the state, to the exclusion of all other modes of worship

That is the seventy-seventh error. Now I read the seventy-eighth:

Whence it has been wisely provided by law, in some countries called Catholic, that persons coming to reside therein shall enjoy the public exercise of their own worship.

That is the seventy-eighth error. There are others of the same character, and it is all in the same spirit.

Mr. BOGY. Only one word, if the Senator will allow me. Although I said a while ago we might have been transported by some mysterious agency to Rome and to the Vatican council, yet I think we have got back and are now in the Senate of the United States. I do not rise to vindicate or explain. This is not the occasion, nor is this the place. Many of those things referred to there are what logicians call fundamental errors, and my friend from Indiana is too well versed in philosophy not to know that problems of that kind are not to be discussed in a question of this character. It is very hard to explain, very hard to vindicate these things, which when well understood have received the approbation of the enlightened Catholics of the world as not being subversive of the rights of conscience, as not being subversive of the true liberty of man, but they must be understood in the sense in which they emanated from the Pope, who is the head of the church. He goes no further there than the Queen of England would go; he goes no further there than the head of any church would go in proclaiming what he believes to be the essential truth of that church. It is hard to explain; I do not rise to do it myself. I will only say that this is not the occasion to explain it. But many of those enunciations have received the sanction and approbation of the enlightened lovers of liberty, enlightened Catholics all over the world.

Mr. MORTON. The language that I have quoted is not susceptible of any explanation; that is to say, it is clear and explicit. It is not enigmatical and it does not require construction to get at the meaning. It is just as plain as the English language can be made. I do not wish, of course, to place my friend from Missouri in any delicate or false position; but my friend has indorsed in the Senate of the United States the doctrine of the encyclical letter on the subject of religious liberty. It is right for the world to know what that doctrine is. My friend asked in the course of his speech, "Who are opposed to religious liberty?" I will answer that in general terms those are opposed to religious liberty who are opposed to securing or giving to religious liberty constitutional guarantees.

Mr. BOGY. I say we have that guarantee in the States; and this is subversive of liberty.

Mr. MORTON. That brings me right back to the point made by the distinguished Senator from New York. He says we have that guarantee in the States. What guarantee have we in the States? A majority of the people of a State can change the Constitution of that State and according to the doctrines we have heard here to-night, doctrines I think that will startle this nation, we are told that the States must be left free, if they desire to do so, to establish a church, to establish denominational schools, and maintain them at public expense. Although the distinguished Senators say they are opposed to it, as I have no doubt they are, yet the fatal proposition is that the States shall be left free to do this. We are told that, if we do not leave the States free to do this, we are interfering with religious freedom, just as if religious freedom required that a State should have the power to establish a particular church, and to exclude all others, and to have the doctrines of that church taught in schools that are maintained at public expense. That is the whole doctrine of the opposition to this amendment in a nut-shell; it cannot be explained away; and I must say that it is in striking harmony with the Pope's encyclical.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I have a word or two to say on this matter. I propose to correct some errors that my honorable friend from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has fallen into. The opinion of the honorable Senator from Indiana appears to be that unless a certain amendment to the Constitution, which he believes to be right, is adopted, the converse of that is to be done by the States. Sir, there never was anything more absurd or nonsensical uttered on the floor of this Senate. Let us look at this for one moment:

No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under any State.

Who doubts that? No man. There is not a man living within the limits of this broad land who doubts it. Is that any reason why it should be placed within the Constitution of the United States? Let me make another suggestion. Suppose the honorable Senator from Vermont should say that no man hereafter should pick a pocket or commit burglary, who here disputes the propriety of that sentiment? Nobody. But would you put it into an amendment to the Constitution of the United States? It is an absurdity to talk about it. There are five thousand things that my honorable friend can draw in the shape of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the principles of which no man would object to; but that is no reason why they should become a part of the Constitution of the United States. My view is this: I would not amend in any particular the organic law of this land unless there was an absolute necessity for doing it; and I hope my friend from Indiana will understand me when I say so. After the results of the late terrible civil conflict it became necessary in the opinion of those holding power that there should be certain amendments to the Constitution of the United States. Previous to that war slavery existed. By the logic of the war it was destroyed, and therefore it seemed to be proper that there should be certain amendments to the Constitution. They were adopted and have become a part of the organic law of the land.

What is the necessity here for this amendment? No man yet has given any reason for it. I ask for a reason. No reason has been given and no reason can be given. My honorable friend from Indiana says the man who does not vote for this amendment is opposed to the principle. That is not so; it is not logical. The difference between the honorable Senator from Indiana and myself is this: The States possess this power to-day, and he knows it. He knows that no public money can be taken and that no State can pass any law respecting religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. He knows it in his own heart.

Mr. MORTON. If my friend will permit me?

Mr. EATON. Certainly, with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator says I know the States cannot do this thing. What is the reason the States cannot do it? He will say that in most of the constitutions there are provisions preventing them; but my friend knows very well that the majority who made those constitutions can unmake them. Therefore he leaves it in the power of any State by a change in its organic law to make an established church.

Mr. EATON. Majorities do not make constitution in my State; it takes more than a majority.

Mr. MORTON. I do not think that the Senator's State, perhaps, can be considered as a standard.

Mr. EATON. Nor yours.

Mr. MORTON. O, yes, the majority makes the constitution in my State.

Mr. EATON. I am sorry for your State; it ought not to be so.

Mr. MORTON. Perhaps it ought to require something more than a majority in my friend's State to make the constitution; but in other States I imagine the constitution is made by a majority of the people. I never heard of a two-thirds vote being required in a State to amend its constitution. Does my friend insist then that in his State constitution that is required?

Mr. EATON. A two-thirds majority? My dear sir, you could not get through with a short session of my Legislature without a two-thirds majority twice.

Mr. MORTON. If my friend will permit me, he asserts that the majority of the people of a State cannot change the Constitution of that State. He says they cannot in his State.

Mr. EATON. I have not said that.

Mr. MORTON. I understood my friend to say so a few minutes ago, and I think the record will show that he did.

Mr. EATON. Is my friend through?

Mr. MORTON. For the present.

Mr. EATON. My friend says, Can they not do it? I might as well say, Why cannot my friend from Indiana commit burglary or murder or robbery? Because it is against his character, his reason, and his sense. When you tell me that the State of Indiana can legalize murder, can legalize robbery, can legalize a system of religion, I say it is as absurd as it would be for me to say that my friend from Indiana can commit murder. Of course he can; but will he? Will any reasoning man in a community do a thing of that sort? This whole business is absurd. Let us go a step further.

No public property, and no public revenue of nor any loan of credit by or under the authority of, the United States, or any State, Territory, District, or municipal corporation shall be appropriated to, or made or used for, the support of any school, educational or other institution.

For one moment look at this. The State of Connecticut, small I agree, representing her humbly, as I agree I do—and I hope I shall not injure my friend's feelings when I say the sovereign State of Connecticut is not to be permitted to give a thousand dollars to an educational institution unless my friend from Indiana and the honorable Senator from Vermont say she may do it. I have no patience with such an argument. In my city of 50,000 people, small I agree it is, there are two asylums for children, one a Catholic asylum and the other a Protestant asylum. There are in those two asylums five hundred children, and the city of Hartford, my city, by this amendment cannot give a thousand dollars a year to each of those two asylums although by doing it they should save $20,000 a year. It is absurd. I have great confidence in the intelligence of my honorable friends from Indiana and Vermont, but I beg to say to them both that Connecticut can take care of its own schools and its own religions without their assistance. We do not require it, and in my judgment it will be a good many years before we shall. That is my opinion.

I am glad of one thing. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] said that the negro was about played out. It looks to me as though there was to be another new thing; that there was to be injected into the coming presidential election this question of whether Connecticut, and Indiana, and New York, and Vermont, and South Carolina, and Arkansas should take care of their own schools, of their own prisons, of their own reformatory institutions. Let it come; the quicker the better. This report of the Judiciary Committee is the particular act I am talking about; I am not now speaking about any other amendment. When any other one comes up I will talk about that. I have not said that I shall vote for any. I would cut my arm off before I would vote for this, because I would disgrace my manhood and my State if I should vote for it. When we come to any other amendment I will talk about that. Has it come to this, that there is to be a new issue in the next Presidential election whether Indiana and Vermont shall govern New York and Connecticut; whether New Jersey, Florida, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Massachusetts shall govern themselves? Is that to be the question? If it is, let us meet it here, anywhere, at all times, and in all places.

My friend from Missouri said what I shall not say or admit. He said that there was left to the States this right. I do not use that language? I say this right belongs to the States. It was not left to them; it belongs to them, and they have not given it to any other government. That is the way I put it. It is a State right for Connecticut to determine what she shall do with regard to this matter. She has not given it to the Federal Government. It is hers, one of her sovereign rights. I represent in part the State which was represented in the federal convention by Roger Sherman and Oliver Ellsworth. They said in that convention that the State of Connecticut was sovereign, and I shall not myself, to use a modern but common phrase, "go back" upon what they said. The argument is a false one. I do not use the term "false," as my friend from Indiana well knows, for the purpose of irritation; but the argument is a false one when any Senator asserts that a Senator who is not in favor of this proposition is in favor of the opposite of the proposition. "That won't do," as my friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] says; that won't hold water; there are "too many holes in that skimmer."

I simply say with regard to this proposed amendment that I am opposed to it because it interferes with the rights of the States; that is all. The States will determine when they come to legislate upon this matter. When any man says that I am in favor of the converse of this proposition because I will not vote for it he says what is not true. It will not do for any Senator to say it in my presence, because I am opposed to any State making a law respecting an establishment of religion. In my State I will take care that they do not make any such law; and I do not want the honorable Senator from Indiana to take care of Connecticut. I will take care of that myself. Let him take care of his own State. I think he will have as much as he can do to take care of it during the coming election.

Next, no State is to make any law prohibiting the free exercise of religion. Where is the Senator who dares to stand on this floor and say to me, or any other Senator, that because I oppose this proposition and oppose the giving of this power to the Federal Government I am in favor of the States doing that? It will not do. I am opposed to any State making a law establishing religion; I am opposed to any State prohibiting the free exercise of any religion; and I do not require the Senate or the Congress of the United States to assist me in taking care of the State of Connecticut in that regard. We have got on for a hundred years without it, and I beg leave to say that we shall get along for another hundred years without it. I am very much inclined to the opinion, and therefore being inclined to the opinion I must express it—I hope I am wrong about it—that this whole matter is brought up as an election dodge.

Mr. HARVEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him where this question comes from?

Mr. EATON. I do not know, nor care.

Mr. HARVEY. Did it not come from the House of Representatives?

Mr. EATON. It came from James G. Blaine. Did you ever hear of him?

Mr. HARVEY. Did it not also come from the democratic House of Representatives?

Mr. EATON. Not this "creetur." This whole business originated with Hon. James G. Blaine. Did you ever hear of him? It was one of his dodges to get a nomination, and I wish he had got it. I have been sorry ever since that he did not; and you have been glad ever since.

Mr. HARVEY. Was he able to dictate to the democratic House of Representatives?

Mr. EATON. I am not able to say what Mr. Blaine could or could not do. He has done a great many things in this world that I do not want to talk about.

Mr. HARVEY. This measure comes to us with the sanction of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EATON. No; I beg your pardon. This comes to us from the honorable Senator from Vermont. I am not talking about anything else. I will come to that by and by. I am talking about what the honorable Senator from Vermont has brought into the Senate.

Mr. HARVEY. The very language on which the Senator has just been commenting is in the original resolution.

Mr. EATON. Is it possible! Very likely. I have not read it; I am glad my friend has.

Mr. HARVEY. I had the impression that the Senator had not read it.

Mr. EATON. This came from my friend from Vermont. It is very good reading, but I have not got through with it yet.

And no such particular creed or tenets shall be read or taught in any school or institution supported in whole or in part by such revenue or loan of credit; and no such appropriation or loan of credit shall be made to any religious or anti-religious sect—

we have not any of those in my State—organization, or denomination, or to promote its interests or tenets. This article shall not be construed to prohibit the reading of the Bible in any school or institution.

I should like to ask which Bible; whether it is the Bible of James I or what is called the Douay Bible? This whole business is a partisan trick put upon the Senate of the United States. There is not a single member of the Senate—I do not except my friend from Kansas, I do not except my friend from Indiana, I do not except my friend from Vermont—there is not one single Senator on this floor who entertains the slightest idea that any State in this Union has any intention to originate a system of religion. No Senator dare rise in his place on his personal responsibility as a Senator and say so. If he will, I should like to hear him. Is there any danger that Indiana will do it? Is there any danger that Vermont will do it? Is there any danger that Massachusetts will do it? Is there any danger that North Carolina, or Delaware, or Tennessee, or Florida, or New York, or New Jersey will do it? Not one single Senator dare rise in his place and say any such thing. If there is one, I would be very glad to have him do it now, and I will yield the floor. No such gentleman has presented himself on this floor; and if he does hereafter, hereafter we can talk about it. Nobody has yet; and therefore as no one has, I will assume that I am right; and if I am right, then why is this thing here? It is here to do a little political business that it cannot accomplish. I am very glad to see it for one; I am very happy to see it. My honorable friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPENCER] will be very apt to go with me on this question. As he will not be able to get telegrams from the two republican chairmen of committees in the State of Alabama, I think he will vote with me on this question.

My friend from Vermont says that every democrat opposes this proposition. Why should not every democrat oppose a proposition of this character? No reason has yet been given for supporting it. When one is given I will try to answer it. No reason has yet been given by the honorable Senator from Vermont, who is the putative father of this child, why it should be adopted. If any Senator can give a reason I should like to hear it. Every democrat certainly will oppose it, because he opposes it on democratic grounds, and those grounds are that this whole business belongs not to the Federal Government but to the States of the Union. Whenever any Senator gives a reason for this, I will try, if nobody else does, to answer that reason.

One word and only a word more. My honorable from Vermont is out of his seat. He asserted a certain fact. That fact which he asserted has been denied. I desire to re-assert that fact, that the first proposition which was ever made on this continent for the free exercise of religion was made by Charles Calvert in the colony of Maryland, and Charles Calvert was what I am not, a Catholic. That is the truth, and that is the history of the country. I came from Connecticut, what is called a puritan State, and that is no particular reason so far as I know why I should not tell the truth.

I did not rise here to-night to talk about the respective views of and differences between the Protestant and Catholic religions. Permit me to say, Mr. President, what you as a Michigan man know better than I, that the religion of our Lord was carried all through the Northwest by Catholics. Starting from Quebec and Montreal, all through the Indian tribes one hundred and fifty years ago the religion of Jesus was taught by the disciples of Rome. The puritan taught the religion of God as he understood it in New England; the Catholic as he understood it in Maryland; another class in New York; and another still in New Jersey, and the Catholic again in Louisiana. God forbid that I should rise here in my place as an American Senator to talk about the differences between the religious denominations and the religious creeds. I scorn to do it. No good has come to the people of the world by doing that. I shall never forget, whatever the errors of the Catholic Church are or may have been, that for fifteen hundred years it was the only form of the Christian religion known to man; and, right or wrong—I do not speak of it in that way; I should scorn myself to make an argument about it—upon it depends the salvation of many hundreds of millions of human beings. It will not do for the Senator from Vermont to tell me or to tell anybody else that the Catholic religion is to be stamped under foot by the people of the United States. I am not a Catholic; my ancestors were not such; but I thank God for one thing, and that is this: I recognize the great good that the Catholic people have done in my own town, in my own State, and therefore I stand here, a representative of puritan Connecticut, to defend the action of the Catholic religionists in my State. They have done well. I have nothing to do with their religion. They will take care of that, and I will take care of mine. I do not ask them to support me; they do not ask me to support them. Let us not have any quarrel on this subject; and therefore I would hope almost to a man that we should vote down this amendment of the honorable Senator from Vermont; and when we come to another amendment it will be time enough to talk about that.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, if anybody has attacked the Catholic religion here to-night I have not heard it. The Senator's defense of it I think was entirely gratuitous, and I doubt whether he will get many thanks for it even from them. But it is a little extraordinary to hear my friend from Connecticut charging the presence of this proposition here to-night as a republican trick, a partisan trick, a thing that we have brought in here, lugged in by the heels, for the purpose of making a new issue. How did this get here? A resolution came from the House of Representatives, which has nearly a two-thirds democratic majority, and it received in that body 166 out of 171 votes.

Mr. EATON. I beg to suggest to my honorable friend that I know that fact; but that he is not entitled to speak of the action of the House of Representatives here.

Mr. MORTON. I am entitled to speak of it. I am entitled to speak of the fact that this resolution came here from the House of Representatives, having passed nearly unanimously, and that we were bound to consider it. We could not lay it upon our table and say we would not consider it. It was our duty to consider it whether we wanted to do it or not, and if we were bound to consider it, the question was whether we should consider it with a view to perfect it, if it required perfecting in our opinion. We have amended it; and notwithstanding this comes here now in this way my friend forgets all about it; he slaps his friends in the House in the face and says the whole thing is wrong from beginning to end, and lays the responsibility upon us.

Mr. EATON. I have not said one word about that, and I think the gentleman ought not to misrepresent me. I will take care of the other when I come to it. What I said was this: That I was now dealing with what the Senator from Vermont has offered us. I will take care of the other matter when I come to it.

Mr. MORTON. I have come to the other matter.

Mr. EATON. This is not the House resolution at all.

Mr. MORTON. It is not the House resolution, but it is an amendment of it.

Mr. EATON. O, no; not an amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I will yield to my friend from Connecticut if he has any thing to say. When it has been brought here in this way my friend forgets even that there is a House. In his great anxiety to assault the republican party he says we are responsible for the whole thing; and he says he bases his opposition to it upon democratic grounds; that the whole business belongs to the States; that we have not anything to do with it; right in the face of the fact that nearly every democrat in the House voted for the resolution, denying the States the power to take the school fund and give it to sectarian schools.

Mr. EATON. One moment. They have done no such thing. The States have done no such thing, and the Senator from Indiana knows it.

Mr. MORTON. I did not say the States.

Mr. EATON. The House has advised that a certain amendment to the Constitution should be made; that is all, and that it should be submitted to the States.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. That is just what we have done.

Mr. MORTON. That is about all. We have shown what the House had done. I did not say that the States had done it. My friend is slightly mixed in his assertions.

Mr. EATON. Not much; he is not.

Mr. MORTON. The House sent us a resolution denying to the States the power to take the school fund and appropriate it to sectarian purposes. We have amended it, and say they have not only no right to do that, but that they shall not levy a tax for that purpose and shall not make an appropriation.

Mr. EATON. Will the Senator allow me once more?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. The House have denied no such power to the States. The Senator from Indiana is a lawyer, and the Senator knows they have not denied it. They have simply submitted to the States that they should adopt a certain thing; they have denied nothing.

Mr. MORTON. I suppose my friend is about right. We have not denied it to the States and we shall not until it comes to be adopted; but we have proposed to the States an amendment to the Constitution which does deny to them these powers. The House says that the States shall not have the power to take the school-fund and use it. We propose to extend it and say neither shall they have the power to levy a tax for that purpose, and go into some further detail, perfecting it and carrying out the same idea. My friend from Connecticut says it is all wrong; that the whole business belongs to the States; that it is a mere republican trick which has been brought here for partisan purposes. My friend says we want to make a new issue. He ought to have said that his democratic friends want to make a new issue. It stands just about this way: that for the purpose of meeting a strong feeling throughout the nation, for the purpose of allaying a great fear, a proposition is made to amend the Constitution which, at first glance, seems to accomplish the purpose, but on examination it is found not to accomplish the purpose, but is in effect a fraud and a sham, and when we try to amend it and make it a thing of substance and to cover the whole ground we are told that it is all wrong; that the whole matter belongs to the States.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Who decides that the amendment offered by the House is a fraud and a sham?

Mr. MORTON. Does my friend want an answer?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. For one I will undertake to decide it, so far as I am concerned. That is to say, I give my opinion that the effect of it is a mere sham; that while professing to protect the public against sectarian schools or the appropriation of public money to carry them on it simply prevents the application of a school fund raised for that purpose and leaves each State at liberty to levy a tax for that purpose. In that respect it is a sham.

Mr. EATON. If my friend will allow me, I agree with him. I think that is a sham and all the others frauds.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator agrees that it is a sham?

Mr. EATON. And all the rest are frauds.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Connecticut has brought me to it, and now let me state this thing very fully. This resolution as it came to us is for political purposes. There is not a doubt about it. It is to meet a strong feeling existing throughout the United States, but it is to meet it by false pretenses. While pretending to guard the nation against this great danger it does not in effect do it. It simply keeps the States from taking an established school fund, but leaves them to tax the people from year to year for the purpose of supporting sectarian schools. We might as well understand this thing. I did not intend to say so much, but my friend has been so persistent in saying that it is a republican trick, a sham, that I prefer now to state the matter very fully and strongly. It was manufactured and sent here for a political purpose, and that was to make the impression that our democratic friends were in favor of free schools and of protecting them in their public character. It was intended to make that impression, but when it is shown that it does not have that effect and we bring it out in its true character and expose this attempt which has been made, then we are told that the whole thing belongs to the States; that we have no business with it; that we are robbing the States of their rights. How robbing the States? This cannot become a part of the fundamental law unless three-fourths of the States agree to it. We cannot take the power from the States by passing it here. Three-fourths of the States have to agree to it, and when they do it, it becomes the law. Our Constitution provided that we might amend the Constitution by the consent or approbation of three-fourths of the States, and this is simply following the line prescribed by the Constitution itself. If the States agree to it and give up this power it is all right. They have nobody to blame but themselves. If three-fourths of them agree to it, then it becomes the law of the land, just like any other constitutional amendment. Why talk about robbing the States? Robbing them of what? Robbing them of the power to tax the people of the State for the support of sectarian schools? That is the robbery, is it?

Mr. EATON. No.

Mr. MORTON. Robbing them of the power to establish a church? That is the robbery, is it?

Mr. EATON. No.

Mr. MORTON. My friend said we wanted to do it.

Mr. EATON. If the gentleman will permit me, he ought not to misrepresent me. Will he permit me to set him right?

Mr. MORTON. O, certainly.

Mr. EATON. I have said this over and over again: that the States shall determine, not that you are to determine it; not that the States will or will not be robbed, but that it is not your business as one of the Senators from Indiana to talk about this matter at all. While I am up, as the Senator gave me the floor, I beg to ask him if every one of the republican Representatives did not vote for the very amendment that he is now talking about.

Mr. MORTON. I presume they did. They voted for it in the shape in which a democratic committee presented it to the House; but the Senator himself, in his desire to hit the republicans, is hitting his own political friends. This is in keeping with the practice of the democratic party throughout the country. Here is a proposition that comes to us by the action of the democratic House. We are bound to consider it; but when it comes here it is thrown up to us that we brought it here, that it is a republican trick. It is just like the talk about the debt and about taxation. These things were brought about by the rebellion; they are the consequences of the action of the democratic party; but they are held up as being a crime and the consequence of republican action.

Mr. EATON. I do wish the Senator would not mix up the rebellion with this matter.

Mr. MORTON. My friend said we wanted a new issue. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] said the nigger was killed. I think that was his language.

Mr. EATON. Dead.

Mr. MORTON. No; he said he was killed. Well, they have killed a good many of them, but they have not killed them all.

Mr. EATON. No matter; he came pretty near it; but he said dead. It is the same as killed.

Mr. MORTON. I think the desire to change the issue perhaps belongs more to the other side. Allow me to state what I understand to be the whole question. The House sends a resolution here which if it becomes a part of the law prohibits the States from taking a school fund, already dedicated and set apart, and appropriating it to the support of sectarian schools. We amended that by also prohibiting the States from levying a tax for that purpose or from appropriating money out of the general Treasury for the same purpose, and going into some details for the purpose of perfecting it. We are trying just as we would upon any other measure to perfect a proposition. We assume that it came here in good faith. We wanted to make it better and cover the ground. My friend admits, and he cannot help admitting, that as it came here it is grossly imperfect; it amounts to but very little. We have tried to improve it, but now the opposition to-night comes upon the broad ground that the whole matter belongs to the States, coming as strongly against the House proposition as against the amendment of the Judiciary Committee. My friend from Missouri announces a doctrine here to-night in good faith and full of intelligence which strikes at the very basis and existence of the principles of the nation. There can be but one reason that I can understand for opposing this amendment, and that is that the States shall be left with power if they see proper to establish a church and tax the people for the support of sectarian schools. The amendment only prohibits them from doing that thing. Is it right, is it good policy, is it consistent with American liberty to prohibit the States from doing that thing? I think that it is. Those who oppose it must do it upon the ground that the States ought to have that liberty, that it may be their interest, it may be their feeling, some time, to exercise that power. I feel that in this matter we are entirely right, and that our opponents, as they have been upon every one of these constitutional amendments, are entirely wrong.

My friend said a while ago that the logic of the war was to destroy slavery, and then it was natural and proper that we should put an amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery. So it was; but that was opposed by the democratic party from the hour of its introduction here up to this very time. It was right; it was proper; but it was opposed, just as this thing is opposed; and so was the fourteenth amendment, and so the fifteenth. This is just as clearly right as either of those three amendments, and there can be no argument or debate against the justice of this amendment. It simply places religious liberty in this country and education upon impregnable grounds. It is no blow upon the Catholic Church. The idea seems to be to appeal to the sympathy of the country as though it were an attack upon catholicism. It protects catholicism as it protects protestantism. It is just as much for the one as for the other; just as much against the one as against the other, and it is perfectly idle to talk about this thing being an attack upon the Catholic Church. It seems to me that the opposition to this thing gets down to a very small proportion when it is charged with being simply a republican trick, just as if it was devised here and gotten up for the occasion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate not more than three minutes. I do not intend to discuss this question. I am sorry the discussion has taken the turn that it has; but what I rose to say particularly was that my friend from Indiana seeks in his closing remarks upon this debate to make the impression that the democratic party is responsible for any agitation that may arise in the country from a discussion of this character. That Senator knows, and every other Senator knows, that at the very commencement of this session the President of the United States, the head of the republican party, brought this question here in his annual message. They know, and know full well, that prior to that time the head of the republican party, in the city of Des Moines, opened the campaign last fall upon this very issue. They know full well that one of the leading republican candidates for the nomination for the Presidency at the commencement of the session of Congress introduced almost the precise resolution which the House of Representatives sent to the Senate.

I do not express any opinion either in favor or against the proposition, for I do not mean to discuss the resolution as it came from the House, or the resolution as it has been amended by the Senate; but I wish to say this: that the democratic House of Representatives, actuated doubtless by the highest motives that could govern a deliberative body, when they saw a deliberate purpose and intention on the part of one of the great parties of this country to bring into the presidential campaign this year, evidenced by the action of the President of the United States himself, the chief of his party, evidenced too by the action of a prominent aspirant for the presidential honors in introducing this very resolution—when the House of Representatives knew that that animus actuated the republican party they did wisely to adopt a measure to eliminate from the political discussions of the present campaign a question of such fearful import. When I listened to-day to the debates upon this question, when I heard the appeals that were made by Senators to the religious prejudices and passions of mankind, I trembled for the future of my country. Has not history a voice? Does it not speak with an eloquence that ought to appeal in living language to the heart of every Senator? Have not religious persecutions and appeals to religious prejudices stained the earth with blood and wrung from the hearts of millions the deepest agonies? Yet I see springing up in my own country for the base purpose of party, to promote a presidential election, a disposition to drag down the sacred cross itself and make it subservient to party ends. I appeal to Heaven to thwart the purpose of all such partisans? While the Christian world is to-day praying for the peace of Jerusalem, there are men in this country caring nothing for religion who would subserve their party ends if they could by crucifying the Son of God afresh if he were on earth, or what is little better, who attempt to disturb the peace of the church and to array the Christian brotherhood in deadliest hate against each other.

I appeal to the American people, standing here in my place, to be deaf to all such appeals. Let not the worst passions of mankind be invoked in this campaign; but let the peace of the church flow on as it has in the past, and the great mission of Christianity accomplish that good for which it was sent. Let not politicians make the cause of the Redeemer subservient to base party ends. I protest against it in the interest of Christianity and the peace and happiness of mankind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EATON, (when Mr. BARNUM'S name was called.) I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. BARNUM] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] One would vote one way and the other the other. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when Mr. HAMILTON'S name was called.) The Senator from Texas [Mr. HAMILTON] is detained at his rooms by illness. He is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] The Senator from Texas would have voted in favor of this amendment, and the Senator from Virginia, as I understand, would have voted against it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] He would have voted "nay," and I should have voted "yea."

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] and the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] They would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] I did not think at the time I made the pair of this question, and I presume he was not expecting it. In his absence I do not feel at liberty to vote. I would vote against the proposition.

Mr. WINDOM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] If present the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to state that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. ROBERTSON.] If they were here the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay," and the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WRIGHT] is paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. DENNIS.] My colleague would vote "yea," and the Senator from Maryland would vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. Without a very strong stomach for this sort of legislation, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, Wadleigh, and West—28.

NAYS—Messrs Bogy Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Randolph, and Stevenson—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Merrimon, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright—27.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted to agree to the resolution, the same is not passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4107) to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain of the employés recently permanently discharged from the service of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, which takes precedence.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I wish to make some reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from New Hampshire making reports?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 147) to refund to William Watts, of the county of Boone, and State of Kentucky, the sum of $5,610, illegally taken and received from him and paid into the Treasury of the United States by the collector of internal revenue for the sixth Kentucky district, in excess of the amount of lawful tax collected upon the sale of 28,031 pounds of manufactured tobacco, on the 28th day of June, 1864, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 355) for the relief of James Millinger, of New Jersey, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2832) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert, of Louisiana, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I desire to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Nevada offering a resolution, the Senator from Rhode Island having moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have leave to sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he will give way for a moment that I may call up a bill of very great importance, which will not cause any delay in his executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois object to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of Mr. JONES, of Nevada.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe that is usual.

Mr. MORRILL. That is always usual.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I appeal to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island or else on the motion which I made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is entertaining business by unanimous consent. The request of the Senator from Minnesota is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Minnesota will allow me to explain, I will state the reason why I ask him to give way. It seems to me that through courtesy I should be allowed to explain.

Mr. WINDOM. I suppose the business before the Senate is the motion pending made by the Senator from Rhode Island. I do not know that an appeal can be made to me at present on that subject.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope I may be allowed to make a suggestion. It is now one o'clock. The Indian bill is a voluminous bill, so that it will take a long time to enroll it. I can see in the case of that bill a reason why we should stay here and pass it. I cannot see in the case of any private bill, especially one to which no objection will be made, why we should punish ourselves by staying here all night when we are going to be here to-morrow in any event. I suggest to Senators, without meaning to interfere with anybody, that therefore the Senator from Minnesota has an obvious reason for wanting the Indian bill to be acted on to-night, so that the clerks may have an opportunity to enroll it. That reason does not apply to any other bill that occurs to me now, none that is proposed. Therefore I suggest that the Senator from Minnesota be allowed to take up the conference report and have action upon it, and then we adjourn till morning and not wear ourselves out by sitting here all night.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me to present the conference report.

Mr. ANTHONY. In consideration of the fact stated by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Minnesota, the necessity of enrolling this voluminous bill, I withdraw the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business; but I must state that after that matter is disposed of I shall renew the motion, and if it does not prevail then, I shall renew it as soon as we meet to-morrow morning, and I shall keep on renewing it with the same persistency as my friend from Illinois insists on his bounty bill, and I hope with more success; for unless we shall transact some business in executive session, we shall be called together after the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. We must have an executive session.

Mr. LOGAN. May I be permitted to say just one word, and it is very hard to get an opportunity to say anything? It is not necessary for the Senator from Rhode Island to allude to the bounty bill. If he was as willing to get up the bounty bill as sometimes he pretends to be, there would not be so much trouble about it. I rose, however, to state that a bill has just come from the House in reference to the organization of troops in the Indian country, which I think is about as important as any matter before this Congress. I desired to have an opportunity to say that much, and to ask that the bill be taken up for immediate action.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask my friend from Illinois a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask does it make any difference practically whether that bill passes now or waits until eleven o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. LOGAN. I think it makes a great deal of difference for this reason: I do not think the bill which the House have sent to us will pass; I propose to offer a substitute for it so that there must be a conference between the Houses to settle the question, if the Senate agree with my views. If not, the bill as the House passed it can be agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that we can do both in fifteen minutes?

Mr. MORTON. Let us go right on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota insist on his motion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to make a single remark. I ask that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs be allowed first to present the report of his committee upon the bill to which he refers. It will certainly take no time.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no sort of objection to allowing the Senator from Illinois to present his report.

Mr. HARVEY. I join in that request. It is certainly of great importance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It will not delay the business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Minnesota does not object.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg to say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have no report from the committee. I was going to ask the Senate to take the House bill up, and I have a substitute which I propose to offer myself upon my own responsibility.

Mr. PADDOCK. That is the most important measure which we can consider to-night.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the honorable Senator will offer his substitute we can treat it as the report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. I yield to the Senator from Illinois to take up his measure provided it does not lead to debate. If it does I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian bill.

Mr. LOGAN. If I can have the floor after the Senator is through with his conference report I have no objection, but I do not want the Senate to adjourn without action on this proposition. ["All right."]

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Minnesota, who now moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 16, 18, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, and 61.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 56, 58, 59, 60, 62, and 63.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same, with amendments as follows: In line 24, page 2, strike out "five" and insert "six," and after the word "expenses" insert in line 27 of the same page "in excess of $100," and in line 9, page 3, of the amendments, after the word "thousand" insert "and one hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of said amendment, page 3, strike out "six" and insert "four," and after the word "Minnesota," in line 12, same page, strike out all down to and including the word "Carolina," in line 14, and as a distinct paragraph to follow the amended paragraph, insert: "For pay of special agent of the Eastern Cherokee and other Indians in North Carolina up to September 1 next, after which the office of said agent is abolished, $250," and in line 16 strike out "nine" and insert "six," and at the end of line 3, page 6 of the bill, add the following: "and for gilling-twine for nets, $1,200;" and at the end of line 16, same page, add "and for gilling-twine for nets, $400;" at the end of line 15, page 7, add "and for gilling-twine for nets, $400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 17, with the exception of the words after the word "Territory," in lines 22 and 23, page 20 of the bill; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 21, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "four" and insert "two," and strike out "and nineteen," and strike out "eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 25, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 4 strike out the word "tribe" wherever it occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the word "bands," and after the word "people," in line 5, strike out all down to and including the word "Indians," in line 7, and insert "and hereafter there shall be no appropriation made for the subsistence of said Indians," and in line 21, after the word "designate," insert the following: "And the further sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States for the purpose of carrying into effect the foregoing provisions," and make the word "amount" in line 26 plural; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 31, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," and after the word "dollars," in line 26, page 39 of the bill, add the following:

"And the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall direct that said Indians shall not be allowed to leave their proper reservations; and it shall be the duty of the War Department to aid the Indian Office in seeing that the orders of the Commissioner are executed; and rations shall not be issued for a longer period than one week at a time; and arms or ammunition shall not be issued, sold, or given to said Indians."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 38, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "forty" and insert "twenty," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 41, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add:

"Provided, That when sufficient matter to make a volume of statistics and historical data is prepared it shall be submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and referred by him to the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution and published on their written approval."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 54, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: After the word "for," in line 8 of said amendment, insert "agricultural implements and for," and in line 11 strike out "five" and insert "six," and at the end of said amendment add "and $300 of said sum shall be paid to the superintendent of common schools in North Carolina, who shall have the supervision of the schools of the Cherokees in said State under direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 57, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 5, page 45 of the bill, strike out all after the word "Provided" down to and including the word "but" in line 8, and insert the word "That;" and in line 10 strike out the word "and" where it first occurs, and strike out the words "and others," and in line 11 strike out the word "and" where it first occurs, and strike out "and for no other purposes" and insert "and for paying employés: And provided further, That amounts now due employés for the year ending June 30, 1876, may be paid out of the unexpended balance of the incidental fund of said year;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 64, substituting as follows:

"SEC. 5. And hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall have the sole power and authority to appoint traders to the Indian tribes and to make such rules and regulations as he may deem just and proper, specifying the kind and quantity of goods and the prices at which such goods shall be sold to the Indians.

"SEC. 6. That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall advertise for all supplies: Provided, That the purchase of supplies for sixty days may be made in open market: And provided further, That to meet any exigency of the service purchases may be made in open market to an extent not to exceed $2,000 at any one time."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
FRANCIS KERNAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SAML. J. RANDALL,
A. M. SCALES,
S. A. HURLBUT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

SUPPRESSION OF INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask now that the Senate consider the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay the bill before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities was by unanimous consent read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, empowered to increase the number of enlisted men to one hundred for each company of such regiments of cavalry as in his opinion may require the same. Provided, That not more than twenty-five hundred enlisted men shall thus be added at any one time to the twenty-five thousand authorized by the act approved July 24, 1876, "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877," and the following sums are hereby appropriated for recruiting and maintaining the same:

Recruiting 2,500 cavalrymen	$50,000
Pay per annum	390,000
Subsistence	200,400
Clothing	206,000
Regular supplies	216,000
Purchase of horses	337,500
Transportation, (wagons, &c.)	84,800
Transportation by rail, &c.	150,000
Making in all	1,634,700

Mr. MORTON. What is the appropriation in this amendment?

Mr. LOGAN. It is $1,634,700.

Mr. STEVENSON. How much is it in the House bill?

Mr. LOGAN. "One million dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary." I desire to say to the Senate that it is impossible to execute the House bill. I can demonstrate in five minutes its utter impracticability and show that preference ought to be given to the proposition suggested by the President and heretofore adopted by the Senate. The President's suggestion to the Senate was to recruit twenty-five hundred cavalrymen, that is, twenty-five hundred privates. Their pay would be $13 per month. The pay of twenty-five hundred men for one year at $13 per month would be $390,000. The pay of five thousand under the bill as agreed to by the House would be the same, because they are recruited for six months. That applies to the private soldiers. The twenty-five hundred men can be recruited and absorbed in the existing companies without appointing a solitary officer to command them; but the commissioned officers alone in the bill from the House will cost $314,615 at the pay fixed by the law as it now stands. There is, then, an addition of $314,615 made by the House. The necessary clothing for the five thousand would be just double, because the clothing is necessary, no matter whether they are to serve for six months or twelve months.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is just the same.

Mr. LOGAN. It is just the same. I will show in two minutes that it will cost over $1,000,000 to execute the bill as passed by the House, and that there is not half money enough appropriated by it. The pay for cavalrymen, as I stated, for one year is $390,000. That is exactly as I figure it, and I made the calculation here myself and I know it is correct. The subsistence of twenty-five hundred men would be $200,400. Subsistence of twenty-five hundred men then for one year and for five thousand for six months would be just equal, so that there is no difference in that item. The clothing for twenty-five hundred men would be $206,000. For five thousand men it is just double; any one can make the calculation. Regular supplies, that is, the rations for these cavalrymen for twelve months for twenty-five hundred or five thousand for six months would be exactly the same. The number of horses for the five thousand of course would be double the number required for the twenty-five hundred. The horses for the twenty-five hundred will cost $337,500, and you have to double that number to supply five thousand, which doubles the calculation. Transportation, wagons, &c., for twenty-five hundred private soldiers would cost $84,000, and you have to double that to supply five thousand men. The forage for the horses is just the same precisely, twenty-five hundred for a year and five thousand for six months. It makes no difference and it is not necessary to calculate that. Now as to the commutation allowed volunteer cavalrymen, forty cents a day, it is $730,000 for commutation.

Mr. OGLESBY. That is for the use of the man's horse.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir. Just add these items up and you will see the difference between the two measures. There is a difference in the cost of $2,500,000 for six months; and yet the appropriation in this bill is only $1,000,000. The $1,000,000 appropriated in the House bill will not organize the five regiments. You cannot organize them with the money, cannot get the horses, the rations, and the clothing to save your souls for the amount of money that is appropriated. So the House, without speaking in disrespect, have either acted without due consideration in reference to this thing or do not intend that any proposition shall pass for the purpose of organizing troops for fighting the Indians, one or the other. The twenty-five hundred cavalrymen can be organized very soon; it only requires the enlistment of private soldiers to fill up the companies already officered and provided for in every way, and all that is necessary is to feed them and clothe them and give them their sabres and guns, and they are ready to mount their horses and go; but in organizing these regiments they must be officered, must be clothed, must be rationed; they must have transportation, and everything provided for an army, and besides that they have to be drilled. The idea of taking five regiments of raw men of cavalry to go in now and fight Indians without drill, no man but a crazy man would attempt any such thing. I leave it to any one, I leave it to my friend from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] who is a soldier and has been a soldier for a long time, and he will agree with me that the proposition is perfectly absurd.

Nor is there economy in it. I have tried, as far as I was concerned, and I have insisted on raising troops to fight these Indians on the most economical plan. I want to fight them with good men, and with men who will understand it. Any man who has ever been a soldier knows that if you take raw recruits and raw officers you must drill the men, drill the horses, drill everything connected with them; but if you take a trained company that has its officers and has a portion of its men, and raw recruits are distributed among them, they will be drilled in a week so that they can fight. Take men in that way, distribute them in regiments, and they are soldiers in a very short time; but when you take a whole regiment of raw men it takes a long time to make them good soldiers. This is the advantage of the amendment.

I have tried to defend this from a proper stand-point, from the stand-point that will make good soldiers, and from the stand-point that will raise them on the most economical plan; but this proposition is demagogery, and nothing else, let it come from House or Senate or where it will. When we have plenty of regular troops, plenty of organized force, all that you have to do is to fill up with men. No man but one who is a demagogue or desires to be extravagant will wait for a time when the Indians have a chance to massacre as many as they choose, to make any such proposition as this.

Some of my friends have complained of me because I did not insist on having volunteers. I did not insist on it, for the reason that I know the expense attached to raising troops and organizing them and preparing them and fitting them for going into battle. I do not wish to do it merely to make people think that I want to give them a chance to volunteer. My desire is to have it put on a fair basis, a proper, soldierly basis, and an economical plan.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the Senator whether he is aware of the fact that during the war many of our volunteer regiments furnished their horses?

Mr. LOGAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. CLAYTON. If he is, can he state the amount paid them per month for the use of their horses?

Mr. LOGAN. Forty cents a day.

Mr. CLAYTON. Twelve dollars a month.

Mr. ALLISON. Seventy-two dollars for six months.

Mr. CLAYTON. What price did the Senator put on the horses in his estimate?

Mr. LOGAN. I estimated them at $100 apiece. They cost more than that.

Mr. CLAYTON. You must estimate more than that, because I see you make the amount over $300,000.

Mr. LOGAN. That was the estimate of the War Department, $337,000 for twenty-five hundred horses, and double that for five thousand.

Mr. CLAYTON. They cannot be purchased for $100.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer the substitute.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if this substitute he has now offered is not the same measure that was passed by the Senate and sent to the House and by the House rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. Verbatim et literatim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They did not reject it.

Mr. LOGAN. No.

Mr. PADDOCK. As a practical question it seems to me that the offering of it here the second time is an absurdity.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, we shall see whether it is or not.

Mr. SARGENT. It brings us to a conference between the two Houses, the only possible way of reaching a result.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not want to consume time, but I disagree in toto to the sentiments expressed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAXEY. I will say, in response to the question put me by the Senator from Illinois, that it is the experience of the Mexican war, as it was of the last war in both armies, that the enlistment of volunteers for a short period of time is bad policy. We have only to look at the history to see that that is the fact. The cavalry is now disposed of at the proper points according to the best judgment of the General of the Army. The recruits that are obtained for cavalry service are sent on at once, so soon as gathered, to their proper points of destination and assigned their companies and their regiments. They are there mixed up with the companies already organized and already drilled, and therefore become effective far more readily than they would if you attempted to get an entirely new cavalry force. My candid judgment is that you cannot organize this cavalry force of five thousand men, volunteers, drill them, put them into the field, and make them effective in the six months. I therefore think the amendment is proper.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suppose the object sought is to put down the Indian rebellion. Now, what the Senator says in regard to the organization of military force, in regard to the advantage of organizing a military force for service in ordinary military operations, is entirely correct; but to fight Indians I want to tell the Senator that that theory will not apply.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to add one word which I omitted? I only want to add that in my judgment, from observation and experience, this is going to be one of the worst Indian wars ever fought in this country, and, therefore, we must be active, ready, and prompt in what we do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to tell the honorable Senator that the men to fight Indians are the men who know the Indian habits and the Indian character, the men who are on the ground; and there are plenty in the immediate vicinity of these Indians who not only are acquainted with the Indian habits and character, but have had military service in the field heretofore.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that the twenty-five hundred we propose can be taken from that class of men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, sir. I want to say to the honorable Senator that that class of men are not the class of men to enlist as privates in the regular Army. You cannot enlist those men as privates, because they are not the class of men.

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps they would prefer to enlist as officers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Recruits for your regular Army are enlisted in the streets of our great cities; they are men who have never seen Indians; they are men unaccustomed to ride; they are men who have to be trained; but in the immediate vicinity of these Indians, five thousand men, if necessary, can be enlisted, who can furnish their own horses, and we can enlist those five thousand men, I venture the assertion, if the necessity arises, in one-half the time that twenty-five hundred men can be enlisted in the regular Army.

Mr. LOGAN. And I suppose, after we had enlisted them with their own horses, for the next fifteen years we should be passing bills to pay for the loss of horses? That would be about the result. That is the experience everybody has had in matters of that kind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know about that. I do not think any measure of this kind has ever been passed by the American Congress. The trouble is, and will be in this instance if we pass no bill, that if a disaster comes to General Crook, if we have to organize in our own way without the forms of law, as we may have to do, then the Congress of the United States in the years to come will be called upon very naturally to pay, and we shall expect them to pay, and they will have to pay, very much for the irregularities which will be consequent upon such a measure. But what I seek, and what we of the Northwest seek, is some practical safeguard against the peril which threatens us if Congress adjourns without giving us some measure of protection. I believe if the Senate fails to pass the bill which the House has sent to us, nothing will be done. If such a calamity should happen, I want to wash my hands of any responsibility. I hope that we shall have a vote of the Senate on the adoption of the substitute. While I should be quite willing that the twenty-five hundred regular troops should be given, I very much doubt whether we can obtain that. I very much prefer, because I think it is much safer, that the bill as received from the House should be adopted, and I shall call for a yea and nay vote on that question.

Mr. HARVEY. There is a great deal of truth in what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has said and in what the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] has said. There is a great Indian war impending; and it is well that we should resort to the most efficient means to put it down. It is due to the citizens of the United States living in the Territories adjacent to where the hostilities are now taking place that the most efficient and rapid means of putting an end to this war should be taken, and I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if it is known that in case his substitute should be passed the men could be enlisted to fill up these regiments?

Mr. LOGAN. I have never seen the time when you could not enlist as many cavalry as you wanted. I would take the contract to enlist all these men in forty days, if it was left to me.

Mr. HARVEY. If the raising of volunteers is provided for, there are a great many men in the vicinity who would take the contract to raise the regiments at the shortest notice, and, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] says, very efficient men too, good soldiers, good for Indian service or any other kind of service. But so far as I am concerned I do not care which way is taken, so that it is the most efficient.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to say to the Senator from Kansas—I did not wish to say it before, but I will say it now—that the eagerness of some on the border to raise volunteers I do not have any objection to; but I say now that if you pass this House bill to-night you will not get a solitary regiment, for there are regiments enough in the great cities now already raised and organized that will supplant you, the very kind of men you are talking about.

Mr. HARVEY. I do not know anything about the eagerness of the people of the border States to volunteer. The people of the border States are generally ready to take part in the defense of their fellow-citizens, whether on the border or anywhere else, in the interior or in a foreign country, if it be necessary to go there.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. HARVEY. What does the chairman of the Military Committee mean?

Mr. LOGAN. I mean that in the cities where they have these organizations they would be offered sooner than your people could raise the regiments.

Mr. HARVEY. I do not care where they come from if they are where they are needed at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LOGAN. If you do not care where they come from, very well; but the object is to get the officers of these regiments, which will cost nearly $500,000 at first.

Mr. HARVEY. It is for the protection of our people. There is no other object that we have in view. We have no feeling about this matter at all; we only desire to see the best method taken. So far as I am concerned, I am sure I have no feeling in the matter any more than to see that the people to whom we owe protection have it.

Mr. SPENCER. I appeal to Senators to let us vote.

Mr. HARVEY. I am ready to vote.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not think we quite understand this question yet. I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] has not made correct estimates in this respect; he calculates that it will cost double to clothe volunteers for six months that it will take to clothe one-half that number for a year. That is a mistake, I think. My recollection is that clothing is issued twice a year to soldiers. Therefore it would cost just the same, because you issue one suit of clothing to the volunteer for six months to the five thousand, and you would issue two suits to the twenty-five hundred for one year; so you just equalize it.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that in the calculation I made I made no estimate for accouterments; I made no estimate for saddles, no estimate for sabers, no estimate for a great many things that he as a soldier knows have to be used. The thing is perfectly patent.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not speaking about those points now, but about this particular thing. In addition to that, you pay a premium of $2 for every enlisted man that is brought to a recruiting agency. That of course is a small matter, but it is something. I do not regard this question of pay as one of so much importance as the question of efficiency. I think the Senator is mistaken when he says you cannot get a volunteer force that will be as efficient as an enlisted force. I believe you can get these five thousand volunteers from men who are trained soldiers. I believe nearly every man of them will be a trained soldier, some of the best soldiers of the world, the men who have passed through the late war; and I believe when you send those men into the field to operate against Indians the results that will be obtained from that class of soldiery will so far outweigh the results that will be obtained from enlisted men gathered in the slums of the cities that it will far overbalance the difference of cost and expense. There is no question that it will cost more to organize a force of that kind.

Mr. LOGAN. I could add a million dollars to the estimate I made, and in five minutes show the necessity for it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will concede the point of cost.

Mr. LOGAN. Each company has to have a wagon. There are ten wagons to a regiment. There are fifty wagons to start with, with the harness and mules. Those I did not put into the estimate at all. If you absorb these troops into the companies that already have wagons, you save all that expense.

Mr. CLAYTON. You must make some allowance for the value of these horses at the close of the operations. It is not to be supposed that all the horses are going to be killed. A horse is good for a number of years.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Illinois made his calculation on the basis of the volunteers owning their own horses and the Government buying theirs.

Mr. CLAYTON. I admit the volunteers will cost more; there is no doubt about that, although I think the increase of cost is not so large in proportion as the Senator from Illinois indicated, but in that I may be mistaken. I do honestly believe that what we want in dealing with these Indians is to make the war short and decisive. That is the most humane way, it is the cheapest way. We want to adopt a policy that will be quick and certain, and I believe in order to secure that policy you had better take a different class of men from what you can gather together in the ordinary recruiting stations in this country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is one point that I want to call attention to. This bill leaves it entirely to the discretion of the President whether he will call for any volunteers. Now he may call for one regiment or he may call for none. I hope General Crook will be successful and that we shall need none.

Mr. LOGAN. The other is as discretionary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He may call for but one regiment, and may need it but a month or two.

Mr. WEST. The substitute providing for enlisting regulars——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It provides for regular enlistment into the regular Army.

Mr. WEST. Not to exceed twenty-five hundred men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But this provides that in case of disaster there, in case the President finds it necessary that the force there should be increased, he may, at his discretion, call out volunteers, not to exceed five thousand, to serve not longer than six months. I think it is safe for our friends here to trust the President with that discretion. I do not think this is necessarily such an expensive matter that the Senate of the United States should hesitate at this time, just on the eve of adjournment.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to make a suggestion to my friend from Nebraska. As I understand the bill of the House, it is for volunteers for six months. That time runs from the date when they are mustered in. If you undertake to organize new independent regiments of cavalry, you cannot get those regiments fit to go to the field much before the 1st day of December, and then the weather will be so cold in the mountain where they are expected to operate that man can hardly live there. Hence those men cannot commence active operations until next spring and by that time their time will be nearly out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The very time when General Crook hopes to strike his decisive blow against the Indians is during this winter.

Mr. CLAYTON. The enlistment of enlisted men would be still more slow. We know that it takes a long while to fill up the companies by enlistment. It is a very slow and tedious process to wait for individual enlistments day after day; one man comes in to-day and another to morrow. They straggle in. It is a very slow and tedious process to fill up companies and regiments by enlistment.

Mr. MORTON. I have understood that men could readily be enlisted for the cavalry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Take the hardy men of that section of country, familiar with the country, familiar with Indians, accustomed to the climate, and they will make short work of these hostile Sioux.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I think we should adopt the plan that is recommended by the men who are in the field and the men who are in communication with the officers in the field; and that is the plan which is proposed by the Senator from Illinois. The generals in command in the field recommend that plan. The Lieutenant-General of the Army recommends it, and the General of the Army recommends it. It must be patent to every man that five regiments of cavalry cannot be raised this fall and made efficient for field service certainly till long after Christmas. I know the fact that our country is filled with trained soldiers; they are in all parts of the country: but I also know the fact that frontiersmen are not what frontiersmen were twenty years ago. The State which the honorable Senator from Nebraska represents is made up of emigrants from foreign lands and emigrants from the East, and they are not the well-trained frontiersmen that the Kentucky hunters of the last century were.

Mr. PADDOCK. If my friend will allow me to make a statement,

I will say to him that in the State which my colleague and myself have the honor to represent here there are at least to-day 15,000 ex-soldiers of the Union Army who served throughout the war, and who are ready at any time to protect those frontiers or any other frontiers of the country.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am quite sure of that, but the regular Army seems to be necessary to protect the frontiers of that very State.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Senator will allow me still further, speaking of the recommendation of General Sheridan and General Sherman and others, I will say that within a day we have received from General Sheridan a telegram in which he advises, in the event of a failure to authorize enlistments in the regular Army, the calling out of volunteers.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Certainly we must either authorize enlistments in the regular Army or the calling out of volunteers; but, if we authorize volunteers, the bill should be remodeled. It is very crude in all its parts. The appropriation for raising these volunteers should be increased. We should proceed with it in a judicious, fair way, and not attempt to impress the people with the idea that these five regiments can be raised and supported for six months on a million dollars. It cannot be done. The Senator from Illinois has demonstrated that to my satisfaction, and I should think to the satisfaction of every Senator here. He has knowledge in these matters. I say myself very plainly, without going through the figures, that he has gone over with so much care, that I saw at once the folly of talking of raising these regiments, and subsisting them, and drilling them, and equiping them with that amount of money. I say, as General Sheridan says, if you cannot increase the regular force by enlisting twenty-five hundred men and putting them where they will be immediately under the command of skilled officers, then let the President have authority to call out volunteers. We should certainly do something; but the wise way, in my opinion, is to give the President authority to enlist twenty-five hundred men, to be shoved out at once to the frontier, put under the command of skilled officers, mixed with well-drilled soldiers already in the field and in the presence of the enemy; and they will be soldiers in a very short time, as the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Texas have remarked. To me it seems very unwise indeed to attempt at this late day of the season to organize five regiments of cavalry volunteers for service against the Sioux, no matter how many skilled soldiers there may be in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. PADDOCK. I say to my friend that they can be oganized in ten days.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is an impossibility. It cannot be done. I know it cannot be done.

Mr. MORTON. If we are to take volunteers, the time ought to be increased to a year unless sooner discharged, or until the end of the war, some phrase which would give the President the right to discharge them sooner if their services are not required. I have had some experience in raising troops. I do not believe that a cavalry regiment can be raised and put into a condition to go into the field in four or five months, and by that time the period will have nearly expired.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If we just pass this bill, this whole subject will be before a conference committee covering both sides of it, and they will dispose of it better than we can. I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. Let us have a vote on the House bill.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I regret that my friend, the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] is not in his place. A day or two ago I had the honor to say that the democratic candidate for the office of President of the United States was entirely right in his statement that during the last eleven years $4,500,000,000 had been taken from the people of the United States in the way of Federal taxes. Gentlemen are inclined to laugh.

Mr. PADDOCK. We cannot hear the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. I will try to make them hear. All I care to have hear me is the reporter. [Laughter.]

I showed by taking the table of expenditures that the people of the United States had been taxed $4,607,574,202.23. The honorable Senator from Ohio objected because he said that the figures should not be taken from the table of expenditures and from the table of taxation. He introduced certain tables, a copy of which I hold in my hand from him, in which he says that the entire amount of taxation for the eleven years spoken of by Mr. Tilden was $1,192,633,801.34. I showed by my table that the Senator from Ohio was mistaken more than $200,000,000. He insisted that I was wrong; that I had taken the tables of expenditures, and not the tables of taxation. Now I have got those, and nobody knew it better than the Senator from Ohio. I desire the attention of the Senate, and I only regret that the Senator from Ohio, the chairman of the Finance Committe of the Senate of the United States, is not here. He said that I was wrong in my figures. Now let me show how he has been wrong.

The amount of customs duties paid in gold for eleven years, from 1866 to 1876, both inclusive, was $1,973,589,621.26. These tables are from the Treasury Department of the United States. Now, I take the amount of the difference in value between gold and paper in the customs collected for the eleven years from and including the years 1866 and 1876, $431,596,327.78. From that sum I deduct what is to be found in the table introduced by the honorable Senator from Ohio as premiums on loans and sales of gold coin, $167,037,384.39. I take that because in his tables that amount of premiums on gold is allowed. Therefore it does not belong to my estimate. That leaves $264,558,943.39. The Senate will understand that I have deducted the entire amount which is in the table of the Senator from Ohio as premiums on loans and on gold sold, of over $167,000,000, calling it a premium on gold when it is not a premium on gold. It is partly a premium on loans. I deduct the whole, and the result is that the taxes paid by the people of the United States in those eleven years were $4,457,192,744.73. That may be laughable to my friends here. It is not laughable to the men who pay the taxes. The question is this, the honorable gentleman—I say honorable gentleman—who has been nominated as the candidate for the Presidency by the democratic party said that the taxation of the people for the last eleven years had been $4,500,000,000. I now show by exactly the tables of the Government that the amount which the people have paid for these eleven years is $4,457,192,744.73. In order that I may not be unfair, I take the premium on loans and sales of gold coin and deduct the whole of it, $167,037,384.39. How much of it was for premiums on loans I know not, and therefore I give the adversaries of Mr. Tilden this advantage of this entire amount as premium on gold.

Mr. LOGAN. Do you think Sitting Bull will understand these figures? [Laughter.]

Mr. EATON. No. I will indulge my laughable friend by and by. If it was a premium on loans it ought not to be deducted at all. I call it a premium on gold and deduct the whole; but in my judgment if I could get at it it would be only a small portion; but I cannot get at the amount of gold premiums precisely. From this standpoint Mr. Tilden varies $42,907,256.27. With the other item not deducted he is $125,930,028.12 below the actual truth in his statement. I put this before the people and let it go for what it is worth.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, Mr. President, on that state of facts can we not vote?

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will not prevail. I think it is a mistake decidedly to undertake to pass it. The House has already passed upon it, and it will be utterly hopeless.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HITCHCOCK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Sargent, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Claytor, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Paddock, Ransom, and Saulsbury—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the President to increase the cavalry force."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate to appoint a joint select committee to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 897) granting a pension to Andrew Evarts;

A bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4085) to repeal part of an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," approved July 19, 1876.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to offer the customary and usual resolution on the last day of the session:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the clerks of the several standing committees of the Senate their usual per diem compensation for the month of August instant.

Mr. SARGENT. I object. It is contrary to law. The law expressly says the pay shall be during the session.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF PAGES.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate do now adjourn until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WEST. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for a moment that I may offer a resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. Offer it to-morrow.

Mr. WEST. One objection will carry it over then.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well.

Mr. WEST. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms is hereby authorized and directed to retain in the employ of the Senate until the 1st day of September, 1876, all pages now employed, and that the usual per diem compensation be paid to them until that date.

Mr. DAVIS. Let that go to the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well. One objection carries it over. It will be in order to-morrow. I move that the Senate adjourn until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 58, so as to have it the order for to-morrow morning. Then I shall be willing to adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. What has become of my motion?

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the bill will be taken up and then I shall not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order.

HOUR OF MEETING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour having been fixed for eleven o'clock, it will require a separate motion to change the time.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that when we adjourn it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow. We must have some sleep.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I now make my motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to take up the bounty bill, pending which the Senator from New York moves to adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. It is not very important, but I moved to adjourn without any reference to taking up any bill and before any such motion was made. I do not want to antagonize any bill, but I want to go home and get some sleep, so that we may come here and do some business to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN and Mr. PATTERSON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered and taken.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask permission to offer a resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot offer any resolution now.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order during the roll-call.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Maxey, Saulsbury, Stevenson, and Windom—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cragin, Ferry, Harvey, Hitchcock, Logan, McMillan, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, and Spencer—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaithe, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—38.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate refuses to adjourn, but there is no quorum voting.

Mr. LOGAN. Now, I move——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe it is in order to adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves a call of the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am sure we ought to take up this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 14; and (at two o'clock and ten minutes a. m., Tuesday, August 15,) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 14, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. JOSEPH L. TUCKER, rector of Christ church, Rochester, New York.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 2230) providing for the sale of saline lands.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted by unanimous consent as follows:

To Mr. HURLBUT for the remainder of the session, on account of serious illness in his family; and

To Mr. CASWELL indefinitely.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of J. R. Harrington.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the acting Postmaster-General, transmitting certain papers referred to the Post-Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SOUTH PASS OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 29th ultimo, a communication from the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, together with a map of surveys of the South Pass of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NATIONAL SAVINGS-BANK OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the treasurer of the National Savings Bank of the District, transmitting the annual statement of that institution in conformity with the requirements of section 8 of the act of May 24, 1870; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Monday, the first business in order after the reading of the Journal is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions on leave for reference only to their appropriate committees, without debate, and not to be brought back by motion to reconsider; during which call joint resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be introduced for reference and printing. The morning hour begins at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Chair rule that a report from a committee of conference could not interrupt the morning hour on Monday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not so ruled.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the contrary, the Chair would rule that a report of a committee of conference may interrupt or precede the morning hour of Monday.

Mr. RANDALL. I will wait until the call of States has been concluded.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is evident that no bills introduced at this time of the session can be acted upon before the close of the session. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that, instead of the regular call of States for bills for reference, gentlemen be allowed to introduce for reference such bills as they may desire to introduce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not like to entertain any proposition that will interfere with the morning hour on Monday.

Mr. COOK. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin, and the call rests with the State of Virginia.

Mr. RANDALL. Under that ruling of the Chair I would prefer to come in ahead of the morning hour with the report of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill, in order that that bill may be sent to the Senate. And I will ask consent that the report be acted upon at once and sent to the Senate before I submit a few remarks which I desire to make. This is the last of the general appropriation bills, and I desire to make some general remarks upon the subject of appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that it will take but a short time to enable such gentlemen as have bills to introduce them for reference.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to accommodate myself to the desire of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will certainly recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to submit a conference report; but he will rule against any other business interfering with the call of States in the morning hour of Monday. The regular order this morning is the call of States, as the Chair has announced, and the call rests with the State of Virginia, where it rested at the close of the morning hour on Monday last.

SAMUEL GARDNER.

Mr. FOSTER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4096) for the relief of Samuel Gardner, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EMILY BEALL.

Mr. FOSTER also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4097) for the relief of Mrs. Emily Beall, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HERRON.

Mr. McMAHON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4098) granting a pension to William Herron, First and Ninth Light Batteries, (Massachusetts;) which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS NUGENT.

Mr. McMAHON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4099) for the relief of Lieutenant Thomas Nugent, Company H, Twenty-seventh Indiana Regiment; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LUCINDA E. HUMPHREYS.

Mr. DIBRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4100) for the relief of Lucinda E. Humphreys, of McMinn County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. STIVERS.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4101) restoring the name of John W. Stivers, a soldier of the Mexican War, to the pension-rolls; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF PHILIP LAWALL.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4102) for the relief of the legal representatives of Philip Lawall, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE FORBES.

Mr. HENKLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4103) for the relief of George Forbes, sr., Saint Mary's County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY E. SOPER.

Mr. HENKLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4104) for the relief of Mary E. Soper; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY H. TOLSON.

Mr. HENKLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4105) for the relief of Mary H. Tolson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by U. S. GRANT, jr., one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 361) to reduce the area of the military reservation of Fort Laramie, Wyoming Territory;

An act (H. R. No. 629) for the relief of Jonathan White;

An act (H. R. No. 1823) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Ella to that of Myra;

An act (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of R. H. Buckner;

An act (H. R. No. 2252) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Hiram Wood;

An act (H. R. No. 2692) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, California;

An act (H. R. No. 2894) for the relief of J. E. Pankey, of Fulton County, Kentucky;

An act (H. R. No. 3392) for the relief of John R. Harrington;

An act (H. R. No. 4060) to provide for the payment of certain indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York court-house and post-office building; and

An act (H. R. No. 4087) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a report from the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill; and I ask unanimous consent that after the report is acted on I may have the same privilege of speaking which I would have under the rules while the report is pending. I desire to hasten final action on the bill, and not delay sending it to the Senate until the conclusion of my remarks, which will have relation to that bill and generally to the appropriation bills of this session.

Mr. FOSTER. I make no objection; but I would like to have the privilege of making some remarks after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] shall have concluded. I do not intend to obtrude myself upon the House to the prejudice of any important business. I have already been granted the right to print remarks, but I would much prefer to deliver them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By general consent it may now be understood that after the report upon the Indian appropriation bill has been acted upon, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] shall occupy the floor for such time as he may desire and that afterward it shall be occupied by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.]

Mr. HOAR. Does not the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania imply that his speech would have no effect whatever upon the House with reference to this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not expect it to have any effect with reference to the Indian appropriation bill, because I propose to speak upon the twelve regular appropriation bills of the republican party generally. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the arrangement which has just been stated.

Mr. RANDALL. I present the report of the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 16, 18, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 55, and 61.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 56, 58, 59, 60, 62, and 63, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same, with amendments as follows: In line 24, page 2, strike out "five" and insert "six," and after the word "expenses" insert in line 27 of the same page "in excess of $100," and in line 9, page 3, of the amendments, after the word "thousand" insert "and one hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 11 of said amendment, page 3, strike out "six" and insert "four," and after the word "Minnesota," in line 12, same page, strike out all down to and including the word "Carolina," in line 14, and as a distinct paragraph to follow the amended paragraph, insert: "For pay of special agent of the Eastern Cherokees and other Indians in North Carolina up to September 1 next, after which the office of said agent is abolished, $250," and in like 16 strike out "nine" and insert "six," and at the end of line 3, page 6, of the bill, add the following: "and for gilling-twine for nets, $1,200;" and at the end of line 16, same page, add "and for gilling-twine for nets, $400;" at the end of line 15, page 7, add "and for gilling-twine for nets, $400;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 17, with the exception of the words after the word "Territory," in lines 22 and 23, page 20, of the bill; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 21, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "four" and insert "two," and strike out "and nineteen," and strike out "eight hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 25, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 4 strike out the word "tribe" wherever it occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the word "bands," and after the word "people," in line 5, strike out all down to and including the word "Indians," in line 7, and insert "and hereafter there shall be no appropriation made for the subsistence of said Indians," and in line 20, after the word "designate," insert the following: "And the further sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States for the purpose of carrying into effect the foregoing provisions," and make the word "amount" in line 26 plural; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 31, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty five," and after the word "dollars," in line 26, page 39 of the bill, add the following:

"And the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall direct that said Indians shall not be allowed to leave their proper reservations; and it shall be the duty of the War Department to aid the Indian Office in seeing that the orders of the Commissioner are executed; and rations shall not be issued for a longer period than one week at a time; and arms or ammunition shall not be issued, sold, or given to said Indians."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 38, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "forty" and insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 41, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add:

"Provided, That when sufficient matter to make a volume of statistics and historical data is prepared it shall be submitted to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and referred by him to the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution and published on their written approval."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 54, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: After the word "for," in line 8 of said amendment, insert "agricultural implements and for," and in line 11 strike out "five" and insert "six," and at the end of said amendment add "and $300 of said sum shall be paid to the superintendent of common schools in North Carolina, who shall have the supervision of the schools of the Cherokees in said State, under direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 57, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 5, page 45 of the bill, strike out all after the word "Provided" down to and including the word "but" in line 8, and insert the word "That;" and in line 10, strike out the word "and," where it first occurs, and strike out the words "and others," and in line 11 strike out the word "and" where it first occurs, and strike out "and for no other purposes," and insert "and for paying employés: And provided further, That amounts now due employés for the year ending June 30, 1876, may be paid out of the unexpended balance of the incidental fund of said year;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 64, substituting as follows:

"SEC. 5. And hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall have the sole power and authority to appoint traders to the Indian tribes and to make such rules and regulations as he may deem just and proper, specifying the kind and quantity of goods and the prices at which such goods shall be sold to the Indians.

"SEC. 6. That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall advertise for all supplies: Provided, That the purchase of supplies for sixty days may be made in open market: And provided further, That to meet any exigency of the service purchases may be made in open market to an extent not to exceed $2,000 at any one time."

And the Senate agree to the same.

SAML. J. RANDALL,
A. M. SCALES,
S. A. HURLBUT,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. WINDOM,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
FRANCIS KERNAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to state before this conference report is concurred in, that I recognize the fact that our conferees have exerted themselves to the utmost of their abilities in order to secure the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. They have been met in this effort by the persistent opposition of the conferees on the part of the Senate. The alternative was presented to the House of a defeat of the bill or a yielding to the demands of the Senate. The transfer of the management of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department was one of the most important measures of reform inaugurated by this House. It was estimated by our Committee on Appropriations that this reform would result in a saving to the Government of from three millions to five millions annually. For the failure of this important measure the Senate is alone responsible, and the republican majority of that body have assumed this responsibility. The House has been compelled to yield this point, as it has many others in the interest of economy, at the demand of the Senate. The people will understand this fact and will not fail to hold their public servants to a strict accountability for the defeat of this transfer. This failure will serve to inform the people that they can look for measures of economy and reform only to their immediate representatives. If the people desire a thorough reform in all the Departments of the Government, they must reconstruct the United States Senate through their State Legislatures. Until that is done a severe retrenchment and genuine reform in all Departments of the Government cannot be secured.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the previous question on agreeing to this report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the President's message on the sundry civil appropriation bill was referred.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, before the final adjournment of a protracted and laborious session, it is proper to review our action cocerning appropriations from the public Treasury to carry on the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. In the discharge of this task I am sensible of no other motive than that there shall be a complete and impartial exhibit of the work in behalf of retrenchment and reform which we set out to do, and the difficulties and opposition which met us at every step in the interest of those who saw in any reduction of public expenditure loss to them of salary or place, notwithstanding there was consequent advantage to the tax-payers and the efficiency of the governmental administration was in no degree impaired.

We were met at the very threshold by the inexorable alternative of reducing expenditures to a just and economical basis, or, by allowing appropriations to be made at the same figures of previous years, with increased taxation; and this latter it was our plighted faith and solemn duty to prevent in behalf of the great body of the people borne down by a heavy load of taxation, and who were further distressed beyond measure by derangement and misfortune in every avenue of agricultural, manufacturing, mechanical, and commercial activity. To this end every item of public expense, whether large or small, was subjected to the severest scrutiny, and an inspection of every Bureau and Department of the Government undertaken, without parallel, I believe, for a quarter of a century.

The Committee on Appropriations gave to this work their most earnest attention. It required incessant labor and much patience. Arrayed against us were all those whose favorite selfish schemes were to be frustrated for the public good; eager and greedy corporations who sought to fatten from the public purse, place-hunters and placeholders, and the friends and partisans of all, high or low, who were in any way to be affected by reduction, and especially by the marked unwillingness on all hands by chiefs of Bureaus and heads of Departments to agree to any withdrawal of their official patronage. But we had the comforting assurance that we had behind us the people who demanded that their burdens should be lightened by practical and necessary reductions, and this consoled us oftentimes in the discharge of an imperative public duty when we found ourselves compelled to deny appropriations to the extent desired for objects dearly cherished by our constituents.

The majority of this House of Representatives was elected to reform manifold abuses of administration. And when we assembled in December last that reform element assumed full authority in this Hall, and obtained partial control over public expenditures. The first difficulty which presented itself to the execution of the trust confided to us was the existence of a rule of the House which prevented the repeal or even modification of any law as to appropriations upon an appropriation bill unless two-thirds of the members assented thereto, which number the majority did not have.

The construction which had been given to that rule allowed amendments to increase compensation to officers, clerks, and employés, but adroitly prevented as out of order any reduction whatever. To overcome this obstruction a proposition was submitted to so change the rule as to allow the incorporation into appropriation bills of such legislation, which, being germane, retrenched expenditures, thus making a complete revolution in the operation of the rule and turning legislative action in this House from extravagance into the better and safer direction of economy. That change, for the purpose I have indicated, was vigorously resisted by the republican side of the House for the reason that, composing as they did and do more than one-third of its members, no amendments changing existing law could be made or put upon an appropriation bill except when such amendments increased salaries, as under the old practice two-thirds were required to suspend the rules to allow the majority to vote even on such amendments; and that two-thirds, as I have already stated, the minority in this House could at any time refuse.

Without such a change any and all efforts on the part of the House to reduce the expenditures of the Government would have been as the idle wind. Here stood the republican members of more than one-third to prevent and obstruct any such reduction, with a Senate, as we afterward found, even more determined in its purpose. Finally, through the agency of the Committee on Rules, we secured a report of the alteration so much desired, and the House adopted it by a majority composed exclusively of democrats. Almost all the reductions we have accomplished have followed as the result of that first step, for it opened the way.

It must not be forgotten that when Congress assembled the country was prostrated in all the essentials which go to make a people prosperous, contented, and happy. Many of our manufacturing establishments were closed and most of those still running were working only a portion of the time. Commerce languished, agriculture went unrewarded, and a feeling of distrust widely prevailed, causing capital to be unusually cautious. Almost all new enterprises were abandoned, and labor, then as now seeking employment, was to the extent of its activity inadequately remunerated.

Our duty in such a condition of affairs was too plain to be mistaken. It was to lop off at once, and resolutely, every extravagant and unnecessary expense. This we have partially accomplished, and in a manner which will in no degree cripple the Administration in its legitimate functions. But to secure even this partial result without producing friction has required long and patient examination, investigation, and study. A further plan of procedure adopted was to reduce 10 per cent. all salaries over $1,200 and provide a reduction in the force of clerks and employés of 20 per cent. These two provisions, if fully adopted, would have secured a much larger reduction of appropriations and the discharge of all supernumerary clerks and employés, of which there are still a large number.

It is well known that all over the land private establishments of every sort and description have reduced the rates of compensation to their employés. A signal instance of this is shown at Lowell, Massachusetts, which is the guide in a measure for all New England. The working people there have themselves consented to a reduction of 10 per cent. as just and fair, not the first either to which they have recently been subjected. The House considered this not an unreasonable reduction in amount under the circumstances. But this reduction has almost wholly failed because of the obstinacy of the Senate and the Senate conferees in relation thereto. A reduction in the number of clerks and employés has been only partially realized, as the House conferees were forced to yield a part of their recommendations. It will surprise many when they learn the fact that as many as one hundred thousand persons receive pay from the Federal Treasury.

In order that no harm should possibly come from reduction of force, we directed the attention of the executive officers of the Government to the existing law in reference to the hours of labor required for the clerks and the employés. It is to be found in section 162 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

Sec. 162. From the 1st day of October until the 1st day of April, in each year, all the Bureaus and Offices in the State, War, Treasury, Navy, and Post-Office Departments, and in the General Land Office, shall be open for the transaction of the public business at least eight hours in each day; and from the 1st day of April until the 1st day of October, in each year, at least ten hours in each day, except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law.

Heretofore clerks have only been required to devote six hours a day to the service of the Government. Recently, on the coming in of the democratic House, by orders to the Bureaus that time has been extended to seven hours. If, however, the terms of the law are adhered to, more actual hours of service will be secured under the reduced number of clerks and employés agreed upon than we have now with the present excessive force.

Great complaint has been made against our change of laws upon appropriation bills, as though it were at this time a novel and unheard-of thing and never before attempted in the legislation of the Government. Let us see how that is. I append herewith a list of changes of laws which have been incorporated into appropriation bills during all the years from 1865 down to and including 1875. The extent to which such legislation has been carried on will, I have no doubt, surprise many; and I regret to say that during those years of undisputed republican rule in both branches of Congress the change has almost always been in the direction of increased appropriation and expenditure.

I will here mention a few notable instances of such legislation. They embrace changes in the staff and line both of the Army and Navy.

The Pacific Mail steamship subsidy found its place on such act.

The re-organization of the Post-Office Department.

The re-organization of the diplomatic and consular service.

The partial re-organization of the subtreasury system.

The prohibiting the pardon or amnesty of any claimant in the Court of Claims being admissible to establish his standing in court.

The re-organization of the civil service in the Treasury Department.

Legislation as to the enforcement act.

The manner of settlement of judgments by the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court as to capture of cotton.

The section declaring that the General of the Army shall be permanently stationed in Washington and only removed by the advice and consent of the Senate, and directing all Army orders to go through the General of the Army, whether issued by the President of the United States or by the Secretary of War.

On the appropriation bill last year the rates on newspapers were doubled, to the great injury of those in the rural sections especially, and the rates on third-class matter were so increased as to take it from the mails and drive it to the express companies.

I mention these few to show the general character and wide scope of the legislation which has been put into appropriation bills, and beg to refer to the appendix hereto annexed, which will show the enormous mass of legislation of greater or less importance which has been from time to time during the past ten years fastened on such acts, relating as it does to almost every conceivable subject.

Again, Mr. Speaker, as a natural result of the prostration of all business, the revenues of the Government have diminished to an alarming extent, and the warning held out to us was one not to be disregarded, as it might turn out in the coming fiscal year, the reduction would be so great that the revenues would fall below the amount required to meet the expenditures of the Government. In this emergency it was absolutely essential to provide for reduction of expenses rather than entail any increase of our interest-bearing debt or any addition to our present taxation. Nay, more; if the full measure of reductions recommended had been acceded to by the republican minority in this House and the majority in the Senate, then, even with a falling revenue, the internal and other taxes could have been reduced to an extent of say $10,000,000, with comparative safety.

Before I leave the general discussion of these subjects and go to a detailed examination of the respective appropriation acts, I wish to direct public attention to what I deem some abuses in reference to expenditure which have gradually accumulated until they have become of dangerous proportions. Under existing laws we have a system of what is known as "permanent specific" and "permanent indefinite" appropriations. They embrace among others the sum necessary to pay the interest on the public debt, the sum necessary to pay the interest on the bonds of the various Pacific railroads, and guaranteed by the United States, and the amount necessary to be paid in obedience to law to the sinking fund on account of the liquidation of the principal of the public debt.

In so far as the foregoing objects are concerned I do not raise serious objections. Their provisions go to make easy the mind of the public creditor by the certainty of no hitch in the prompt and regular payment of our public interest. But the laws go further and include others which in my judgment should pass under the annual supervision of Congress, among which are the sum necessary to collect the revenues from customs, which is only limited as to amount of expenditures by the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, a power too great for permanent safety; for arming and equipping the militia of the several States; the salaries and expenses of the southern claims commission; the return of the proceeds from the sale of captured and abandoned property to owners thereof; the commission to be paid to persons negotiating the refunding of the national debt ¼ of 1 per cent.; the salaries and expenses of the steamboat inspectors; the refunding of money due to owners or reputed owners of cotton improperly seized after the 30th of June, 1865; allowances and drawbacks in the Internal-Revenue Bureau; the refunding of illegal internal taxes; the repayment of duties levied in excess from customs as well as debentures, drawbacks, bounties, and allowances in the customs service. Most if not all of the latter character should have the frequent inspection of Congress and the people. I would suggest, therefore, at our next session legislation to remedy these dangers. About $18,000,000 pass each year out of the Treasury under these heads, in excess of the amount paid on account of interest on the public debt and the sinking fund, which is an enormous sum to be under the control of executive officers without check.

I shall now proceed to an examination of the several appropriation bills, in order of date as they were enacted into law.

PENSIONS.

Appropriations last year, $30,000,000; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $29,533,500; recommendation of House Committee on Appropriations, $29,533,500; House passed $29,533,500; Senate committee recommended $29,533,500; Senate passed $29,533,500; law as finally enacted, $29,533,500.

The respective committees of the two Houses and both Houses of Congress agreed in the amount to be appropriated for pensions, which was in full as indicated by the estimate.

A pleasant incident in connection with this appropriation was the fact of its being in committee and in the House in charge of a member of the committee [Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee] formerly an officer in the confederate army and a member of the confederate congress. Such exhibitions give the denial to the political charge that the leading men of the South still bear any hostility to the Union, for he was scrupulous in seeing that no pensioner of the Union suffered in the least degree.

Many reforms are imperatively needed in connection with the distribution of pensions.

The Committee on Pensions recommended the transfer of the Pension Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, where it formerly was, as appears by their report, for reasons, among others, as follows: Pension agencies which now cost annually $448,000, the Committee on Pensions report could be dispensed with and twenty efficient clerks divided equally among the four classes of clerks known to the law, at a cost of $30,000, could do the work as efficiently and with less delay than now occurs.

The work, if under the War Department, could be done in the main by the retired officers of the Army, with one-half pay in addition to present retired pay of such officers, and the amount of pay saved would be quite one-half. At present more than one-half is done at the Surgeon-General's and Adjutant-General's Offices. Both these Bureaus now employ one hundred and sixteen persons on this work and an equal number of additional clerks, if duties were transferred to War Department, to wit, two hundred and thirty-two clerks in all would be ample; whereas the present force in the Pension Bureau is over four hundred; near three hundred over what economy and necessity require. The character of the work is in a measure judicial, requiring legal knowledge; and yet last year one hundred and twenty-eight employés were discharged and ninety-six new appointments made—putting out experienced clerks and substituting for such men ignorant and inefficient persons in their stead. This was done mainly for political considerations. The truth is, as the evidences etablishes, the Bureau is run as a political machine. Two clerks of the national republican congressional committees of last year were entered on the pension-roll and paid from pension funds.

The War and Pension Departments being separate, there was required last year 56,000 duplicates of rolls from these two offices, requiring transmission by mail and messenger, which might all have been done in the same office. The fact is, the delays now incident to applications for pensions or increase of pensions, arise almost entirely from these separations of duty, causing years of delay to those least able to bear procrastination and those, too, who never ought to be subjected to such annoyances and privations.

I will allude to another abuse and then leave this branch of my subject. The finance division of the Pension Bureau can be dispensed with altogether, employing forty-eight clerks. This is set forth in Mr. Clark's testimony. In reply to a question whether that division ought not to be lopped off, he said:

If the work in the Auditor's Office was up to date, the work in the finance division would be useless.

There cannot therefore be a reasonable doubt as to the economy to be gained and the general propriety of the transfer.

DEFICIENCIES.

Appropriations last year, $4,703,699.18; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $2,723,471.70; recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $662,315.07; House passed $671,486.74; Senate committee recommended $840,831.27; Senate passed $840,831.27; the law as finally enacted, $816,723.56.

I believe these deficiencies are less than usual and heretofore, because of the knowledge by the Departments that a democratic House was to be in authority this year, notice having been given last year by the then democratic minority of the Forty-third Congress that the practice of allowing large deficiencies would not be countenanced. The Departments are, however, entitled to partial credit, for their estimates of deficiencies this year were considerably less than heretofore. The same rigid rule will be again applied, and the Departments must govern themselves accordingly.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Appropriations last year, $850,000; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $3,406,000; recommendations of House Committee on Appropriations, $315,000; House passed $315,000; Senate committee recommended $315,000; Senate passed $315,000; the law as finally enacted, $315,000.

This was a large comparative reduction, but I believe no material interests will suffer therefrom, either in respect to our fortifications or as to experiments to be made in the trial of armament or torpedoes. The largest-size guns of our recent war are now considered ineffective. Earth-works experience has shown to be the best protection against artillery on land or iron-clads on water. The sums so lavishly expended since the war have not brought any adequate return in these respects. In the past ten years, up to and including this year ending June 30, 1876, we appropriated for these purposes more than $13,000,000, a large amount of which could as well have been saved by the same character of reductions which we have made this year.

NAVY.

Naval service appropriation last year, $17,001,006.40. Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $20,871,666.40. Recommendations of House Committee on Appropriations, $12,808,655.40. House passed $12,432,855.40. Senate committee recommended $16,167,855.40. Senate passed $14,857,855.40. The law as finally enacted, $12,740,355.40.

The appropriations for the naval establishment are largely reduced. It is a branch of the service where large savings can be prudently made. I need not allude at length to the sums heretofore expended and the manner of their expenditure. The Department in its management has been thoroughly examined into by a committee of this House, and their findings are in print, which render a further criticism in this connection unnecessary. These reduced appropriations come up to the full measure of recommendations by the Naval Committee.

POST-OFFICE.

Post-office appropriations last year, $8,376,205; Department estimate for year ending June 30, 1877, $8,431,602.99; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $2,680,906; amount passed the House, $4,230,906; amount recommended by Senate Committee on Appropriations, $7,586,647; amount passed Senate, $7,288,647; the law as finally enacted, $5,967,498.

The reductions in this act arise mainly from the cutting off of the salaries of the higher class of postmasters, which have been confessedly too high, and the reduction of 10 per cent. on the amounts to be paid to the railroads for the transportation of mails, among which is what is known as the "fast mail." An erroneous impression prevails as to this latter service.

The fast mails were not provided for by law. Speed was not taken into consideration in determining the compensation. Weight and the number of postal cars were and are the elements in fixing the pay to railroads.

This extra line was first established less than a year ago by throwing an increase in the quantity of mail matter on these principal roads, thus increasing the number of postal cars, and with additional weight, causing an increased amount of payment to special roads. The compensation as fixed by act of March, 1873, was a very great increase over former rates. Prior to that time $375 per mile on all lines was the maximum rate. Under that act the pay on some lines was increased to $705 per mile per year, and on the fast lines as high as $1,016 per mile per year.

This Congress has reduced the rates for railroad service generally 10 per cent., which is a moderate reduction. The compensation on star lines and steamboat service has been reduced far more than 10 per cent. since March, 1873; in fact, from 10 to 30 per cent. The amount paid before the passage of the act of March, 1873, was considered high even for that period. The reduced price of every commodity which goes into the cost of running a railroad is far greater than 10 per cent. These roads have reduced the compensation to their employés, and together with a general shrinkage of values, it goes to show that the amount now fixed is comparatively higher than it was at the time the former rate was agreed to. I am indebted to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] for these facts and conclusions; and any one who knows his care and accuracy in such matters will at once accept them as true and correct.

After all that can be said, the benefits of the fast mail are divided between the railroads receiving the increased pay and the newspapers of our great cities in the quick transit of their papers. In this day of telegraphing the newspapers of the various cities of the Union are more on an equality in furnishing promptly the important news of the day, which renders continuance of these high rates unnecessary even for the people in receiving prompt public information.

The post-office appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1876, raised the rates of postage on third-class mail matter, so as to take it from the mails and give the monopoly of its transportation to the express companies, while at the same time the postage on newspapers was doubled.

The latter imposition has been removed by the legislation of this year, but the first still remains a burden upon the people in behalf of the express companies, and is estimated as worth to those companies half a million dollars per annum in increased receipts from transportation of merchandise, &c. The House at every opportunity sought to accomplish full repeal of both provisions, but the Senate was obdurate, and refused to concede the repeal of the merchandise portion of the act.

ARMY.

Appropriation last year, $27,933,830; Department estimate for year ending June 30, 1877, $33,348,748.50; recommendation of House Committee on Appropriations $23,155,077.12; House passed $23,179,819.52; Senate committee recommended $27,715,877.20; Senate passed $27,715,877.20; the law as finally enacted, $25,987,167.90.

The Army appropriation act does not show that extent of reduction which we intended and had reason to hope we should obtain at the opening of the session because of our Indian troubles, and because of the determination of the Administration to keep a large force in the South. The House bill fixed the Army at 22,000 soldiers, relatively divided between the three arms of the service, and sought in addition to reduce the compensations of certain officers which were deemed disproportionate and too high. The manner of payment of these compensations is in some respects highly objectionable, rendering it almost impossible to compute with accuracy the pay received by officers in the Army. The Senate was resolute against all these changes, and the House was compelled to yield, and only succeeded in securing the following legislation:

SEC. 24. That the whole subject-matter of reform and re-organization of the Army of the United States shall be referred to the commission hereinafter provided for, who shall carefully and thoroughly examine into the matter with reference to the demands of the public service, as to the number and pay of men and officers and the proportion of the several arms, and also as to the rank, pay, and duties of the several staff corps, and whether any and what reductions can be made either in the line or staff, in numbers or in pay, by consolidation or otherwise, consistently with the public service, having in view a just and reasonable economy in the expenditure of public money, the actual necessities of the military service, and the capacity for rapid and effective increase in time of actual war. The commission hereby created shall consist of two members of the Senate and two members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the presiding officers of each House, respectively, of the Secretary of War, and two officers of the Army, one from the line and one from the staff corps, to be selected by the President with special reference to their knowledge of the organization and experience in service. Such commission shall assemble as soon as practicable and proceed to the consideration of the matters with which they are charged, and make report to Congress by the first day of the next session through the President of the United States, with all the evidence, record or otherwise, which they shall have received and considered. And the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated from the contingent fund of the War Department to defray the expenses of such commission, to be expended under the direction of the president of said commission.

The result of the foregoing, it is believed, will ultimately remedy some defects. We felt that they were so glaring as to demand immediate change.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Appropriation last year, $26,644,350.09; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $32,560,475.29; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $14,626,981,74; amount passed the House $14,857,326.54; Senate committee recommended $18,501,601.24; Senate passed 19,956,496.99; the law as finally enacted, $16,357,905.47.

This act which covers the sundry civil expenses of the Government, is that upon which it is attempted to ingraft all doubtful schemes and unnecessary expenses, which to any other general appropriation bill would be ruled out of order as not germane.

In reference to this particular act, the President of the United States saw fit, although approving the same, to send a message condemning the character of our reductions. I propose now, and here, with due respect to the Chief Magistrate, to inquire into the justice of his criticisms.

In the first place, he says:

Notably among the first class is the reduction in the ordinary annual appropriations for the revenue-cutter service, to the prejudice of the customs revenue.

This criticism is completely refuted by a plain statement of the facts which show that the amount appropriated is in excess of the amount expended in the revenue-cutter service during the last fiscal year. The expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1876, were $842,000, and the appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1877, $874,891, the latter exceeding the former more than $30,000.

Next as to the amount given to continue the Signal Service. This service cost last year nearly a million dollars. It has grown to be an immense Bureau in its workings, and we think is extravagantly conducted. It draws its resources from three appropriation bills, the legislative, the army, and the sundry civil, and aggregates, as stated, $1,000,000. We are advised that the Western Union Telegraph Company can perform the same service with equal satisfaction to the public for one-half the money, and that the company is willing to undertake it at that reduction. This we understand is also the opinion of many officers heretofore in charge of the War Department. Our reductions, in view of this statement, have been very moderate, amounting to $100,000 in the general expense provided for in the sundry civil bill and of only fifty enlisted men in the Army for this corps. At some of the stations the employés numbered as high as seven, and by careful revision of the force at the several stations this reduction of fifty men will hardly be felt.

The criticism as to the mints evidently arose from want of knowledge of the amounts appropriated in the several bills. It would have been seen by examination that the amount appropriated for running the mints and assay offices was fully up to the necessities of the country, even taking into consideration the increased expense for coining subsidiary silver recently authorized by law in substitution of fractional currency.

Now as to the objection urged to reductions of appropriations for the construction of public buildings throughout the country and the building for the State, War, and Navy Departments in the city of Washington. The policy which guided the House was to make appropriations this year for no building the construction of which had not yet been commenced, and in making appropriations for those already begun to give a sufficient sum to finish and furnish those of smaller size, such as the custom-house at New Orleans; the custom-house and post-office at Raleigh, North Carolina; the custom-house and post-office at Trenton, New Jersey; the custom-house and post-office at Port Huron, Michigan; the custom-house and post-office at Parkersburgh, West Virginia; the court-house and post-office at Lincoln, Nebraska, and the custom-house and post-office at Rockland, Maine, giving the balance which we deemed wise to appropriate in a moderate degree to the larger structures, so as to go on with the work slowly. The appropriation is two millions less than last year, when the appropriations for public buildings, new and old, were unusually extravagant.

As to the appropriation for new structure for the State, War, and Navy Departments in the city of Washington, it was under the same rule. The expenditures for this structure are made an exception, all the others being under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, while this is under an engineer of the Army, General O. E. Babcock.

For the repairs and preservation of the navy-yards we gave $100,000 against $500,000 last year. We deemed that for the legitimate purposes of repairs proper at the different navy-yards and stations and the preservation of the same $100,000 is adequate, and believed the half million heretofore given was diverted to other purposes not properly chargeable to this particular service.

In reference to armories and arsenals the reductions, except in one or two instances of no small amount, were those recommended by the late Secretary of War, Mr. Taft, in his communication to Congress revising the estimates of his predecessor.

In regard to the judicial expenses of the Government, reduction was made upon the recommendation of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and justified after thorough investigation by exposure of the most outrageous frauds upon the Government, perpetrated by marshals and other United States officers, the most flagrant of which were in the States of Arkansas and North Carolina. The justice and propriety of this reduction are undoubted.

The action of the committee concerning surveys of the public lands was taken after full conference with members on both sides of the House, representing western districts, as well as with Delegates from the Territories. The gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] when the bill came up first for consideration, used the following language:

> There are many things in this appropriation bill referring to the public lands which meet my approval. I believe that we have appropriated a much larger sum of money in years past for the survey of the public lands than was needed, and I have said to members of the Committee on Appropriations that I believed there could be retrenchment and a saving of money in this direction at the present time, and while I represent a western land State, I am very free to say that we may appropriate no more than is in this bill with a very good reason for the present year. I do not believe that a single State or a single Territory will suffer practically by this reduction.

It is only necessary for me to add the further fact, that there are now 160,000,000 acres of the public domain surveyed and undisposed of.

The President further complained that we had impaired the efficiency of the light-house service. Reference to figures shows the complaint to be without foundation. The appropriation last year was $1,999,000 and for this year $2,018,600, the appropriation for this year being nearly $20,000 over that of last year.

Appropriations for light-houses, beacons, and fog-lights were made after consultation with the proper officer having that service in charge and we gave a sum sufficient, as we were advised, for all that was absolutely necessary during the fiscal year. There were some which were desirable for which we did not make appropriation, but they were not such as we thought to be demanded now.

Appropriations for the District of Columbia are generally included in this act, and I need not stop to give the reasons why we sought to be cautious in whatever we did. Past experience has shown such profligacy in the management of the affairs of this District that common justice to the people required we should surround all our appropriations with every possible safeguard.

We authorized an advance from the Treasury of the United States of the money necessary to meet the interest on the public debt of the District for the entire fiscal year; thus preventing any default of prompt payment like that which has heretofore occurred, although a portion of the debt had been reported by a committee of this House to have been illegally contracted.

We also appropriated for the various charities and charitable institutions within the District; authorized the repaving of Pennsylvania avenue, a proportionate share of the expense to be borne by the Government; provided for the payment of one-half of the expense of the police and board of health; and, besides, allowed the government of the District to increase the temporary debt to the extent of over $400,000, so that no embarrassment should or is likely to occur. The appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1875, amounted to $2,962,251.11, almost all of which was exclusively for the benefit of the people of the District. The amount appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1876, was $1,865,136.43.

The implied statement by the President that the aggregate appropriations of the sundry civil bill are in amount not more than 65 per cent. of those heretofore made should command approbation rather than censure.

For life-saving and life-boat stations our appropriations are in excess of those made last year. We gave this year $237,460, while the amount appropriated last year was $231,580. Surely we cannot be charged with injuring this humane service of the Government when we have in this democratic House appropriated more than was appropriated by the previous republican House.

The appropriation for public printing and binding we reduce largely on the recommendation of the Committee on Printing of this House, which established the fact of gross abuse and extravagance in the administration of that Office. The amount asked for the current year was $2,296,056.56. The amount given last year was $1,665,507.66. The amount allowed this year, under advice of the Committee on Printing, is $1,133,737.50, about half a million dollars less than the appropriation last year. The report of this committee, to which I have alluded, clearly establishes the fact that this sum should have been sufficient to have done the work last year if the proper prices had been paid for material and the running expense had been rightfully adjusted.

For the support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers we gave the exact amount asked, $668,733.44.

The appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1868, were $5,307,191.38. In 1870 they had crept up to $9,976,228.81. In 1872 they further advanced to $24,161,773.86. Finally, in 1874, they reached the enormous amount of $32,186,129. In 1875, when the distress in the country became so prevalent it could no longer pass unheeded, even in a republican House of Representatives, we find there was a small reduction from $32,186,129 to $27,009,744.81; in 1876, to $26,644,350. We have reduced the sundry civil expenses this year below the appropriation of last year $10,441,780.01 appropriating only about one-half the amount appropriated in 1874, being a reduction of about $16,000,000.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Appropriations last year, $364,740; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $437,470; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $231,241; amount passed the House, $259,231; Senate committee recommended $308,841; Senate passed $308,841; the law as finally enacted, $290,065.

There was in controversy between the two Houses the question of compensation to professors at West Point. The House deemed that in some instances, being over $6,000 per annum, they were higher than for similar services in civil life, especially when we take into consideration the fact that these professors without encountering any of the privations, hardships, and dangers of Army life are when they reach a condition of impaired usefulness placed upon the retired list, and receive three-quarters of their pay at the time they are retired. The Senate demanded the question of this reduction should be remitted to the commission created to inquire into the re-organization of the Army, and the House was compelled to accede thereto.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

River and harbor appropriations last year, $6,643,517.50; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $14,301,100; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $5,872,850; amount passed the House, $5,872,850; Senate committee recommended $4,993,000; Senate passed $5,000,000; the law as finally enacted, $5,000,000.

This bill was not made up by the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore I have not that full knowledge which would warrant me in speaking of its details in comparison with previous bills with the same certainty that I am able to do concerning the eleven other appropriation bills. It is, however, a large reduction upon the amount appropriated last year for the same purposes, and an immense reduction, as will be seen by the foregoing figures, upon the estimates of the Department.

INDIAN BILL.

Appropriations last year, $5,360,554.55; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $5,787,995.60; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $3,905,771.27; amount passed the House, $3,979,602.11; Senate committee recommended $5,206,861.27; Senate passed $4,958,361.27; the law as finally enacted, $4,670,117.02.

The principal disagreement between the two Houses related to the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department. The House believed that the management of Indian affairs could be more economically and efficiently administered by Army officers already under pay than by civil officers, under whom had grown up a wide-spread system of peculation upon the Indian, as well as upon the Government. One of the grounds which induced the Indian to go to war against the white man was that treaty stipulations in reference to the delivery of subsistence and other supplies were not faithfully fulfilled. An Army officer holding a life position dependent upon integrity and good behavior, and with a strong desire for promotion, which can only occur upon the active and faithful discharge of his duties, is more likely to execute the promises of the Government toward the Indian than the civil officer who comes in and goes out with every change of Administration. And the present double-headed system of dispensing subsistence and supplies to the Indians through the agency of civil officers, while restraining and keeping them at peace by the military arm, has been proved by long experience to be not only enormously expensive, but without any adequate beneficial results either to the Indians or to the Government. The hand that feeds should be the hand to punish in case of wrong-doing. Viewed as an economic question, we have General Sheridan for authority, and almost all of the officers who have come into collision with the Indians, to show that the opinion I here express is the just one.

There is a misconception as to the Army officer. He does not desire constant warfare with the Indians, for, while he has to undergo great privation and hardship, he at the same time endangers his life in battle with the Indians without that honor which attaches to warfare between civilized nations. Indeed, of all the people in the world, the Army officer has less to gain and more to lose by Indian hostilities than any other of our citizens.

The House authorized the transfer in the Indian appropriation bill, having previously passed a separate proposition on the same subject, which was transmitted to the Senate on the 25th of April last, but which the Senate never took up for consideration or discussion. Incidentally, however, they did discuss the clause in the Indian bill, and voted it down, upon the ground that it was a change of law upon an appropriation bill. We think the country had a right to expect from the Senate more consideration of this subject, and the House only yielded at last, when longer persistence would result in unlimited extension of the session without corresponding good.

The mismanagement now existing, although unfortunate, is well illustrated by the fact that the hostile Sioux are armed with better weapons than the troops put into the field against them. At this very session we have been compelled to pass a law prohibiting the Indian agents from further supplying to these hostile Indians improved arms and ammunition. I doubt neither the propriety nor the absolute necessity of the proposed transfer, and only regret to say the proposition has been defeated in the Senate more by indirection than by open opposition.

Let me pause for a moment to state a fact which carries with it its own commentary. While there are in the Army 26,000 men, 15,000 of them in the Military Division of the Missouri, embracing the whole Black Hills country where the recent fights and massacres occurred, General Terry and General Crook have been left until lately to resist the combined hostile Indians under Sitting Bull with a force of less than three thousand men. We are now asked to add to the Army twenty-five hundred cavalry, when it must be apparent to the most casual observer that such addition is entirely unnecessary if the force was taken from where it is of no service whatever and transferred to where it is needed to win success to our arms.

I yet hope for the transfer at the next session. We have made reductions, even under its present inefficient management, of $700,000 or thereabouts.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Appropriations last year, $1,374,985; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $1,352,485; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $922,847.50; amount passed the House, $912,747.50; Senate committee recommended $1,341,647.50; Senate passed $1,341,647.50; the law as finally enacted, $1,158,579.50.

The House held that our diplomatic service was conducted with unnecessary expense and that the salaries paid to foreign ministers were excessive when contrasted with the salaries paid to other governmental officials, while at the same time officers of the highest diplomatic rank were accredited to governments where chargés d'affaires with greatly reduced salaries would be equally efficient. The truth is that all important matters in controversy between this and foreign governments are to-day directly negotiated and adjusted through by the State Department at Washington, and therefore in many cases the position of foreign minister is little more than a costly sinecure. Under what is known as the Orth bill, the salaries of these officers were increased, and that increase in a measure we have taken off.

It must not be forgotten that our ministers abroad are not valuable for any service they render to our commerce, but that, on the contrary, it is our consular system which is brought into direct contact with the American shipping, and therefore we would like to see that thorough revision of the consular system which will secure its improvement and greater efficiency.

The claim because the consular system is not only self-supporting, but has an excess over receipts from the payment of fees, that therefore all the money received should be expended in the service, is about as just as to claim that the customsrevenue and the internal revenue because of receipts beyond expenditures should likewise be administered with extravagance.

We have not secured the reductions we sought, and which we believed to be proper, but we have at least accomplished enough to reward us for the effort.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Appropriations last year, $18,902,236.99; Department estimates for year ending June 30, 1877, $20,836,307; amount recommended by House Committee on Appropriations, $13,009,807.61; amount passed the House, $12,998,815.61; Senate committee recommended, $16,606,858; Senate passed, $16,635,338; the law as finally enacted, $15,373,960.

The great struggle of the session took place on this bill. I have already spoken of our plan of reduction, both as to the force and the salary of Government employés. The House sought to reduce both, while the Senate, with equal tenacity, resisted reduction either of force or salary. The result of the controversy is that while we recommended twelve hundred and twelve reduction of clerks and employés, they have yielded but seven hundred and sixty-five, who are to go out of office on the 10th day of October. We agreed to make this reduction gradual, one-third on the 10th of September, one-third on the 10th of October, and one-third on the 10th of November; but the Secretary of Treasury requested we should change it in the manner in which it has been finally agreed to, to wit, that the entire reduction shall take place on the 10th of October.

The House incorporated in this bill a clause repealing the increase of the salary of the President from $25,000 to $50,000 a year, providing that on and after the 4th day of March, 1877, the salary of the President of the United States should be $25,000 per annum. The House saw nothing wrong in this, since both Houses of Congress at this session had passed a bill on the same subject to the same effect. The bill originated in the Senate and was returned to that body vetoed by the President. This salary was doubled when the salaries of Senators and Representatives were increased, and it was equally condemned by the people. The salaries of Senators and Representatives were restored to $5,000, but the Constitution intervened to prevent any reduction of the President's salary from $50,000 a year during his term of office. Therefore it was that, in obedience to the will of the people, we provided for the restoration of the salary of the President to $25,000, beginning with the expiration of the present presidential term. The Senate struck this clause out of the House bill, and the House conferees, unwilling to yield on this point, referred the subject to the two Houses. The Senate still adhered, and finally the House was compelled to yield.

This increase of the President's salary was originally made upon an appropriation bill which the President signed without demur, and the House saw a fitness therefore that the repeal of the obnoxious increase which the people so unmistakably condemned should be passed in a bill of a like character. When salaries are increased upon appropriation bills, there is no hesitation, no impropriety, no injustice, but everything is right and just and lawful; but when an effort is made to decrease salaries, and lighten the burden upon the tax-payers, then it is all wrong, and to be fought to the last extremity. I have the sincere conviction that the people will see this matter in its true light, and if we have gained nothing else in our retrenchment efforts we have made a great step in advance in favor of economical administration when we have attracted public attention to these crying evils.

The next point of difference was as to the compensation of Senators and Representatives. The House applied the general rule of 10 per cent. reduction, because it seemed only fair when starting out to reduce all other salaries we should first begin with our own. The Senate refused to yield, and the House conferees were equally firm, and the question finally was remitted to the House, and the decision was similar to that in the case of the President's salary.

It was urged on the part of the Senate that when the salary was reduced to $5,000 the franking privilege had been abolished, and therefore the charge upon Senators and Representatives for postage was about equal to the proposed 10 per cent. decrease. This at the time seemed proper to take into consideration; but since the House was compelled to yield the Senate has restored the franking privilege so far as that body could. This action on their part certainly will not escape criticism.

The Senate refused to reduce in any respect the salaries of the higher departmental and bureau officers. They were willing to reduce the intermediate salaries—that is, of those between the higher positions and the three classes of clerks receiving $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800 per annum—and on those changed only consented to a reduction of 5 per cent., so that these intermediate salaries are the only ones which have been reduced in the Departments, under the operation of the bill as it was enacted into law.

Another effort in favor of reduction of expenditures was made by the House in reference to the employés and attachés of the two Houses. These expenses have gradually grown to very large sums, and are altogether disproportionate to what is fairly required by the needs of the service. Last year the Senate expenditures were $282,276.80. The House recommended a reduction to $170,840. The Senate committee increased this to $245,648. The bill as passed appropriates $273,520.80. The House expenditures last year were $378,975.70. The House committee recommended a reduction to $295,948, which the Senate increased to $345,511.20. The bill as passed appropriates $312,028. The Senate claimed the right, which has been heretofore conceded, to have the exclusive control of the number and pay of their employés. The reduction therefore in the expenses of the Senate between this and last year is only a little over $8,000, while the House have reduced their expenses $67,000. The House were compelled to raise their expenses somewhat from the original recommendation because of the great disparity which the Senate insisted upon in favor of the salaries of their employés.

As an illustration of how the number and salaries in the Senate and House have increased in a few years, I herewith submit a statement, originally reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House:

Comparative exhibit showing relative force and compensation of the two Houses of Congress.

Estimates for 1876–'77.		Appropriations for 1865.
Officers and employés, Senate.	Salaries.
Secretary of the Senate	$4,320 00		$3,600 00
Officers charged with the disbursements.	576 00		480 00
Chief Clerk	3,000 00		2,500 00
Additional to Chief Clerk (while said office is held by present incumbent.)	1,000 00
Principal clerk	3,000 00		2,160 00
Principal executive clerk	3,000 00		2,160 00
Minute and journal clerk	3,000 00
Financial clerk	3,000 00
Librarian	2,220 00
Seven clerks, at $2,220 each	15,540 00	Eight at $1,850 each	14,800 00
Clerk of printing records	2,220 00		1,850 00
Five clerks, at $2,100 each	10,500 00
Keeper of stationery	2,102 40		1,750 00
Assistant keeper of stationery	1,800 00
Messenger	1,296 00	2 messengers $1,800 each	2,160 00
Special policeman	1,296 00	1 policeman	480 00
		1 page	500 00
Chaplain	900 00		750 00
Secretary to the Vice-President	2,102 40		1,700 00
Clerk to Committee on Finance	2,220 00		1,850 00
Clerk to Committee on Claims	2,220 00		1,850 00
Clerk to Committee on Appropriations.	2,220 00
Clerk to Committee on Commerce, 1874.	2,220 00
Clerk to Committee on the Judiciary, 1875.	2,220 00
Clerk to Committee on Private Land Claims, S. C., 1875.	2,220 00
Telegraph operator, at the rate of $100 per month during session of Congress.	500 00
Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper	4,320 00		2,000 00
Assistant doorkeeper	2,592 00		1,700 00
Acting assistant doorkeeper	2,592 00
Postmaster	2,100 00		1,750 00
Assistant postmaster	2,088 00	And mail carrier	1,440 00
Two mail carriers, at $1,200 each	2,400 00	$900 each	1,800 00
Superintendent of document-room	2,160 00		1,500 00
Two assistants in document-room, at $1,440 each.	2,880 00	$1,200 each	2,400 00
Superintendent of folding-room	2,160 00		1,500 00
Three messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, at $1,800 each.	5,400 00	Two messengers, $1,500 each.	3,000 00
Twenty messengers, at $1,440 each	28,800 00	Seventeen messengers, at $1,200 each	20,400 00
Laborer in charge of private passage.	864 00		600 00
Laborer in charge of ladies' room	720 00
Chief engineer	2,100 00	Superintendent in charge of furnace	1,200 00
Four assistant engineers, at $1,440 each	5,760 00	Assistant	600 00
Two firemen, at $1,095 each	2,190 00
Three laborers, at $730 each	2,190 00	Two laborers, at $600 each.	1,200 00
Total	146,068 80	Total	79,682 00
Officers and employés House of Representatives.
Clerk of the House	$4,320 00		3,600 00
Officer charged with disbursing the contingent fund.	576 00
Chief clerk and journal clerk, at $3,600 each.	7,200 00	And one assistant, at $2,160 each	4,320 00
Two reading clerks, assistant journal clerk, and tally clerk, at $3,000 each.	12,000 00
Four assistant clerks, at $2,592 each	10,368 00	Eleven clerks, at $1,800 each	19,800 00
One assistant clerk	2,220 00
Eight assistant clerks, including librarian and assistant librarian, at $2,160 each.	17,280 00
Four assistant clerks, at $1,800 each	7,200 00		1,752 00
Chief messenger in office of Clerk of the House, at $5.76 per day.	2,102 40	Three messengers, at $1,200 each	3,600 00
Superintendent of document-room of Clerk of the House.	1,800 00	Messenger to the Speaker.	1,752 00
Three messengers, including messenger in library, at $1,440 each.	4,320 00
One engineer	1,800 00
Three assistant engineers, at $1,440 each.	4,320 00
Six firemen, at $1,095 each	6,570 00
Clerk to Committee of Ways and Means.	2,592 00
Messenger to Committee of Ways and Means.	1,314 00		1,800 00
Clerk to Committee on Appropriations.	2,592 00
Messenger to Committee on Appropriations.	1,314 00
Clerk to Committee of Claims	2,160 00		1,800 00
Clerk to Committee on War Claims	2,160 00
Clerk to Committee on Public Lands	2,160 00		1,800 00
Clerk at Speaker's table, at $5.76 per day.	2,102 40

Comparative exhibit showing relative force and compensation of the two Houses of Congress—Continued.

Estimates for 1876–'77.		Appropriations for 1865.
Officers and employés House—Continued	Salaries.
Private secretary to Speaker	$2,102 40
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.	4,320 00		$2,160 00
Clerk to Sergeant-at-Arms	2,500 00		1,800 00
Paying teller to Sergeant-at-Arms	1,800 00
Messenger to Sergeant-at-Arms	1,440 00		1,200 00
Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.	2,592 00		2,160 00
Assistant doorkeeper	2,592 00
Postmaster of the House of Representatives.	2,592 00		2,160 00
Assistant postmaster	1,800 00	Two mail-boys, at $900 each, and four messengers, at $1,440	1,740 00
Fourteen messengers, seven at $1,500 each, and seven at $1,200 each	18,900 00		7,560 00
Chaplain of the House of Representatives.	900 00		750 00
Two stenographers, at $4,200 each	8,400 00
Superintendent of the folding-room	2,160 00		1,800 00
Superintendent and assistant of document-room, at $2,160 each.	4,320 00
Document file clerk	1,800 00
Five messengers, at $1,800 each	9,000 00	Two messengers, at $1,752 each.	3,504 00
Six messengers, at $1,440 each	8,640 00	One messenger, at $1,740.	1,740 00
Twelve messengers, during session of Congress, (seven months,) at $1,440 each per annum.	10,080 00	Five messengers, at $1,500 each.	7,500 00
Fifteen laborers, at $720 each	10,800 00	Six messengers, at $1,200 each.	7,200 00
Seven laborers, during session of Congress, (seven months,) at $720 each per annum.	2,940 00	Twelve messengers, during the session, at $1,200 each per annum.	4,800 00
Two laborers, one at $820 and one at $917.50.	1,737 50	For fuel, lights, pay of engineers, firemen, and laborers, repairs, &c.	12,000 00
One woman for attending in ladies' retiring-room.	600 00
Total	200,786 70	Total	84,498 00

One other valuable result accomplished is the enactment of a clause in the direction of civil-service reform, prohibiting all officers or employés of the Government not appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate from requiring or requesting, giving to or receiving from, any other officer or employé of the same, or other person, directly or indirectly, any money, property, or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employé doing so shall be dismissed at once from the service of the United States, and also be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum of not more than $500.

I now append in tabular form a comparative recapitulation, from which it will be seen that between the appropriations of this year and last year we have made a reduction within a fraction of $30,000,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have made an estimate of the amount of money to each congressional district, and find that it would be $102,555.65. And I have also estimated the amount which this would save annually to the State of Illinois, the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and I find it would be $1,948,557.35, and my friend from New York [Mr. COX] suggests that this would amount to an annual saving of $3,384,336.45 to the State of New York. Every gentleman can make the computation for his own State. This is a most important result, and when brought home to the people of each district they will not fail to appreciate the fact. By the action of this House, through the efficient services of the Committee on Appropriations, an annual burden of $102,555.65 has been lifted from the shoulders of the tax-payers of each congressional district.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the reduction on the estimates?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the amount of reduction for each congressional district.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount is $102,555.65.

Mr. FOSTER. On the estimates or appropriations?

Mr. SPRINGER. On the appropriations actually made.

Mr. FOSTER. As against the estimates or appropriations?

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot yield further.

The re-appropriations in Army and sundry civil bills are added in our aggregates.

Early in the session, under provocation in debate, but after careful examination and close study, I stated it as my belief that the expenditures of the Government could be reduced from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 without being prejudical in any degree to an efficient administration of all governmental functions. At the time this was considered to be an exaggeration. Events, however, have demonstrated the correctness of the statement. And I regret to say that in our struggle with the Senate we have been compelled to yield to that body to the extent of $10,500,000 from the reduction proposed by the House committee. In another year, we hope and believe, the Senate, by the verdict of the people, will concur with us in that regard. And I here assert that, with a Chief Magistrate acting in harmony with the purpose of the present House, a further reduction can readily be made of $10,000,000, bringing with it no difficulties in the administration of the Government.

These facts and figures, Mr. Speaker, speak for themselves, and need no elaboration at my hands. Upon the result which they demonstrate we rest our claim of having earnestly and faithfully discharged our duty to the people in the way which they required when they sent us here. We have not reduced expenditures as much as they expected; but that we have not done so is no fault of ours.

One more suggestion and I will close. I believe the real, natural, safe, and permanent way to the resumption of specie payments is in the reduction of the expenditures of the Government to what is needed by an economical administration. Human foresight, in my judgment, cannot fix the exact hour or day when it shall take place. But, the truth is self-evident, if we save $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 a year, we not only provide the means for a speedy resumption by the establishment of a rigid economy and just expenditure, but we establish that confidence which must inevitably precede the desired result. [Loud applause.]

The following are the tables referred to:

COMPARATIVE RECAPITULATION.

Objects.	Estimates of the Departments for 1877.	House Committee on Appropriations recommend for 1877.	Amount as passed House for 1877.	Amount as passed Senate committee for 1877.	Amount as passed Senate.	Law for the year 1877.	Law for the year 1876.
Pensions	$29,533,500 00	$29,533,500 00	$29,533,500 00	$29,533,500 00	$29,533,500 00	$29,533,500 00	$30,000,000 00
Military Academy	437,470 00	231,241 00	259,231 00	308,841 00	308,841 00	290,065 00	364,740 00
Consular and diplomatic	1,352,485 00	922,847 50	912,747 50	1,341,647 50	1,341,647 50	1,158,579 50	1,374,985 00
Fortifications, &c	3,406,000 00	315,000 00	315,000 00	315,000 00	315,000 00	315,000 00	850,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	20,836,307 00	13,009,807 61	12,998,815 61	16,606,858 00	16,635,338 00	15,373,960 00	18,902,236 99
River and harbor	14,301,100 00	5,872,850 00	5,872,850 00	4,993,000 00	5,000,000 00	5,000,000 00	6,643,517 50
Deficiency	2,723,471 70	662,315 07	671,486 74	840,831 27	840,831 27	816,723 56	4,703,699 18
Post-office	37,939,805 99	32,189,109 00	33,739,109 00	37,094,850 00	36,796,850 00	35,475,701 00	37,524,361 00
Naval service	20,871,666 40	12,808,655 40	12,432,855 40	16,167,855 40	14,857,855 40	12,740,355 40	17,001,006 40
Indian	5,787,995 60	3,905,771 27	3,979,602 11	5,206,861 27	4,958,361 27	4,670,117 02	5,360,554 55
Army	33,348,748 50	23,155,077 12	23,179,819 52	27,715,877 20	27,715,877 20	25,987,167 90	27,933,830 00
Sundry civil	32,560,475 29	14,626,981 74	14,857,326 54	18,501,601 24	19,956,496 99	16,357,905 47	26,644,350 09
Total	203,099,025 48	137,233,155 71	138,752,343 42	158,626,722 88	158,260,598 63	147,719,074 85	177,663,327 71

Reductions in Appropriations.

Object.	From estimates.	From last year's law.
HOUSE COMMITTEE REDUCTIONS.
Pensions		$466,500 00
Military Academy	$206,229 00	133,499 00
Consular and diplomatic	429,637 50	452,137 50
Fortifications	3,091,000 00	535,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	7,826,499 39	5,892,429 38
River and harbor	8,428,250 00	770,667 50
Deficiencies	2,061,156 63	4,041,384 11
Post-office	5,750,696 99	5,335,252 00
Naval service	8,063,011 00	4,192,351 00
Indian	1,882,224 33	1,454,783 28
Army	10,193,671 38	4,778,752 88
Sundry civil	17,933,493 55	12,017,368 35
Total	65,865,869 77	40,430,172 00

Object.	From estimates.	From last year.
HOUSE REDUCTIONS.
Pensions		$466,500 00
Military Academy	$178,239 00	105,509 00
Consular and diplomatic	439,737 50	462,237 50
Fortifications	3,091,000 00	535,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	7,837,491 39	5,903,421 38
River and harbor	8,428,250 00	770,667 50
Deficiencies	2,051,984 96	4,032,212 44
Post-office	4,200,696 99	4,145,299 00
Naval service	8,438,811 00	4,568,151 00
Indian	1,808,393 49	1,380,952 44
Army	10,168,928 98	4,754,010 48
Sundry civil	17,703,148 75	11,787,023 55
Total	64,346,682 06	38,910,984 29

Object.	From estimates.	From last year.
THIS YEAR'S LAW REDUCTIONS
Pensions		$466,500 00
Military Academy	$147,405 00	74,675 00
Consular and diplomatic	193,905 50	216,405 50
Fortifications	3,091,000 00	535,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	5,462,347 00	3,528,276 99
River and harbor	9,301,100 00	1,643,517 50
Deficiencies	1,906,748 14	3,886,975 62
Post-office	2,464,104 99	2,408,707 00
Naval service	8,131,311 00	4,260,651 00
Indian	1,117,878 58	690,437 53
Army	7,361,580 60	1,946,662 10
Sundry civil	16,202,569 82	10,286,444 62
Total	55,379,950 63	29,944,252 86

APPENDIX.

Statement showing in brief synopsis instances of independent legislation upon appropriation laws during the last ten years, referred to by date and title of law.

1866.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL.

1. Directing the manner of disbursement of the unexpended balance of $250,000 appropriated by act of March, 1865, for compensation of temporary clerks and for additional compensation to clerks in the Treasury Department.

2. Fixes the number and pay of force in the office of the assistant treasurer in Boston.

3. Authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the whole or any portion of the machinery at the branch mints at New Orleans, Charlotte, and Dahlonega to such other branch mints as may require the same, or to discontinue the said mints and dispose of the property belonging thereto.

4. Sections 2 and 3 increase the salary of the Treasurer of the United States to $6,500, and that of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, &c., to $2,500.

5. Section 4 increases and re-organizes the force in the executive offices, authorizing as follows: Private Secretary, $3,500; assistant secretary, $2,500; short-hand writer, $2,500; clerk of pardons, $2,000; three clerks of fourth class and a steward, at $2,000, the latter to have the custody of all the public property in the President's House, and give a bond in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior may deem sufficient.

6. Section 6 increases the pay of female clerks and counters from $720 to $900.

7. Section 7 continues in force the provisions of the legislative act appropriating, for the year ending June 30, 1865, 20 per cent. additional to the pay of certain employés.

8. Section 8 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to appoint in the different Bureaus of his Department forty-three clerks of various classes.

9. Section 9 provides for a continuance of increased compensation of inspectors of customs in certain ports, in conformity to act of April 29, 1864.

10. Section 10 prescribes the manner of adjustment of accounts of Stewart Gwynn, under and by the authority of the legislative act providing for the year ending June 30, 1866.

11. Section 12 provides for payment of the proper informers' moieties, &c., in cases where moneys accruing to the United States from fines, &c., have been erroneously received and covered in the Treasury before said payment.

ARMY.

1. Section 4 provides for manner of obtaining supplies for the Quartermaster's Department, and conditionally prescribes preference for articles of American manufacture and produced on the Pacific coast.

2. Section 5 repeals section 17 of the act of July 17, 1862, and a resolution of April 4, 1862, in regard to assignment of command of troops and pay and emoluments of certain officers, and provides that no officer in the military or naval service in time of peace shall be dismissed except in pursuance of sentence of court-martial or in commutation thereof.

3. Section 6 provides that the Superintendent and officers of the Military Academy may be selected and detailed from any arm of the service, and its charge and supervision shall be under the War Department, under such officers as the Secretary of War may assign.

4. Section 7 provides for extra pay for soldiers employed as artificers or laborers in constant labor of not less than ten days, &c.

Section 8 increases mileage of officers traveling under orders to ten cents per mile.

NAVY.

1. Directions to Secretary of Navy in connection of purchase of Seavey's Island.

2. Section 2 amends act of May 21, 1864, appropriating bounties for destruction of enemy's vessel.

3. Section 3 provides that no payment of the appropriations made by this act shall be made in violation of the act of July 2, 1862, to prescribe an oath of office.

4. Section 4 repeals the act prohibiting allowance to officers in the service for rent of quarters, &c., and all acts or parts of acts authorizing the appointment of Navy agents.
5. Section 5 provides that the Secretary of the Navy may direct the time of examination of candidates for admission to the Naval Academy.
6. Section 6 abolishes office of assistant in Bureau of Ordnance.
7. Section 7 prohibits vacancy in the grade of professor of mathematics.
8. Section 8 revives the act of August 31, 1852, for surveys and reconnaissances of such parts of Behring's Straits, North Pacific Ocean, as are frequented by American ships, and directs the Secretary of the Navy to recommence surveys, &c., and continue in the Pacific Ocean, and to use officers, vessels, &c.
9. Section 9 authorizes transfer of appropriations for the pay of the Navy to the uses of the contingent fund.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC.

1. Section 2 provides for the appointment of a Second Assistant Secretary of State and an examiner of claims.
2. Section 3 provides as to the accounting for and disposition of fees collected by certain consuls and commercial agents.
3. Section 4 provides that the salary of an envoy extraordinary shall be only that of a minister resident, except when appointed to a post where the United States are now represented by an envoy extraordinary.

RIVER AND HARBOR.

1. Sections 2 and 3 instruct Secretary of War as to application of appropriations, as to making contracts, manner and matter of reports to Congress, as to proposals, disbursing officers, and forbidding the latter to receive commissions, (they being United States officers,) and places the appropriations at the disposal of the Secretary of War.

MILITARY ACADEMY.

1. Section 2 prohibits persons who have served in the military or naval service in the Confederate States from receiving an appointment as cadet in the Military or Naval Academy.

POST-OFFICE.

1. Section 3 authorizes the Postmaster-General to employ sailing-vessels for the transportation of the mails between the United States and any foreign port, to facilitate the service.
2. Section 4 requires the Postmaster-General to report his estimates annually to the Secretary of the Treasury prior to the 1st day of November.
3. Section 6 provides for manner of advertising notices and proposals for contracts for all the Executive Departments required by law to be published in the city of Washington, and the amount of charge to be paid for such.

INDIAN.

1. Section 2 prohibits funds belonging to any Indian tribes under treaty relations to be applied in any manner not authorized by such treaty, &c.
2. Section 3 provides for payment, and the manner thereof, of $500,000 for supplies for the destitute Indians of the southern superintendency, and authorizes the Comptroller of the Treasury to take testimony as to amount due certain contractors upon principles of equity.
3. Section 4 provides who and under what conditions may be Indian traders.

SUNDRY CIVIL.

1. Section 2 partially organizes the independent treasury; also prescribes the manner and conditions under which payment of the commutation-fund (act of February 24, 1864) may be made.
2. Section 3 repeals so much of act of April 7, 1866, as provides for compensation of revenue agent at New York.
3. Section 4 supplies deficiency for the mail service, to the amount of $925,000, out of the revenues of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1866.
4. Section 5 increases pay of certain watchmen to $900 per annum.
5. Section 6 increases pay of Metropolitan police force $20 per month, and prescribes the manner of providing such increase.
6. Section 7 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to dispose of the property saved from the rebel steamer Florida, and to distribute the proceeds as other prize-money.
7. Section 8 gives midshipmen and acting midshipmen one ration, or comutation therefor. An increase.
8. Section 9 repeals so much of act appropriating salary for minister resident in Greece.
9. Section 10 provides for traveling expenses of First Michigan Cavalry in the year 1866, and subsistence at the time of muster out from the service of the United States.
10. Section 11 extends provisions of the act of June 22, 1860, to carry into effect treaties between the United States and China, Japan, and other countries.
11. Sections 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 provide for payment of bounties to soldiers who enlisted after the 19th of April, 1861, and after the 14th of April, 1861, or their widows, minor children, or parents, the manner of payment, and provide conditions of circumstance under which paid, and prescribe the duty of Paymaster-General in the reception, examination, settlement, and payment of said bounty to said soldiers, or to their widows or heirs.
12. Section 17 increases compensation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress to $5,000, and fixes mileage at twenty cents per mile, and that of the Speaker of the House at $8,000 per year.
13. Section 18 increases the compensation of all employés of the Senate and House 20 per cent., to commence with the present Congress.
14. Section 19 provides for board of officers, to be appointed by Secretary of War, to supervise the expenditure of $5,000 for the preservation of the harbor of Provincetown, Massachusetts.

DEFICIENCIES.

1. Section 4 construes the meaning of the fourth section of the act of March 3, 1865, and authorizes the disbursement of certain money through certain agents referred to in said section.
2. Section 7 directs Secretary of War to report estimates for the erection of suitable fire-proof buildings for the War Department.
3. Section 8 amends the fourth section of the act of March 3, 1849, being "an act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost in the service of the ted States," by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting, "that the said [Third] Auditor shall in all cases transmit his adjustment, with all the papers relating thereto, to the Second Comptroller, for his revision and decision thereon, the same in all respects as is provided in the act of September 2, 1789," the same being "an act to establish the Treasury Department."

1867.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL.

1. Section 2 declares the scope of the proviso contained in the third section of act July 2, 1864, to embrace all suits to which the United States shall be a party in the Court of Claims.
2. Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of War to direct a geological and topographical exploration of the Territory between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada.

ARMY.

1. Proviso in reference to the ownership, payment for keeping in repair, and manner of using the Rock Island bridge.
2. Section 2 requires the headquarters of the General of the Army of the United States to be at the city of Washington, and all orders and instructions relating to military operations issued by the President or Secretary of War shall be issued through the General of the Army, and, in case of his inability, through the next in rank. The General of the Army shall not be removed, suspended, or relieved from command or assigned to duty elsewhere than at said headquarters, except at his own request, without the previous approval of the Senate, &c.
3. Section 3 repeals the joint resolution relative to the appointments to the Military Academy of June 16, 1866.
4. Section 5 prohibits whipping or maiming as a punishment by any pretended civil or military authority lately in rebellion until the civil government of such State shall have been restored and recognized.
5. Section 6 disbands all militia forces now organized in certain rebel States, and forbids further organization, arming, or calling into the service of the same.

NAVY.

1. Section 2. Secretary of the Navy authorized to negotiate with the city of Brooklyn for an exchange of lands in Wallabout Bay.
2. Section 3 prohibits Government officers or employés in navy-yards from requesting of workingmen money for political purposes, and forbids removal on account of political opinion.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

1. Section 2 revives previous unexpended appropriation, provides for the manner of its expenditure, and that the Michigan City Harbor Company shall contribute $100,000 for the same purpose, to wit, a harbor at that place, and provides for the manner in which contracts shall be made and the work shall be done, &c.
2. Section 3 instructs Secretary of War as to manner of inviting proposals for any work, any material or labor, and as to security from disbursing officers.

INDIAN.

Sections 2, 3, and 4 provide for the manner of paying moneys or annuities to Indian tribes; as to the duty of the Indian Bureau to report tabular statement at commencement of each December session, showing in detail expenditure, and to whom paid, and for what objects, and provide for vacancies in particular cases of Indian subagents.

SUNDRY CIVIL.

1. Section 2 abolishes office of Commissioner of Public Buildings, and devolves the duties upon the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, including all the public works of the Government in the District of Columbia not otherwise provided for by law, and places appointment of Capitol police under the respective Sergeants-at-Arms.
2. Sections 3 and 4 authorize Light-House Board to use unexpended balances of appropriations for the Pacific coast for similar works upon the same coast, and to purchase necessary lands in certain cases and under certain conditions, and forbids certain superintendents of lights whose compensation as collectors of customs exceeds $3,000 per annum from receiving compensation as disbursing agents, &c.
Section 5 fixes salary of general appraiser and assistant appraisers.
3. Section 6 grants relief to clerk of pardons, State Department.
4. Section 7 directs Clerk of House of Representatives to select newspapers in each of the ten rebel States in which laws, &c., shall be published, and the manner and rates.
5. Section 8 authorizes Secretary of Treasury to sell at public auction certain buildings and grounds belonging to the United States.
6. Section 9 directs the Secretary of the Interior to examine condition of public buildings in New Mexico and report, &c.
7. Section 10 directs as to advertisements, &c., to be printed in newspapers in the District of Columbia, and as to other printing.
8. Section 12 directs Secretary of War to increase the pay of clerks in Springfield armory.
SEC. 13. That the laws relating to the Army, Navy, militia, and the Marine Corps be published in the Army and Navy Journal at such rates as are fixed by the Secretary of State.

DEFICIENCIES.

1. Section 2 transfers unexpended balance of appropriation for legislative expenses of Nebraska for a geological survey of said Territory.
2. Sections 3 and 4 fix tax on gaugeable goods withdrawn from bonded warehouse for export, and fix pay of gaugers at port of New York after April 1, 1867.
3. Section 5 construes portion of act of April 2, 1866, to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain contractors.
4. Sections 7, 8, 9, fix salaries of certain surveyors, clerks, and judges.
5. Section 11 gives notice of annulment of contract for publication of debates in Congress.
6. Section 12 authorizes Secretary of Interior to appoint in the Pension Office eighty clerks for two years.

1868.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL.

1. Re-organizes partially the office force of the Department of State, and repeals the act of 1856.
2. Makes special Commissioner of Revenue Chief of Bureau of Statistics.
3. Section 2 extends provisions of section 10 of sundry civil law of 1867, concerning proposals for contracts for printing for all the Executive Departments, and printing the laws and treaties, providing place, number of newspapers in which, and time of advertisements.
4. Section 3 repeals the act authorizing the publication of debates in Congress, and directs the Joint Committee on Printing to invite proposals for the same.
5. Section 4 directs the manner of advertisements, &c., in the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia.
6. Section 5 fixes the pay of each night-watchman in the Treasury Department at $900 per year.
7. Section 6 excludes statuary, &c., property of private individuals, from the Capitol building.

NAVY BILL.

1. Section 2 establishes number of enlisted persons in the Navy at 8,500.
2. Section 3 covers in unexpended appropriations existing on the 1st of July next.
3. Section 4 directs Secretary of Treasury to state in his next Book of Estimates balances of appropriations made prior to present session of Congress for each branch of the public service and unexpended on the 1st day of July next, stating the amount necessary to execute contracts and pay expenses properly chargeable to such balances.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

1. Section 7 covers in the moneys standing to the credit of patent fund, and requiring hereafter detailed statement of expenditures.
2. Section 8 authorizes special tax for schools in Washington and Georgetown.
3. Section 9 repeals law regulating price of labor in Government Printing Office, and making it the duty of the Government Printer to contract for such labor at just rates.

4. Section 10 provides for payments to Maine and Massachusetts under the fourth article of treaty of Washington, 9th of August, 1842.

DEFICIENCY.

1. To pay for services of the First Regiment of the Colorado Mounted Militia.
2. Section 2, to re-imburse the city of Washington for improving the property of the General Government, and repealing certain acts.
3. Section 3 makes it a misdemeanor for any officer of the Government to contract for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or improvement in excess of any specific appropriation.
4. Section 4 repeals laws appropriating for the solicitor, assistant solicitor, and deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims, and of the Assistant Attorney-General for fiscal year ending June 30, 1869, and appropriates for two Assistant Attorneys-General, one clerk, and two clerks of class four, for said year.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC.

1. Section 2 forbids pay to diplomatic or consular officers while absent beyond the term of sixty days in any one year.
2. Section 3 provides fee for verification of invoices, penalty for illegal charges, &c., and conditionally abolishes tonnage or clearance fees.
3. Section 4 provides for inspection of consular offices.
4. Section 5 provides against willful neglect of consular officers to render accounts.
5. Section 6 provides that the consuls-general, respectively, shall hold but one office, limits expense to stationery, &c.
6. Section 7 fixes salary of consul at Bangkok, in Siam, at $3,000, and reduces others.

INDIAN BILL FOR 1868.

1. Section 2 prescribes the mode of delivery of goods to Indians.
2. Section 5 directs Committees on Indian Affairs of each House to examine the Choctaw and Chickasaw claim and report next session.
3. Section 6 restores the Mendocino reservation to the public lands, provides for its survey and sale, &c.

1869.

ARMY BILL.

1. Authorizes Secretary of War to have prepared and published the results of the exploration of the fortieth parallel.
2. Sections 2 to 7, both inclusive. Partial reduction of the Army.

NAVY BILL.

1. Section 2. Thirty-three and one-third per cent. a day additional to ordinary seamen employed as firemen or coal-heavers.
2. Section 3 fixes salary of secretary of Naval Academy.
3. Section 4 repeals the act that authorizes the annual enlistment of ten enlisted apprentices for appointment as midshipmen to the Naval Academy.

DEFICIENCIES.

1. Re-organization of the labor force having in charge and general care the buildings occupied by the Treasury Department.

1870.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL.

1. Important legislation prohibiting pardon or amnesty of any claimant in the Court of Claims from being admissible to establish his standing in court, and ordering the dismissal of cases where judgment shall have been rendered in the Court of Claims on other proof of loyalty than therein required, and setting forth what is conclusive evidence of former disloyalty.
2. Requiring the proprietors of all internal-revenue bonded warehouses to pay to the collector salaries, &c., of storekeepers or other officers in charge, and directing the Commissioner and accounting officers of the Treasury to take steps to carry law into effect, and authorizing the President in his discretion to divide States and Territories into convenient districts.
3. Section 2 makes female clerks eligible to any of the grades known to the law.
4. Section 3 fixes annual compensation of messengers, assistant messengers, laborers, and watchmen.
5. Section 4 repeals all acts or resolutions granting extra compensation; repeals various sections of various acts.
6. Sections 5 and 6 limit and cover in appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations.
7. Section 7 prohibits expenditures for any fiscal year in excess of appropriations therefor, or any contract in excess of the same.
8. Section 9 provides for the Polaris expedition.

ARMY BILL.

1. Sections 2 to 25, inclusive, re-organization of the Army.

NAVY BILL.

1. Legislation on the Corliss Steam-Engine Company, to prevent payment.
2. Re-organization of the Navy.

INDIAN BILL.

1. Section 2 provides how annuities may be expended.
2. Section 3 instructs the Secretary of the Interior to encourage able-bodied Indians in the habits of industry and peace, and continues the peace commissioners as long as the appropriation shall last; makes it their duty to supervise all expenditures and inspect all goods.
3. Section 4 guards expenditures of Indian appropriations.
4. Section 5 repeals provisions for paying money to minor children of Pottawatomies.
5. Section 6, to dicontinue one or more Indian superintendencies.
6. Section 7, as to sale of reservation of certain Indians.
7. Section 8, as to proceeds of same.
8. Sections 9 and 10, as to certain Winnebago Indians.
9. Section 11 empowers Cherokee Indians to institute suit in certain cases.
10. Section 12, removal of Great and Little Osage Indians to permanent home in the Indian Territory; sale of their present diminished reservation; payments in consideration of its relinquishment and for stock, farming utensils, &c.
11. Additional section against making treaty with Indian tribes.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC.

1. Section 2 authorizes the President to have accounts of consular officers examined.

RIVER AND HARBOR.

1. Section 5, Secretary of War to detail three engineers to examine all bridges across the Ohio River.

SUNDRY CIVIL.

1. Provisions affecting support of students in Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.
2. Forbidding advertisements, &c., of the Executive Departments being published without written authority from the head of the Department.
3. Section 3 makes provision as to Light-House Board as to revenue-cutters on the northern and northwestern lakes, repealing the law directing them to be laid up, and authorizing the sale of two of them.
4. Sections 5 and 6 authorize canal commission in the city of Washington, and provide for the re-imbursement of the cost of the same by taxes, &c., and authorize certificates of indebtedness to pay amount due by the corporation of Washington, due up to the 6th day of June, 1870.
5. Section 13 permits the extension of the Junction and Breakwater Railroad over the iron pier at or near Lewes, Delaware.

1871.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL.

1. Altering the law in regard to furnishing extra documents by the Government Printing Office.
2. Modifying the law in regard to publishing laws or treaties in newspapers.
3. Section 3, increasing the salaries of the Chief Justice and associate justices and circuit judges of the United States, and prescribing duty of the latter in regard to places of holding court.

ARMY.

1. Section 2 directs President of the United States to appoint three commissioners of claims to examine, &c., and report upon the justice, &c., of claims of citizens who remained loyal during the war.
2. Sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 provide for the manner, &c., and makes an indefinite appropriation.
3. Section 7 directs Secretary of War to build and operate a telegraph line from Yankton to Fort Randall, and thence to Fort Sully; provides for the cost, rate per mile, charges for transmision of news, &c.
4. Section 8 provides an indefinite appropriation for the same.
5. Section 9 directs Secretary of Treasury to pay certain Pacific Railroad Companies one-half of the compensation due them for services rendered or to be rendered.

NAVY BILL.

1. Section 2 authorizes the Secretary of Navy to build a floating iron dock, at a cost of not more than one million, and prescribes the method of receiving bids, and that they be referred to a board of at least five officers, a majority of whom shall be constructors and engineers, and provides for faithful performance of contract.
2. Section 3 provides for manner of making contracts for the Navy for supplies for foreign stations.
3. Section 4 authorizes the President to accept the resignation of any naval officer until the number of the grade to which such officer shall belong is reduced to the legal number, allowing one year's sea-pay conditionally.
4. Section 5 re-organizes the Medical Corps, active enlisted men in the Navy.
5. Section 6 re-organizes the Pay Corps, active enlisted men in the Navy.
6. Section 7, re-organization of Engineer Corps.
7. Sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 provide for the re-organization of the Navy, specially as to staff-corps, and adjusting the differences between staff and line.

INDIAN BILL.

1. Providing as to right of certain mixed-blood Osages.
2. Provides that no payment shall be made for goods or supplies furnished Indians, or transportation thereon, or for buildings or machinery, beyond 50 per cent. of the amount due, until the accounts will have been submitted to the executive committee of the commissioners appointed by the President under provision of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869.
3. Section 3 prescribes the manner of making contracts with the Indians.

POST-OFFICE BILL.

1. Section 4 requires bidders on certain mail-routes to send certified check with bid.
2. Section 5 suspends the building of the bridge over the Ohio River, from Cincinnati to Newport, until certain requirements shall have been complied with.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

1. Section 7 directs the proceeds of fines, penalties, &c., heretofore incurred or that may hereafter be incurred under the act of July 27, 1868, and the act of July 1, 1870, shall be disposed of under the act to regulate the disposition of the proceeds of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under the laws relating to the customs, &c., approved March 2, 1867.
2. Section 8 authorizes Secretary of Interior to increase compensation of assistant census marshals.
3. Section 9 authorizes President to prescribe rules for the admission of persons into the civil service.

DEFICIENCY.

1. Limits publication of mail contracts to one newspaper.
2. Amends pension laws.

1872.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL.

1. Sections 2, 3, and 4, concerning printing by heads of Departments, the duty of the Congressional Printer, and the number of congressional documents printed.
2. Section 5 concerns proceeds of old materials—condemned stores—to be covered in as miscellaneous receipts.
3. Section 6 provides for the extension of the public grounds around the Capitol.
4. Sections 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, ditto, ditto, ditto, ditto.
5. Section 12 requires the Washington and Georgetown and Metropolitan Railway Companies to remove their tracks.
6. Section 13 increases salaries of Second Comptroller, Register, Supervising Architect, and judges of Court of Claims.

ARMY BILL.

1. Section 2 prohibits branding of soldiers, &c.

NAVY BILL.

1. Provides for ranks of graduates of Military Academy.
2. Section 2 authorizes Secretary of the Navy to sell useless vessels and material, and providing for the manner of the same.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC.

1. Repeal of previous law touching payment of two salaries to one officer in said service.

INDIAN BILL.

1. Sections 5, 6, 7, 8, legislate upon appraisement of Cherokee lands, for the removal of the Winnebago Indians, and prescribe rules, &c., as to the manner for compensation for depredations committed by Indians, and instruct as to manner of evidence received, and provide also for the removal of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior, and provide as to manner of sale of land made vacant by their removal, and appoint certain commissioners.

POST-OFFICE.

1. Legislates upon the money-order system.
2. Provides for additional monthly mails on Pacific route.

3. Section 5 renders it unlawful for any person who shall hereafter be appointed an officer, &c., in any of the Departments to act as counsel, &c., for prosecuting any claim against the United States pending while he was said officer, &c., within two years after he had ceased to be such.
4. Section 6 legislates for mail service between San Francisco, China, and Japan.

SUNDRY CIVIL.

1. Legislation as to enforcement act, &c.
2. Legislation as to continuance of appropriations, unexpended balances, &c.
3. Legislating as to the conveyance of the real estate of the Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb; also the same as to Columbia Hospital for Lying-in Women.
4. Establishing grades of the streets and avenues in the vicinity of the Capitol.
5. Discontinuing the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees and Abandoned Lands.
6. Transferring Freedmen's Hospital, District of Columbia, to Secretary of War.
7. Instructions to Secretary of War and Postmaster-General concerning business between telegraph companies and Signal Service, and making neglect or refusal on part of such companies finable.
8. Section 6, providing for manner of settlement of judgments by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court, in cases of cotton captured, abandoned, or seized.
9. Section 7, providing for adjustment of accounts of collector of port of Chicago in case of money destroyed by fire in that city October 9 and 10.

DEFICIENCY.

1. Section 2, directing accounting officers to pay laborers, workingmen, and mechanics employed between June 25, 1868, and the 19th day of May, 1869, without reduction on account of hours of labor, &c.
2. Section 3, constituting citizens born in the Territory of Oregon citizens of the United States in the same manner as if born elsewhere in the United States.
3. Section 5, directing Secretary of Treasury to pay lawful owners of cotton seized unlawfully by the agents of the Government after the 30th day of June, 1865, the net proceeds of the sales of said cotton, without interest, and providing for the manner thereof.

1873.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL BILL.

1. Increase of salary of the President, Vice-President, justices of Supreme Court, Cabinet officers, Assistant Secretaries, Speaker of the House, Senators, Representatives and Delegates, and officers of the Senate and House.
2. Fixing maximum pay of collectors of internal revenue at $4,500.
3. Prohibiting members or officers of territorial Legislatures from receiving other pay than that provided by the laws of the United States.
4. Limiting printing for Territories, $4,000.
5. Limiting period of session to forty days.
6. Section 2, directing Secretary of Treasury to withhold payment from certain railroad companies.
7. Section 3, increasing salary of Supervising Architect, Commissioners, Solicitors, Assistant Postmasters-General, and others.
8. Section 4, directing Attorney-General to institute suit against the Union Pacific Railroad.

ARMY BILL.

1. As to old uniforms; manner of disposal of such.
2. National military cemeteries; head-stones for same.

NAVY BILL.

1. As to rank of engineer officers graduated at the Naval Academy.
2. Section 2, as to prize cases.
3. Section 3, as to retired officers.

INDIAN BILL.

1. Authorizing Secretary of Interior to sell trust bonds of the Pottawatomie Indians.
2. Prohibiting traders from selling arms in any district occupied by hostile Indians.
3. Section 2, authorizing Secretary of Interior to sell trust bonds of the Ottawa Indians.
4. Section 3, suspending authority to sell bonds of Choctaw Indians.
5. Section 4, setting apart from funds belonging to Cherokee Nation $100,000.
6. Section 5, respecting sale of lands belonging to Kickapoo Indians of Kansas.
7. Section 6, providing for Indian inspectors and their duties, and abolishing certain superintendencies.
8. Section 7, prescribing the manner of issue of supplies.

POST-OFFICE BILL.

1. Authorizing Postmaster-General to re-adjust compensation for transportation of mails.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

1. Authorizing sale of marine hospital at New Orleans, Louisiana.
2. Section 1 amends laws relating to customs, commerce, and navigation, to extend them over Alaska.
3. Authorizing Secretary of Interior to purchase squares 687 and 688 adjoining Capitol building and sell old material.
3. Sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, providing for assistant treasurers at Chicago and Cincinnati, and other pertinent matter.

1874.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL BILL.

1. Repeals so much of the act as makes the Public Printer's election by Senate.
2. Discontinues publication of laws in newspapers.
3. Section 2 enacts that officers of the United States courts shall reside permanently at the place of official duty.
4. Section 3, restricting civil officers in receipt of compensation.
5. Section 4 re-organizes national loan force and fixes pay.
6. Section 5, provision respecting unexpended balances.

ARMY BILL.

1. Section 2, respecting balances of appropriations.

INDIAN BILL.

1. Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, as to Indian management and disbursement of appropriations, making of contracts, &c.

POST-OFFICE BILL.

1. Sections 4 to 13, both inclusive, revise postal laws.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

1. Guarding and directing $1,300,000 for the District, and directing the commissioners to care for the workingmen by retaining from the several contractors the sum due them.
2. Enacting as to the appropriations for charitable purposes, manner of payment, &c.
3. Declaring northern part of Woodlawn cemetery, New York, a national cemetery.
4. Construing the second section of the Army appropriation bill of 1874.
5. Legislation on public buildings.
6. Section 3 directs Secretary of Treasury to inquire as to amount due Choctaw Indians.
7. Section 4 amends sundry civil act of 1873 with respect to compensation of the census-takers of 1860.
8. Section 6 to enable Secretary of War to carry out the provisions for relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the Mississippi River.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

1. Section 3 authorizes the appointment of a board of engineers, for the survey of the mouth of the Mississippi River, by the President.

1875.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL BILL.

1. Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, limiting and prescribing compensation.
2. Designated depositaries, Buffalo, New York.
3. Territory of Utah, diverting appropriation upon legislative expenses, $23,400.
4. National Military and Naval Asylum, manner of appropriation made specific.
5. Section 2 re-organizes the national-loan force and prescribes salaries.
6. Section 3, legislation upon the manner, matter, and time of submitting estimates.

ARMY BILL.

1. Changing mileage to actual traveling expenses, excepting marshals, district attorneys, clerks of United States courts, and their deputies.
2. Prohibiting payments to railroad companies for transportation in cases of such companies profiting by the aid of public-land grants, &c.
3. Section 2, giving preference in contracts to American materials and labor.
4. Section 3, concerning issue of arms and other ordnance stores to States and Territories.

INDIAN BILL.

1. Repealing provisions of law which make payment of appropriations to Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes conditional upon their removal.
2. Providing for removal of Indians in Oregon.
3. Concerning the rights of the eastern band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina.
4. Sections 2 to 14, both inclusive, as to manner of expenditure of Indian appropriations, reservation regulations, &c.

POST-OFFICE BILL.

1. Sections 4, 5, 6, 7, concerning manner of keeping accounts, matters to go free through mails, and looking to reductions of expenditures through instruction of Postmaster-General.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

1. Sections 3 to 14, both inclusive, to construct jetties and auxiliary works to form channel between South Pass, Mississippi, and the Gulf of Mexico.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

1. Secretary of War notifies Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company to remove piers, abutments, &c.
2. Chief Engineer of the Army to notify Washington and Georgetown Railway Company to remove track from over Aqueduct bridge, Rock Creek.
3. Forming commission to dispose of Philadelphia navy-yard.
4. Secretary of War detailing medical officer to report on the reported existence of cholera in Mexico.
5. Section 3, providing for the redistribution of the national-bank currency, as per act of June 20, 1874.
6. Section 4, authorizing President to appoint board to test iron and steel.
7. Section 5, international exhibition.
8. Section 6, modifying section 25 of the Revised Statutes, prescribing time of holding elections for members of Congress.
9. Section 7, pay of discharged clerks one month.
10. Section 8, to protect officials in their official acts.
11. Section 9, concerning the printing and distribution of the Revised Statutes.
12. Section 10, fixing maximum compensations of surveyors of customs.
13. Section 11, authorizing Secretary of Treasury and prescribing manner of obtaining bonds for the sinking fund.
14. Section 12, making it the duty of the Commissioner of Patents to furnish free of cost one copy of the bound volumes of specifications, &c., of patents to each of the Executive Departments.

DEFICIENCY.

1. Directing certain action of the board of audit of the District of Columbia.
2. Authorizing Secretary of Interior to sell United States stocks held in trust for the Kickapoo tribe of Indians.
3. Section 3, authorizing Postmaster-General to perform certain duties.
4. Sections 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, on various subjects, three last being on Indian matters.

Mr. FOSTER obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to submit a resolution for reference.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to the gentleman.

SCHOOL SYSTEM OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Whereas it is the duty of Congress to provide for such an organization of the public schools of the District of Columbia as shall more effectually promote the cause of popular education; whereas frequent changes in the rules and management should be avoided; and whereas it is alleged that such purposes are not at present subserved: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to report at the opening of the next session of Congress a bill for the permanent organization of said schools, and to prevent unnecessary changes before that time that the commissioners of the District be requested to take such measures as may be necessary to prevent any changes being made or carried into effect in the by-laws and regulations of the schools, text-books, and teachers as the same were in force or employed at the close of the schools in June last until action shall have been taken by Congress on the report of said committee, except in case of resignations of teachers or organization of new schools or when the commissioners shall be convinced from personal knowledge that changes of teachers are imperatively required.

Resolved further, That said committee inquire whether the present board of trustees is legally organized and constituted; also into the acts of said board; also into the expenditures, both as to character and amount, made or incurred in carrying the present school system into operation, and report thereupon.

INCREASE OF CAVALRY FORCE.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to make a report of a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President in regard to recruiting additional men for the Indian service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve points of order until I hear the bill read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

A bill to increase the efficiency of the cavalry force in the suppression of the Sioux Indian hostilities.

Whereas war with the Sioux Indians now prevails; and whereas in the conduct of this war it is necessary to the efficiency of the cavalry regiments therein engaged that their effective force shall be increased: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, empowered to increase the number of enlisted men to one hundred for each company of such regiments of cavalry as may be employed in the existing Indian hostilities and as in his opinion may require the same: Provided, That not more than twenty-five hundred enlisted men shall thus be added at any one time to the 25,000 authorized by the act approved July 24, 1876, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. COX, (interrupting the reading of the bill.) I object to that.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RUSK. I rise to a personal matter. I ask leave of absence for the remainder of the session, on account of sickness in my family.

There was no objection, and leave of absence was granted.

ANDREW EVARTS.

Mr. RUSK. I have charge of a bill for the present Speaker and had promised to call it up. It is to pension a soldier in his district. Before I leave I ask unanimous consent to take that bill from the Speaker's table and put it upon its passage.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. RUSK] has got leave of absence during the rest of the session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. EDEN in the chair.) While the gentleman is present, he is entitled to make this request of the House.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 897) granting a pension to Andrew Evarts was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew Evarts, private Company B, Fourth Ohio Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock;

An act (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery;

An act (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the executive, legislative, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. No. 24) providing for the postponement of the publication of the Army Regulations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SAYLER.) The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman from Ohio has agreed to yield to me.

Mr. FOSTER. I would be glad, if in my power, to yield to all the gentlemen who have requests to make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio cannot parcel out the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. I am advised that if I yield further I will lose the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman certainly will.

APPROPRIATIONS—ECONOMY AND REFORM.

Mr. FOSTER. Some reply is needed to the ingenious misstatements made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I will be glad to hear the gentleman do so.

Mr. FOSTER. Like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I desire to go on without interruption.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House at this time is to show what has been done by the House in the line of economy and reform. So much has been falsely claimed by the democratic side as to render a fair statement necessary.

The minority of the Committee on Appropriations, supported by the minority of the House, entered upon their duties with the full determination of aiding the majority in making every possible reduction and postponement in the expenditures. We fully realized and appreciated the demand of the country for economy, and were therefore prepared to join hands with any party in Congress to provide proper measures of economy that would not cripple the Government or cause friction in the workings of the Government machinery.

While the people of the country have rightly demanded economy at the hands of their representatives, they do not ask nor will they long permit the real functions of government to be impaired or weakened either at home or abroad.

Since the culmination of expenditures in 1866 a steady, prudent, and entirely safe reduction in the expenses of the Government year by year has been the policy of the republican party. The precedent thus set should have been maintained until the expenditures had reached their lowest possible limit.

We were willing to admit that in the reduction of salaries and the number of employés an opposition House could be more thorough than one in accord with the Administration. We, therefore, recognizing this fact, determined to obtain all that might be possible from it. We believed that reductions and postponements might safely be made aggregating a sum of from fifteen to twenty millions of dollars. We now believe, after having thoroughly examined the subject, that reductions and postponements of expenditures for the present fiscal year could properly be made to the full extent of $20,000,000 without seriously impairing the administration of the Government. We have not been able to agree in many instances with the bills as reported, and have tried to indicate our objections by amendments in the House.

For myself, I believe that the appropriations as proposed by the House would have, in many cases, caused serious embarrassment to the Government and that the appropriations as finally agreed upon will have to be supplemented by increased appropriations when we meet next session. In fact I am corroborated in this statement by the chairman of the committee himself, who, in order to carry his point when all other arguments failed him, has repeatedly stated on this floor that if the amount of appropriations then pending was not sufficient we would be here next session when a further appropriation might be made if it was found necessary. He has suggested to officers charged with the administration of the Government when refusing to appropriate the sum they deemed absolutely necessary, that it would be made right next session. I make the prediction now that further appropriations aggregating millions of dollars will be made at the next session to defray the expenses of the Government for the present fiscal year.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

No great financial embarrassment of the Government was or is impending to in any degree warrant the postponement and withholding of any needful or necessary appropriation.

On the scale of expenditures of the past two years our revenues have been ample for the discharge of every liability of the Government, including the sinking fund, as the following letter from Assistant Secretary Conant fully discloses:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 21, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: In compliance with your verbal request I have the honor to inform you that—

The amount required for the sinking fund for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, was	$31,096,545 00
During that year 6 per cent. 5.20 bonds were redeemed and paid for from cash in the Treasury to the amount of	25,170,400 00
In addition to which, under the provisions of the specie-resumption act of January, 1875, $6,228,420 in legal-tenders were retired, making a total redemption of the debt on sinking-fund account during that year of	31,398,820 00
The estimated amount to be applied to the sinking fund for the fiscal year 1876 was	32,293,692 32
On this account 6 per cent. 5.20 bonds were redeemed and paid for in gold to the amount of	18,444,050 00
Fractional currency was redeemed and applied to the account, under the provisions of law, to the extent of	7,062,142 09
Legal-tender notes amounting to $5,999,296 were also retired during the year.
These several items aggregate the sum of	31,505,488 09

It will be observed from the above statements that, during the fiscal year 1875, the redemption on the sinking-fund account was $302,265 in excess of the amount required, but that during the fiscal year 1876 they did not reach the amount necessary by the sum of $635,425.91.

I will add that during the last fiscal year (1876) the principal of the certificates of indebtedness of 1870, issued under the act of July, 1870, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent., amounting to $678,000, matured and were paid out of the current revenues of the Government. If this were to be taken into the account as a 1 per cent. payment of the principal on the public debt for sinking-fund purposes, then the sinking fund during the past two years would more than have been provided for.

Very truly yours,

CHAS. F. CONANT.

HON. CHARLES FOSTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Since the commencement of President Grant's administration more than $500,000,000 of the public debt has been paid, thus more than doubling the requirements of the sinking fund.

If a reduction of expenses to the amount of forty millions had obtained as proposed by our democratic friends, the surplus of revenue over expenditures would have been $73,000,000 for the current year.

We have the authority of the present Secretary of the Treasury that the revenues for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, may be safely estimated as follows:

Customs	$150,000,000
Internal revenue	122,000,000
Miscellaneous	19,000,000
Total	291,000,000
Expenditures for the year 1876	258,000,000
Surplus	33,000,000
Add proposed reduction by the democratic House	40,000,000
Surplus for year ending June 36, 1877, if reduction had been made	73,000,000

I ask our democratic friends what they proposed to do with this large surplus? Was the purpose the creation of a fund to aid Governor Tilden to resume specie payments at an earlier date than 1879? I would like a reply to this question from my soft-money friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Was the purpose to aid the schemes referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] early in the session, such as the building of the Southern Pacific Railroad and the Mississippi levees or was it to pay the many hundreds of millions of claims, bills for which have been introduced by gentlemen from the South, which would have been pressed but for the pendency of a presidential election?

If for none of these reasons, what was the purpose?

If you desired to relieve the people, why have you not proposed a reduction of taxation?

Reduction of appropriations without a corresponding reduction of taxes will not be appreciated by the people.

THE CREDIT DUE THE CHAIRMAN.

The chairman of the committee claims much credit for the industry he has shown in the preparation and passage of his bills. I concede to him great industry and faithfulness to the purpose he had in view. He has carried them through the House substantially as he has reported them. He has done this in spite of the known fact that but few members of his own party agreed with him. He has encountered the opposition of more than one-half of his political associates from time to time to very many portions of these bills. I award him full credit for his successful leadership, and trust in the future when he seeks higher honors from his party he may be better rewarded than in the past.

But, Mr. Speaker, how were the bills made up and why the untiring industry of the chairman?

Before the committee had fairly looked inside the Book of Estimates it was announced to the country by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that reductions would be made to the tune of $40,000,000. How did he know these reductions could be made? He did not know it then and he does not know it now. The energies of the gentleman were exerted in making good his announcement that the reductions would reach $40,000,000, and to this end his labors were directed. To make his word good he worked early and late. He was ever unmindful of what service was to be the sufferer, nor did he seem ever to care whether it was the soldier on land, the sailor at sea, or the skilled and unskilled mechanics and laborers who were to suffer.

DEPRESSION OF BUSINESS.

Times are hard, but I sometimes think much is added to the general feeling of depression in the country by the continual croakings which many of us are too apt to make. It is said that no one act of ours during the rebellion gave more hope to our friends at home and abroad and one that caused more consternation to our enemies than the completion of the Dome on our beautiful Capitol building. So now, a little more courage of this sort would encourage people to throw off the lethargy of the times and to go forward with their accustomed energy and enterprise. In times like these, when a whole people are suffering and depressed, a great government like ours should be as liberal in continuing necessary appropriations as the condition of the Treasury will permit.

ESTIMATES.

We have heard a great deal, Mr. Speaker, of the extravagance of this Administration in the matter of the estimates. Much ill-advised talk on this subject has been indulged in. This matter of estimates is greatly misunderstood. Gentlemen have stated that the estimates are the sums asked for by an extravagant administration for the working of the Government machinery. The fact is, these estimates are made in obedience to and in conformity with law.

Let me illustrate this matter. The estimates for the maintenance of the Navy are made by men belonging to no party. They are officers of the Navy. The Secretary came before the committee and said, "Gentlemen, this is your Navy, not mine." The officers in charge estimate that it will take about twenty-one millions to properly care for your Navy. This estimate is made for the legal pay of the legal number of officers and men, the maintenance of all the navy-yards of the country, to complete as far as we can in one year the iron-clads and other vessels of war authorized by Congress, and certain repairs of ships, together with the necessary incidental and contingent expenses thereof. "Now," he says, "do what you please. I will do the best I can with the money you give me."

So, too, with the Secretary of War in making estimates for the support of the Army. These estimates are all made by Army officers; all the Government buildings under control of the War Department, together with all the river and harbor improvements and all other expenses for the support of the Army, are estimated for on the basis of existing law. They estimate that the river and harbor improvements will cost fourteen and a half millions, and this, too, in obedience to the mandates of law. They do not ask Congress to expend a dollar, but their duty has been performed when they tell us the cost. Examine the river and harbor bill passed this session by this House and you will find the engineer force of the War Department is directed to make surveys of rivers and harbors and canals and to make estimates of the cost thereof, the cost of which I will venture to say will amount to more than $20,000,000, and the most of it I might add is for the South. Will gentlemen claim next session when the estimates for these works are before us that the War Department is extravagant because they have simply performed their duty as expressly required by this Congress?

Take up the estimates for public buildings. Is the Treasury Department extravagant when they send us estimates of the cost of the buildings that Congress has ordered to be built? Is this same Department extravagant when they estimate what it will cost to build light-houses in aid of commerce as required by Congress?

I have named subjects enough for the purpose of showing that our democratic friends are greatly in error when they charge extravagance upon the Departments of the Government in making up these estimates. The fact is, once for all, they simply obey the laws which they are sworn to execute when they give us in the detailed form of estimates the cost of administering the Government for another year. I will not conceal the fact that a small portion of these estimates are matters of discretion, but I have yet to find any item of discretionary expenditure upon which any serious charge of extravagance has been made or can be made.

Our friends on the other side indulge in generalities and with a great flourish of trumpets claim that the proposed appropriations are largely below the estimates. Is there anything startling or new in that? I venture to say that never in the history of the Government has Congress appropriated the full sum estimated for. Since my service here I have never known an instance where the appropriations were not largely below the estimates. The fact is the estimates are valuable as forming a basis of action by Congress. Knowing what the full cost is, Congress can then intelligently exercise its discretion as to how much of the cost may be postponed. This is the light in which intelligent men view this subject of estimates.

REDUCTIONS.

Gentlemen on the other side have had much to say of the reductions proposed by the House appropriation bills. They claim to have made reductions of $64,000,000 from the estimates, and from the appropriations of last year of $39,000,000. Now a very large proportion of these sums are not reductions at all, but are simply postponement of expenditure that must be made hereafter. In an analysis of these bills I shall give the amount of actual reductions and the amount postponed, so that it can be seen exactly how much credit is due the action of this House on the score of reduction and how much for postponement.

DEMOCRATIC FIGURES.

The table of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] shows the reduction of the appropriation bills as passed by the House over those of last year to be $39,175,000, (but correctly footed should be $38,631,511,) and the reduction on the estimates for this year at $64,362,000, which when correctly footed is $64,618,727.30. I use this table because it is generally accepted by the democratic party. I shall show that the reductions and postponements are largely overstated in this table. First, the reduction in the pension bill is $466,550. That bill was passed precisely as recommended by the Pension Office, and therefore no credit can be due to this House for this reduction. It simply shows that we have reached the maximum of expenditures, and that this year, and for the years to follow, we are on the descending scale in the amounts to be appropriated for the payment of pensions. It is also claimed in this table that there is a reduction on the deficiency bill of $4,032,212.44.

It is well known to every gentleman here that this deficiency bill is for items of expense for the year ending June 30, 1876, not provided for by appropriations made by the last republican House. It is true that the deficiency bill for the last fiscal year was about $4,000,000 less than for the year previous. If anybody is to have credit for it it is not the present democratic House of Representatives but the republican House of last session. It does not enter into the expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1877.

Then let me call attention to the fact that in nearly all the bills passed by the House there are many re-appropriations of indefinite sums once specifically appropriated, but by careful management the entire sum appropriated was not needed, and which by a wise provision of republican law would be covered back into the Treasury if not re-appropriated. Of this class of appropriations there appears in the bills some four or five million dollars. I have not had time to ascertain the precise amount, but for the present purpose will call it $4,000,000, believing that I underestimate it. For instance, take the appropriation for the maintenance of the disabled soldiers and sailors' homes. The estimated cost for the maintenance of these institutions is something less than $900,000. It was ascertained that about $550,000, being an unexpended balance of a former appropriation, was unused. The House appropriated about $300,000, which added to the $550,000 above referred to made the necessary sum for their support about $900,000, which will appear in the expenditures for the current year, when in fact only about $300,000 appears in the footings of the bill. It is needless to go over the other items of re-appropriations. I might add, without intending to be offensive at all to the chairman of the committee, nor indeed to the committee itself, that this is a dodge, pretty sharp practice, and to the man less charitable than myself it would appear and by him be characterized as a cheat, a delusion, and a democratic trick thus to attempt to cheat the country as to the amount appropriated for the support of the Government.

Take the management of the post-office appropriation bill as another illustration of sharp democratic practice, an attempt to obtain credit where there is none. By examination you will find that in order to make the deficiency in the post-office appropriation bill appear less than the estimates of the Department, the committee estimated the receipts of the Post-Office Department for the current year at $600,000 more than the estimates of the Post-Office Department itself! We should then take this $600,000 from the total sum of proposed reductions and postponements claimed by our democratic friends. It will also be noticed that the sum of $250,000 is appropriated for postal mail-steamship service, whereas in the last post-office appropriation bill it was $500,000. This difference of $250,000 is simply the difference in the requirements of law. Last year it required $500,000, this year only $250,000 is required. No credit, therefore, is due to the action of the House for this reduction.

To gain credit for economy the House refused to appropriate a single dollar for the payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims—a direct and square repudiation of the obligations of the Government as adjudicated by the Supreme Court of the United States for the mere partisan purpose (as it must appear to every one) of "reducing expenses." These judgments must be paid. The Supreme Court of the United States have so adjudged, and there is no escape; and yet a democratic House, so far as it lies in its power, have repudiated these judgments thus adjudicated, and leave for a future republican Congress to redeem the faith of the United States thus violated. The sum estimated for by the Court of Claims to pay these judgments for this year is $2,000,000. Not a dollar has been appropriated.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then their payment will be postponed all the time.

Mr. FOSTER. I watched the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] carefully, but not an allusion was made in his speech to the payment of these claims.

Mr. RANDALL. When the bill comes up from the Senate I will discuss it at that time.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it is time it was discussed before the House. I would like to hear some defense of the action of the committee on the subject.

Then again in order to reduce the apparent amount of appropriations they make provision in the legislative bill for the support of the mints and assay offices out of the receipts of these offices instead of requiring the revenues from this source, as heretofore, first to be paid into the Treasury and then appropriate such amounts as may from time to time be necessary for their support. The sum total for this purpose will not be less than a half million of dollars. This sum does not appear in the footings of the bill, but will appear in the list of expenditures when the account for the year is made up. It will be found that the items to which I have called attention should be deducted from the table of reductions as presented by our democratic friends. Now, in addition to the appropriations which appear in the table must be added $1,500,000 for centennial purposes; $200,000 for the erection of forts on the Yellowstone and Missouri Rivers; $200,000 toward the completion of the Washington Monument; $227,000 for post-office at New York, and $200,000 for repaving Pennsylvania avenue. I do not pretend to enumerate the sum-total of appropriations made by this House, but simply present the larger items. The sum-total of the items to which I have referred which should be deducted from the statement of reductions made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is about $14,177,000, thus reducing the total sum of reductions and postponements to about $24,500,000. The following table will exhibit the exact facts in relation to this matter. It will be seen that the boast of reducing appropriations by the sum of $40,000,000 is made up of an actual reduction and postponement of $24,500,000 and the balance is wind:

Table showing what items should be deducted from the sum of reductions claimed in the Springer table.

Amount of reduction as claimed by Mr. SPRINGER		$39,175,451 10
Deduct error in addition		543,940 00
Total corrected amount		38,631,511 10
From which deduct—
Reduction claimed on pension bill	$466,500 00
Items in post-office bill for which no credit for reduction should be made	850,000 00
Deficiency bill, (belongs to last year)	4,032,212 44
Re-appropriations	4,000,000 00
Indefinite appropriations for assay offices	500,000 00
Judgments of Court of Claims	2,000,000 00
Centennial appropriation	1,500,000 00
Post-office, New York	227,000 00
Forts in Northwest	200,000 00
Repaving Pennsylvania avenue	200,000 00
Washington Monument	200,000 00
		14,175,712 44
Net reductions and postponements		24,466,899 56

Now, I do not propose to detract in any way from whatever credit is due to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the House for making these large reductions and postponement. My purpose is simply to analyze the appropriations to state just what has been done, how much is due to reductions and how much of it is due to postponements, and how much of either was unwise or improper or both, and how far the Senate has been willing to meet the House.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

The reduction proposed by the House in the Military Academy bill was $133,499. This was made first by reducing the salary of each of the cadets $50 per annum and the salaries of the professors was reduced perhaps $10,000 in the aggregate. The balance of the reduction is mainly made by postponing the appropriation for the completion of important buildings at the academy, the most important and expensive of which is the hospital for the care and medical treatment of the cadets, which by law and former appropriations in accordance therewith has been commenced and its early completion is regarded by all of the officers in charge as of vital importance, and that it is now and has been for years past demanded in the interest of humanity. To swell the list of reductions the progress of this essentially important work is stopped and the cadets are denied the privilege of hospital accommodations, thus leaving to a future Congress to provide a sum sufficient to complete it, as well as the other necessary buildings at the academy.

PENSION BILL.

I have already referred to the reduction of $466,500 on account of pensions, stating that the amount appropriated was the exact sum recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions, and that the reduction was due to the fact that we are now on the descending scale on account of pensions.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The reductions and postponements in the consular and diplomatic bill foot up $428,437.50. This is accomplished by reductions, first, of the salaries of all the officers of the diplomatic service; and, second, by the discontinuance of forty-four consulates and the reduction of the salaries of the remaining consuls. As to the wisdom of this wholesale reduction and withdrawal of our representatives from foreign countries the future will surely give a negative answer. We levy a tax on the commerce of the country for the maintenance of our consular system, and upon last year's basis, this tax more than paid all the expenses of every kind for its support. The arguments made against these reductions by the two gentlemen from New York [Mr. WOOD and Mr. HEWITT] were not answered at the time they were delivered, nor have they been answered since. I agree with them that the present is a very inopportune time to abolish any of these commercial agencies by which our commerce may be protected and extended.

One of the results of the depressed condition of the industries of the country is that the cost of manufactured articles in this country has been very largely reduced, thus enabling our people to export many of our own manufactured products, which heretofore we have been unable to do. And now, simply to make political capital, a democratic majority of the House undertakes to economize by withdrawing consuls (who are simply acting as aids to our commerce) from forty-four important foreign stations and reducing the efficiency of those on duty by a decrease of their salaries, and this, too, at the very time when of all others in the history of our country this branch of our foreign service should have been strengthened and increased. This is a mockery of economy; besides, in taking the money exacted from the commercial interests of our people and placing it in the Treasury to be used for other purposes, no matter how worthy, is wholly wrong. The implied pledge that the funds secured by this tax should go only for the support of the consular system has been violated, and every interest connected with the extension of our commerce and the increase of our exports, now so much needed, must correspondingly suffer. If not a fraud upon our commercial interests, it is a betrayal of trust, and is wholly inexcusable.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The reductions, compared with last year, are $535,000, and as compared with the estimates, are $3,091,000. To this reduction the minority of the committee agreed. The bill was reported to the House by Mr. WHEELER, and the House was unanimous in passing it. But for all this it cannot be called a reduction. It is simply a postponement. The estimates made by the War Department show that nearly $3,500,000 is needed to be expended on the forts of the country to make them what they ought to be. No one on the committee or in the House objected to the postponement; but no one can fail to see that it is work which sooner later must be completed; and therefore it is only a postponement which must some time in the future be provided for.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL BILL.

The reductions and postponements in this bill compared with the appropriations of last year are $5,724,417.30, and from the estimates are $7,826,499.39. Two millions of dollars of these several amounts are wiped out by the failure to appropriate the necessary payments on account of judgments of the Court of Claims, a half million more by indefinite appropriations for the mints and assay offices; another half million by re-appropriations; and the balance, $2,724,000, can fairly be ascribed to reductions. Of this sum, $300,000 apply to the reductions of the pay and salaries of members and officers of the House and Senate, $250,000 more to the salaries of the clerks in the various Departments in Washington, and probably another hundred thousand to reductions of salaries in different parts of the country. The balance is due to the reduction of the number of the employés. Having given the subject careful attention from the beginning of the session, I have been willing to make the reduction in numbers about 20 per cent., and I believe that can be done with safety. The reduction proposed is something more than 25 per cent. I have been satisfied from the start that if the House bill had been adopted the loss in the Internal Revenue Department would have been ten times the amount which is claimed would have been saved by reduction of force. That this would have also been the case in other Departments—in the Pension Office and of all the offices directly relating thereto, such as the Second Auditor's, Adjutant-General's, and Surgeon-General's Offices, the reductions as proposed by the House would have caused serious delay in the adjustment of all matters relating to pensions. This point is now conceded by gentlemen in charge of the bill.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania stated in his speech to-day, if I understood him correctly, that all of the Bureau officers of the Government refused to agree to the reduction in force; am I right?

Mr. RANDALL. They all resisted it that I came in contact with; I think every one.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the gentleman's attention to Mr. New, of the Treasurer's Office.

Mr. RANDALL. He did recommend some reductions, but not to the extent which we desired at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the gentleman's attention to the statements he has made heretofore upon this floor that these Bureau officers generally acceded to these reductions, but none of them acceded to the reductions to the extent made by the committee. I want to do the Bureau officers justice. While they have not agreed to the reductions proposed by the committee to that extent, they have in all cases agreed to a reduction and they have manifested a most commendable spirit, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the attention of the House to the fact that the greatest opposition that the Committee on Appropriations encountered was from the officers of this House, who organized a mutiny against it and one night came very near upsetting it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the retention of the salaries of members was forced upon the House. It was the most beautiful forcing I ever witnessed. The gentleman from Pennsylvania sat in his seat; I do not know where the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means made his speech, in which he said he was satisfied that the Senate would resist these reductions. We tried to get the yeas and nays, but could not get them.

Mr. SPRINGER. Were you standing up calling for them?

Mr. FOSTER. We tried then to get tellers, but could not get them; and I do not know of anybody who was more satisfied with this forced work than my friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman knows that I stood up both for tellers and the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to say I was ill and absent from the House at the time.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman was not here and he did not witness that beautiful scene, nor did the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] But he would have enjoyed it. The forcing process gave great satisfaction to the magnates of the democratic party who were present, and they all accepted the forcing with great pleasure. I never saw anything accepted with so much pleasure as this forcing of the House by the Senate.

[Mr. COX here approached Mr. FOSTER and addressed a private remark to him.]

Mr. FOSTER. In justice to the gentleman from New York I take back the statement about him. He says he was not absent when the forcing passed the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

This shows a reduction of $770,667.50 over the appropriations of last year, and of $8,428,250 below the estimates. As our democratic friends are claiming so much for a reduction of sixty-four millions below the estimates, I beg to inquire of them, and I will wait for an answer: Is it their purpose if they retain possession of the House to complete the works referred to in the estimates for the rivers and harbors of the country?

Mr. HOLMAN. For one I say it without hesitation.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you speak for the democracy?

Mr. HOLMAN. I speak for myself, so far as these appropriations apply to works of national importance. I am in favor of appropriating for them from year to year until the works are completed, but as to the works of purely local concern and private enterprise, which involves $2,000,000 in this bill——

Mr. FOSTER. Cannot you answer yes or no?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; but I am opposed to these appropriations for local objects.

Mr. FOSTER. Do they regard this as a reduction, postponement, or an absolute abandonment? In my judgment a subsequent Congress will make the appropriations, and in no sense can it be called a reduction.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The appropriations for deficiencies for the year last past made by this House are something more than $4,000,000 less than the appropriations made last session for the then current year. As before stated, these appropriations apply to the year that is past and in no way enter into the expenditures of the current year; and if any credit is due for this reduction it is to the Appropriation Committee of last year and to the Administration for adhering so closely to the amounts appropriated.

INDIAN BILL.

The reductions by the House bill this year over last is $1,380,952.44; over estimates, $1,808,393.53. These reductions were proposed to be accomplished by the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, no provision being made for the current and contingent expenses of the offices, amounting to three-fourths of a million of dollars. The bill assumed that the War Department could take care of the Indian service, if it was transferred to it, without any additional expenses. The difference is further accounted for by failing to appropriate for plain treaty provisions.

In the judgment of many of the best men of both Houses, among them the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] there was no decrease of expenditures in this transfer, and the Speaker of the House, when ruling on this point, thought the bill did not on its face establish any such claim.

I cannot give credit for any reduction whatever in the amount appropriated for the Indian Bureau. They are simply postponements, and such ones, too, as would have resulted in Indian wars, and thus add largely to the maintenance of the Army.

ARMY BILL.

This bill proposes a reduction of $4,778,752.88 as compared with the appropriations of last year and the sum of $10,193,631.38 as compared with the estimates for the current year. A million and a quarter is due to re-appropriations of balances in the Treasury unexpended but re-appropriated by us this year, making the real reduction less by this amount. A million and a half is due to postponements of purchases of clothing, ordnance stores, and to the manufacture of arms. It has been the custom in the Army heretofore to keep one year's supply of clothing in advance. Secretary TAFT, after advising with the officers of the Army, thought this was unnecessary, and having on hand a year's supply, he suggested that no money be appropriated this year for this purpose, and that hereafter the purchases be made for the current year.

The balance of the reduction is due to the postponement of the building of arsenals, barracks, &c., all of which are deemed necessary by the War Department, and to a reduction in the numerical force of the Army. Recent events have shown the folly of the attempt of the House to reduce the Army; $2,500,000 are due to this alone. There may be the sum of half a million due to the reduction of the pay of the Army officers; I have not gone closely into it, but it is probably about that amount.

SUNDRY CIVIL.

The estimates for this year were	$32,560,475 29
Appropriations for last year	26,644,350 00
House bill appropriations for this year	14,857,326 54
Less than appropriated last year	11,787,023 46
Less than estimates	17,703,148 75

The item for public printing and binding for this year is $1,130,000 in House bill, was recommended by the Committee on Public Printing. The amount appropriated last year was a little over $500,000 more than this sum. The Committee on Appropriations does not know, nor does any member of this House know, save two of the democratic members of the Printing Committee, whether this sum is sufficient or not. It is quite probable that this estimate was made by the proprietor of the old Globe office, who is desirous of recovering the printing lost to him by the action of a former Congress. The House will be called upon next session for more than a half million dollars to enable this Bureau to perform the work ordered by Congress, which was never so large. It must be borne in mind also that the cost of printing the voluminous testimony taken by the numerous committees of the House will probably add not less than $100,000 to the cost of the public printing.

ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Amount estimated, $1,944,875, and the amount appropriated last year $1,628,000, to which we had to add this session a deficiency of $163,000.

Now it is evident that a large reduction can be made here because of the substitution of silver coin for fractional currency, thereby obviating the necessity of printing the fractional notes; although the sum appropriated is not the sum supposed to be necessary by the officers in charge, yet it is probably approximately so. This reduction, whatever it may be, is due to the action of Congress in substituting silver for fractional currency, and not to any economy of the majority of this House.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Appropriated for this year, $2,371,560, The estimate for this purpose, including the new State Department, is about $6,700,000. This is for buildings already commenced.

It must be remembered that in every locality where public buildings are being erected the Government is paying rent to the full extent of 6 per cent. on the cost of the completed building. The postponement of their completion entails a loss of a sum equal to 6 per cent. of the sum already invested; a sum aggregating in dollars and cents more than $500,000 is lost to the people besides the delay and annoyance to the public business because of the present occupation of inconvenient buildings and the endangering of the safety of valuable public records. For instance, the present buildings occupied by the War and Navy Departments are very insecure. We have expended $2,000,000 in partially building a new structure for their accommodation. One million three hundred thousand more will complete it. Its occupancy would place the valuable and precious records of these two Departments in complete safety at once.

There never was a time since the war when these works could be built so cheaply. We have the money in the Treasury to do it. The laboring interests of the country are in need of the labor.

There is no reason except one of a supposed party character under the guise of the cry of economy why these buildings should not be pushed vigorously; any private individual similarly situated would be called a fool if he acted as our democratic friends have in this matter.

The postponements on account of public buildings are $4,400,000, the appropriation for which Congress cannot escape; armories and arsenals, estimated to cost $917,000, appropriated $289,000, balance $628,000, only postponed; Light-House Board, estimates $789,000, appropriated $273,000, postponed $516,000; which must be provided for in the future.

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Appropriated $2,500,000, instead of $3,000,000 estimated. This last-named amount was appropriated last year. A deficiency is asked for by the Attorney-General, with a statement that this sum is utterly inadequate to the necessities of the service. A deficiency in this item of at least $500,000 is among the strong probabilities.

The Government has invested in navy-yards property from fifty to one hundred million dollars. Not a dollar was appropriated in House bill for their care and protection.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Reduction by House bill below the estimates $4,200,696.99; below appropriations of last year $3,785,252.

The estimated receipts by House bill over the estimates made by the Postmaster-General is $600,000 and the reduced requirement of $250,000 for the Pacific Mail steamship service makes $850,000 which must be deducted from $4,200,696.99, the House reduction, which leaves $3,350,696.99 as the real reduction. Of this sum $500,000 is credited to the reduction of the salaries of postmasters, recommended by the Postmaster-General. Five hundred thousand dollars more is for reduction of other salaries and force by the House. The balance of reduction is due to decrease in mail facilities, such as cutting off all fast mails—one that is coming to the knowledge of gentlemen by cries from the people for its restoration—and otherwise decreasing mail facilities and reducing the maximum speed of all mail trains to twenty-five miles per hour.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The reduction from the estimates of last year is $8,438,811, and the reduction as compared with the appropriations of last year is $4,578,451.50. To make this reduction the House has cut down the appropriation for pay of the officers and men of the Navy to the extent of $1,850,000 below the estimates and $500,000 from the appropriations of last year. To enable the Secretary of the Navy to bring the expenses for the pay of the officers of the Navy within the appropriation he will necessarily be compelled to furlough a large number of his officers, thereby decreasing the efficiency of the Navy and entailing upon these officers a vast amount of inconvenience if not absolute want and suffering. The other reductions are made simply by postponements of work on iron-clads and other vessels of war in course of construction, as witness the orders of the Secretary just issued to the several contractors who have had the work to do, and to the necessity of stopping the work on other vessels for the want of money to repair them, while other vessels are being put out of commission. The minority agreed with the committee in some of these postponements, believing that there was no immediate urgency for a portion of the work estimated for by the Navy Department; but we thought then and think now that it was not economy to make these wholesale postponements, thereby stopping most of the work at the different navy-yards and throwing some of the best skilled mechanics in the world, as well as the unskilled laborers now so much in need of something to do, out of employment. All these postponements must at some future day be provided for if we intend to maintain a navy of only moderate proportions.

RECAPITULATION.

The following tables show the reductions and postponements in a condensed form according to the details I have given:

Statement showing amount of reductions and postponements in House bills as compared with the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

Name of bill.	Reduction.	Postponement.
Military Academy	$40,000 00	$166,229 00
Pension	.....	.....
Consular and diplomatic	339,737 50	100,000 00
Fortification	.....	3,091,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	2,724,000 00	5,1[illegible]2,499 39
River and harbor	.....	8,428,250 00
Post-office	4,200,696 99	.....
Navy	1,500,000 00	6,938,811 00
Indian	.....	1,808,393 53
Army	500,000 00	9,693,631 38
Sundry civil	1,000,000 00	16,933,493 55
Total	10,304,434 49	52,262,307 85
		10,304,434 49
Total reductions and postponements		62,566,742 34
Add deficiency, (belongs to year ending June 30, 1876)		2,051,984 96
Grand total		64,618,727 30

Statement showing amount of reductions and postponements by the House bills as compared with the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876.

Name of bill.	Reduction.	Postponement	Remarks.
Military Academy	$40,000 00	$93,409 00	Reduction due to reduced pay of cadets and professors.
Pension	466,500 00	.....
Consular and diplomatic	339,637 50	88,800 00	Reduction accomplised by violation of a trust and an injury to commerce.
Fortification	.....	535,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	2,724,000 00	3,000,417 39	All over $2,000,000 of this reduction works injury.
River and harbor	.....	770,667 50
Deficiency	.....	.....	$4,032,212.44. (Belongs to last year.)
Post-office	3,785,252 00	.....	$1,000,000 of this is proper, the remainder decreases the mail facilities.
Navy	1,500,000 00	3,078,451 50	Reduction here does great injustice to officers of the Navy.
Indian	.....	1,380,952 44
Army	500,000 00	4,278,752 88	Reduction due to proposed transfer.
Sundry civil	1,000,000 00	11,017,368 35	Reduction due mainly to the substitution of silver coin for fractional notes.
Total	10,355,389 50	24,243,909 06
		10,355,389 50
Total reductions and postponements	.....	34,599,298 56
Add deficiency	.....	4,032,212 44
Total Springer's table	.....	38,631,511 00

The Senate met this demand for reduction and postponement of expenditures in a liberal spirit and in the bills as passed by the Senate they made reductions and postponements to the amount of more than $15,000,000, as will be seen by the following statement.

The Senate made reductions as compared with appropriations for year ending June 30, 1876, as follows:

Pensions	$466,500 00
Military Academy	83,889 00
Consular and diplomatic	33,338 50
Fortifications	535,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial	2,366,893 99
Deficiency	3,862,868 91
Post-Office	$728,011 00
Naval	2,143,151 00
Indian	402,193 28
Army	217,952 80
Sundry civil	6,687,853 90
	17,527,656 66
Deduct deficiency	3,862,868 99
	13,664,786 67
River and harbor bill	1,648,517 50
Making a total of	15,313,304 17

By this table it will be seen the difference between the two Houses is about $10,000,000.

Whenever the conference committees have met, the Senate conferees have in every instance shown an entire willingness to meet the demands of the House conferees on all matters of discretion more than half way. In fact they do not even resist the demands of the House on all matters of discretion; but, on matters of legislation that could not receive the sanction of the Senate by the ordinary methods of legislation, they declined to yield.

I have shown beyond question that the reductions are only about ten millions, instead of thirty-nine millions, and that the balance is simply postponements of appropriations that must be provided for in the future. That of the ten millions of reductions a considerable portion of it is obtained by crippling the Government machinery, entailing inconvenience and loss to the people. I have also shown that the pretended reductions of thirty-nine millions is in reality but about twenty-five millions.

Never in history have current facts been distorted as they are in this matter by our democratic friends. Never was deception practiced to such extent as now.

The reduction in Government expenses last year was more than sixteen millions when the books closed on the 30th of June, 1876. This is an actual test of the year's work.

When the present year expires and the work of this House is tested by the actual result I shall be gratified if it makes as good a showing as last, namely, an actual reduction of $16,000,000.

Having said this much on the question of appropriations I propose now to address myself to the question of economy and reform, the present watch-word of the democracy.

REFORM.

Much has been said by our democratic friends on the subject of reform. Economy and reform is the burden of their song. The word "reform" appears eighteen times in a platform adopted recently at Saint Louis. The fact is, reform is an ever-present necessity; it has been proclaimed in every platform of every party since the first one was made; until human nature approaches near perfection necessity for reform must always exist. I do not object to reform, the republican party does not object to it; and we congratulate the country when this democratic party, in this centennial year, shows any desire to reform. Let their conversion for the future be proclaimed. It certainly augurs well for the country. It was this party which is now crying reform that in 1861 plunged the nation into rebellion to destroy it. Persons are here on this floor crying economy and reform who assisted in that long-to-be-remembered but unsuccessful effort to destroy the country. A less charitable person than myself might say that the last democratic Congress undertook to destroy the country by secession and rebellion, and now the first democratic House since the rebellion undertakes to paralyze the Government by withholding necessary appropriations. These same gentlemen now have much to say about the enormous expenditures of the Government. Even the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is reported to have said recently in a stump-speech that the cost of the Government before the war was about $2 per capita and it is now $18. Let me first correct his statement by substituting $6 for $18.

Be a little modest, gentlemen. Look into the question fairly, and if there is extravagance anywhere aid in removing it; but when you draw such comparisons as I have alluded to, you must know that your rash act of secession and treason caused these additional expenditures. Do not find fault if it does cost $3 per capita to maintain the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of which you were the direct, only cause. Do not complain if it does cost nearly $1 per capita to pay the pensions to the soldiers who saved the glorious Republic you sought to destroy.

Do not complain if it costs $2 per capita more to maintain other expenses occasioned by your attempt to obliterate from the Declaration of Independence the immortal words of Jefferson.

What evidence have we of reform on the part of the democratic party? The only thing that they can possibly claim as evidence is their attempt to reduce and postpone expenditures. When you claim credit for this tell the laboring men that with a full Treasury you refused to appropriate money for the payment of the necessary work on the public buildings of the country at a time when the completion of these buildings could be effected with greater cheapness than at any time since the war, and when the labor of the country would be greatly benefited thereby. Let them tell the laboring-man now in distress that the great democratic party required that they and their wives and little ones must suffer for the good of the party. Tell them, you representatives from Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Chicago, and Saint Louis, that it was not because the Government was embarrassed that this was done, but they must suffer privation, hunger, and pain because the democratic party wanted an opportunity to cry reform.

Tell the commerce of the country we have deprived it of facilities for which it is taxed; we have put out lights and refused to create new ones to aid it; all for party capital.

While you have reduced a little and postponed largely you have refused to reduce taxation. You have resolved in all your conventions for years, including the one just held at Saint Louis, that the present system of taxation was vicious, that it provided bounties for the rich at the expense of the poor. My friend from New York [Mr. COX] made the statement but a few days since that the people of this country were paying $1,000,000,000 a year as a bounty to the manufacturing interests. Nobody believes this, but he proclaims it, and the democratic party proclaims it now as they have in the past. If this is true, Mr. Speaker, why has not some attempt been made on the part of this reform House to relieve the people of their heavy burdens? Is a party fit to be intrusted with power that admits and charges grievous evils but makes no effort when it has power to relieve the country of them?

Yes, you talk of reform. What did you do when you gained possession of this House? How did you practice reform then? You knew but the one democratic motto "to the victors belong the spoils." Not less than ten thousand hungry democrats besieged these halls for the two hundred places within your gift. Virginia came five thousand strong. North Carolina, too, Georgia, Alabama, and even Texas, with her "biger man than old Grant," who was made Doorkeeper. His only known qualification was the fact that he had been doorkeeper of the confederate senate.

We all remember the scene here at the opening of this Congress with disgust. Why, in fact, Mr. Speaker, it was the first time the confederate forces ever captured Washington in an organized form. Taking that scene as a criterion, what may we expect in the way of reform if Tilden should be inaugurated on the 4th of March next? Why, Mr. Speaker, the ravages of the grasshoppers in the western country would be a fair comparison of the ravages to be inflicted upon the country by the hungry crowd of office-seekers that would come here in that event.

Men were here on that occasion claiming to be democrats of the reform order, giving as evidence thereof the fact that they had served four years in the rebel army, and therefore their democracy could not be questioned. How did this reform party act then? The officers of this House of known capacity were turned out to make room for the greedy horde who came up here from the by-ways of the South. Union soldiers were driven out of their places, to be filled by men who served in the confederate army. Our new journal clerk was compelled to resign; our Doorkeeper expelled from office. A clerk to the Ways and Means Committee was selected because he named a son after the assassin Wilkes Booth. If he had any other qualification I have not heard of it. I will acquit the honorable chairman of the committee with any knowledge of the character of this clerk.

In short, Mr. Speaker, in proportion to the number of employés, the disgrace and scandal attached to this reform House is infinitely greater than to any or all of the Departments of the Government even after putting the worst construction upon them, as is done by all of the reports of your committees. So far as practical legislation is concerned, this House has been an utter, absolute failure. You have sought to make reputation by showing up the deformities of republican officials, not for the public good, but simply in the hope of partisan benefit. In many instances they have been conducted in the most shameless manner. They have sought to bring before them persons discharged from Government employ for dishonest practices; they have hunted up from the slums of the country all the "deadbeats" they could find who would come here to testify to falsehoods for the fees they get. They have investigated in secret and without the knowledge of the accused or of the minorities of the committee. No man's reputation was safe. Even the Speaker of this House was accused of selling an office for money, with nothing but his known good character to rebut it. If the same charge had been made by the same witness against a republican of equally good standing he would have been reported a scoundrel.

While the cost of making these investigations will amount to perhaps a half million dollars and is much more than has been or will be saved to the Treasury, upon the whole I do not regret them. Upon the whole they have done good. In admitting this I remember that it was the policy of the republican party itself to investigate wrong-doers, and whenever a committee finds and points out wrongs in Government officers it has rendered a genuine service to the country.

In concluding this portion of my remarks, permit me to advert to the case of SCHUMAKER and KING, two members of this House, proven to have been in corrupt connection with the Pacific Mail steamship subsidy bill before they were members. The evidence of their corrupt connection with the passage of this bill was referred to this by the last House. No notice has been taken of it. Does any fairminded man believe that if one of these gentlemen had not been a democrat we would have had a report recommending their expulsion?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Committee on the Judiciary did make a report in that case, saying that the House had no jurisdiction over the parties charged with crime. I did not concur in that report, but did unite in the views of the minority asserting such jurisdiction.

Mr. FOSTER. Have they reported to the House?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I suppose that the report has been made to the House.

Mr. MCCRARY. It has been made to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I accept the correction.

If KING, the republican, had been alone he would have been expelled long ago. The vengeance of this virtuous reform House would not have permitted him to hold his seat a week after the opening of Congress.

I read from the New York Times a carefully prepared statement of the reform practices of this House. Its general accuracy cannot be questioned, while possibly there may be an occasional error of minor detail:

DEMOCRATIC REFORM.

Union soldiers removed to make room for rebels—What the democracy has already accomplished—Disabled Union soldiers turned out and confederates of various grades of incompetence put in their places—A carnival of ignorance and imbecility and a foretaste of what we may expect under Tilden.

[From our own correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Saturday, July 29, 1876.

The declaration of the Saint Louis platform, made and repeated with frequent reiteration that "reform is necessary," is well illustrated and sustained by the manner in which the civil offices under control of the House of Representatives have been filled and administered during the present session. The same facts will perhaps suggest that the reform which is necessary will not be secured in the civil service by intrusting the administration to the democratic party. At least there is nothing in the record of the House in the eight months since the beginning of December last to prove conclusively that the democratic party is, as a party, devoted to a pure, high-toned, efficient, well-conducted civil service. If civil service reform, however, means the turning out of all persons now in office, the replacing of Union soldiers with soldiers of the confederacy, in putting into good places men who have failed to secure appointments in the past, and who for that reason have joined the democracy, and others who have been dismissed for cause and have naturally gone to the opposition; in giving places of responsibility, filled by trained and experienced men, to the new, inexperienced, and incompetent; in generally ignoring the requirements of efficiency and capacity in the interests of partisanship and personal services—if this is the kind of reform contemplated by the Saint Louis platform, there has been a fair display of it by the democratic House, and the country may very properly be called upon to look at it and determine whether the same thing of which the House holds up an example is desirable to be introduced throughout the administration during four years.

The House organized by electing a Speaker, Clerk, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Sergeant-at-Arms. The important appointments are in the Clerk's office. The largest number are with the Doorkeeper, and the smallest with the Sergeant-at-Arms. The Speaker has no patronage to dispense save that he is allowed a private clerk, appointed by the Clerk of the House, who leaves the selection to the Speaker. The clerk appointed to Mr. KERR is an ex-confederate. The Postmaster has a few, but important, assistants. Each committee has a clerk as a general rule, the exceptions this year being very few. He is appointed by vote of the committee in some cases, but oftener by the chairman, to whom the rest of the committee leave the designation as an act of courtesy. One of these clerks described his duties as requiring about twenty minutes of his time each week, for which severe labor he received about $160 per month. Many other committee clerks are less fortunate, and have harder work.

The appointments of subordinate officers to the Clerk, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Sergeant-at-Arms are not in reality made by those officers, who have little more agency in the matter than formally placing the names selected by the members on the rolls. There is a general scramble by the State delegations for places for their States. It is quite common for the Doorkeeper to say, I can give Pennsylvania, for example, so many places, and the delegation, or rather the Pennsylvania democratic members, get together and after grave deliberation, or a light and agile "scrimmage," or more frequently the casting of lots, the members for whom the sortes leap forth, not from a helmet, but from a dilapitated plug-hat, announce to the Doorkeeper the names which are to be put down for a Government stipend. The appointing officers, to fulfill schemes of their own, or to show favoritism to particular friends, are compelled to resort to all kinds of tricks and subterfuges, such, for instance, as placing on the rolls as from one State persons really residents of another. One of Fitzhugh's difficulties arose from trying to play these tricks and getting caught at it, and the Postmaster was subject to great complaint in the first part of the session because he had taken his subordinates too largely from one State.

It will be observed from this manner of making the appointments the whole democratic party, through the great body of its most freshly chosen representatives, has been displaying itself. Mistakes in the system or in the details of its administration cannot be shifted upon individuals, for the great body of the democracy has been engaged in the work.

In regard to the administration of the offices a great deal might be written. Much of the delay in getting the House in working order, by which in the first two months of the session not a solid week's work was accomplished, is attributable to the greenness and inefficiency of the officers. In no department was the work well done. Frequent blunders were made in keeping the record, so that members for the first time in many years felt compelled to listen each morning to the reading of the Journal. The assistant doorkeepers could not find the members when on the floor, and persons sending in cards sometimes had to wait hours for an answer. This trouble could have been avoided by retaining for a time some of the old doorkeepers. Members could not get a report or bill from the document-room without great trouble and delay. They were stifled and made sick by bad ventilation because of an inexperienced engineer. The Sergeant-at-Arms in one instance put a reputable citizen under arrest as a witness without authority or warrant. Blunders—not to use a harsher term—have been common in all the branches of service, and it is only a few days since one of Clerk Adams's subordinates enrolled a bill which had been passed by both Houses, an important bill on straw-bidding, in such a manner as to render the action of Congress null and void.

Thus much in relation to the general manner of "reform" appointments and administration as exhibited by the democratic party through its representatives in the House. Specific statements are always to be preferred to generalities, and the facts and records quoted below will command attention, which need not therefore be invited. They afford material for extensive generalizations, which readers will not fail to make. They afford food for thought graver and more earnest than need be expended upon a merely partisan exhibit of facts. The patriot, the honest politician, and the real reformer may well pause to consider whether any more of the same kind of "reform is necessary" or desirable, or likely to be advantageous to the country.

One of the most striking facts shown by the record is the utter abhorrence which the democratic party, through its representatives, exhibits for the Union soldier and the love of those who bore arms against the Republic. No protestations of loyalty will stand against such a record of Union soldiers dismissed and rebel soldiers appointed. On this point little need be said. The list of names shall tell their own story. The column on the left hand contains the names of employés discharged, and the column on the right those appointed. The Union soldiers discharged have their names printed in small capital letters. The names of confederates appointed are in italics. A star designates the Union soldiers who were disabled by wounds received in the service:

OFFICERS REMOVED AND APPOINTED BY THE DEMOCRATIC HOUSE.

In the Clerk's Office.

OFFICERS REMOVED.	OFFICERS APPOINTED.
E. McPherson, Clerk.	George M. Adams, Clerk.
C. Lloyd, Chief Clerk.	Green Adams, Chief Clerk.
J. M. Barclay, journal clerk.	C. H. Smith, journal clerk.
J. W. NIGHTINGALE, tally clerk.	H. H. Smith, journal clerk.
W. K. Meehaffy, reading clerk.	N. S. Brown.
C. W. Cilsbee, reading clerk.	T. W. Pettit.
J. W. Clayton, assistant journal clerk.	D. Flanagan.
J. H. BONEBRAKE, printing clerk.	T. O. Towles.
W. P. White.	W. French.
L. REINBURG.	J. H. Francis.
J. W. KRAUTH.	J. M. Brown.
A. D. Wood.	T. H. Baker.
A. BARNES.	T. B. Dalton.
Z. Moses, cashier.	F. F. King.
J. Holcombe.	E. Keightley.
H. D. WHARTON.*	J. C. Barr.
J. P. JEFFRIES.	H. M. Beadle.
E. J. CRESSY.	D. B. Sublet.
E. F. Minor.	E. M. Jewe'l.
J. J. Piatt, Librarian.	J. D. Young.
Paul Stephens, Librarian.	W. O. Reeves.
Joseph Harris, chief messenger.	J. H. Patterson.
J. B. CLARKE, jr., superintendent documents.	Morgan Rawles.
G. F. Stimson, clerk.	C. H. Voorhees.
J. C. ROWLAND, clerk.	H. A. Alcott.
J. T. MILLER, engineer.	G. C. Ellison.
Levi Jones, assistant engineer.	J. W. McGlensey.
A. T. Sherman, assistant engineer.	C. A. Stewart.
David Small, assistant engineer.	J. H. Rodgers.
J. H. Barker, fireman.	E. Morris.
C. P. BURDICK, fireman.	P. M. Higgins.
E. H. Brown, fireman.	S. J. Davenport.
J. B. SIMMONS, fireman.	T. Rafferty.
Hugh Lyons, fireman.	L. J. Reilly.
F. BALLENGER.	T. McKag.
J. D. Barclay.	W. H. Scudder.
T. H. Sherman, secretary to Speaker.	J. H. White.
WILLIAM DEPLICH.*
H. S. LINKER.
GEORGE WINTERS.
DAVID SMALL.
A. T. SHERMAN.

Under the Doorkeeper.

O. Buxton, Doorkeeper.	L. H. Fitzhugh.
JOHN BOYD, assistant doorkeeper.	J. W. Jennings.
GEORGE W. DUNN, superintendent folding-room.	A. W. Fletcher.
J. Duffield, superintendent documents.	A. W. Reese.
W. S. YOUNG, assistant superintendent documents.	C. C. Aleshire.
L. A. BUXTON, file clerk.	L. Fitzhugh.
J. S. SAMSON, messenger.	Eugene Durnin.
A. S. French, messenger.	N. S. Clark.
S. B. Wells, messenger.	S. J. Richardson.
J. W. Chandler, messenger.	William Deegan.
R. R. STEPHENS, messenger.	G. M. Lefevre.
GEORGE C. MCPHERSON, messenger.	Silas Carr.
JOHN STERLING, messenger.	E. A. Dulin.
J. W. WRIGHT, messenger.	F. M. Schell.
W. P. Lawer, messenger.	John Baxter.
H. H. REMMINGTON, messenger.	P. H. Winston.
W. P. ANDERSON, messenger.	James G. Paine.
HUDSON DECKER,* messenger.	Charles W. Combs.
M. J. BUNNELL,* messenger.	James G. Long.
J. B. EUGENE,* messenger.	W. J. McCord.
WILLIAM M. GIBSON,* messenger.	C. C. Buckner.
S. H. Neally.	George A. Bacon.
G. W. Pugh.	T. G. Sullivan.
E. C. Stevens.	John Baxter.
J. L. Kenea.	S. O. Hemmingway.
A. Marston.	W. Leach.
George W. Currier.	Patrick Doran.
J. E. W. THOMPSON.*	W. W. Stringfield.
W. HARDING.	G. J. Huston.
Robert O'Hare.	T. J. Leary.
S. S. STRACHAN.	G. E. Gittings.
J. N. Hubbard.	George K. Coleman.
B. N. G. O'Brian.	J. S. Knight.
A. H. Loyd.	J. T. Blackstone.
J. E. HAMMOND.	W. W. Lester.
Charles E. Brant.	Thomas T. Dugan.
C. H. SEWELL.*	Frank Smythe.
E. J. Burr.	George V. Hebb.
W. G. Brower.	N. B. Henderson.
A. E. Ward.	H. M. Scott.
JOHN HUNTER.	O. W. C. Dunnington.
PHIL. COLEMAN.*	E. P. Schell.
Lewis Ellis.	James Hall.
J. J. G. Ball.*	J. Smith.

Sergeant-at-Arms.

N. G. Ordway, Sergeant-at-Arms.	J. G. Thompson.
E. L. Whitford, clerk to Sergeant-at-Arms.	E. Winship.
Charles Christian, Messenger.	R. W. Lennox.

Capitol Police.

Colonel GEORGE W. KIRK.	H. T. Banks.
W. K. TAYLOR,	Thomas Fealom.
E. S. Atkinson.	J. G. Barker.
C. J. Jones.	F. J. Jones.
J. McNeal.	J. C. Saunders.
J. W. Westfall.	J. Hill.
F. M. Colby.	J. H. Burnham.
A. M. Greene.	M. Connelly.

Post-Office.

H. M. SHERWOOD,* Postmaster.	Joseph M. Stuart.
JAMES F. WILSON,* assistant postmaster.	E. Snowden, jr.
NORMAN CRANE, messenger.	A. W. C. Nowlan.
J. H. LYTLE, messenger.	P. S. Goodsell.
F. A. WARDELL,* messenger.	J. R. Fisher.
W. B. SESSIONS, messenger.	G. W. Kennedy.
C. Palmoni, messenger.	Edward Este.
D. B. BRADLEY, messenger.	E. C. Glass.
D. T. BISHOP, messenger.	Joseph M. Taylor.
R. S. MCMICHAEL,* messenger.	George W. Rock.
A. M. LEGG, messenger.	W. Robertson.
C. M. Thomas, messenger.	Henry Cook.
James L. McKee, messenger.	Thomas B. Curby.
J. D. SEVERN, messenger.	William B. Lowry.
R. P. BISHOP,* messenger.	George T. Rodgers.
JAMES H. PAINE, messenger.	Richard Allen.
J. R. Mertz,* mail agent.	H. Lathrom.

An examination of the table shows that there were discharged from the Doorkeeper's department, 23 Union soldiers; from the Clerk's office, 19 Union soldiers; from the post-office, 13 Union soldiers; from the Capitol police, 2; making 57 Union soldiers discharged by the democratic House since its organization last December. A number of these soldiers were disabled in the service.

There were appointed in their places, as far as can be ascertained, in the Doorkeeper's department, 19 confederates; in the Clerk's office, 10; in the post-office, 14; Capitol police, 1; and 3 committee clerks; making 47 confederate soldiers appointed. The names of many of the employés of the present House, such as extra messengers, folders, and extra committee clerks, cannot be ascertained, for the reason that they are paid upon vouchers instead of a regular roll. A great number of these extra employés are ex-confederates, and if the facts could be ascertained in all the cases, the number of ex-confederate soldiers appointed would be found to exceed the number of Union soldiers discharged.

The post-office rolls show the most wanton disregard by the confederate House of the obligations of the Government to its disabled soldiers, where nearly every man discharged served in the Union Army, and with two exceptions every man appointed was a confederate.

The Postmaster, Henry M. Sherwood, was an officer of Company C, Fourth Michigan Cavalry. He served with distinction in the Southwest, and lost a leg at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain. He was succeeded by Colonel Joseph M. Stewart, a confederate officer in Ashby's command of confederate cavalry.

Joseph F. Wilson, the assistant postmaster, served with distinction in the war, and was shot through the face at the battle of Fort Donelson and terribly disfigured. He still suffers severely from his wounds. He was the first one discharged to make room for E. Snowden, jr., an ex-confederate, who was not, however, in the army. He took the modified oath in qualifying for the office.

F. A. Wardell was a member of the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment, served with distinction during the entire war, and was very severly wounded at Winchester. He was discharged early in the session by Colonel Stewart to make room for an ex-confederate soldier.

R. P. Bishop, in the post-office department, belonged to a Michigan infantry regiment, served during the war, losing an arm in the service. He, too, gave place to a confederate soldier early in the present session.

R. S. McMichael was a soldier in a Wisconsin regiment, and is almost entirely blind from wounds received in the service. An ex-confederate soldier succeeded Mr. McMichael.

The Doorkeeper's department was notoriously the worst demoralized, however, by the changes made of any. Mr. O. S. Buxton, a gentleman of intelligence and character, and a most efficient officer, was succeeded by L. H. Fitzhugh, an ex-confederate and the sergeant-at-arms of the confederate congress. This man Fitzhugh has become famous by reason of letters in which he describes himself as "a biger man than old Grant." The same letter graphically describes the importunities of members of the reform Congress for offices for their friends, and tells how the writer is fêted by wives of distinguished members because of the offices he has at his disposal. Fitzhugh was appointed because he is supposed to have some of the blood of Patrick Henry coursing in his veins. The degenerate descendant of a famous Virginian was ignominiously turned out of office, his truthful letter being made a pretext to cover the real reason, which was a failure to distribute his patronage so as to satisfy influential and exacting members.

Under the Doorkeeper were a large number of Union soldiers, fourteen of whom were more or less disabled in the Union service from a mere gunshot wound in some cases to the loss of an arm or leg, and even both arms. All of these soldiers were marked for discharge, and nearly all of them had been given notice to quit. In a great majority of instances their places were filled by ex-confederates. There was, however, so much disturbance raised by the Northern democrats about the discharge of these crippled soldiers, that nine of them were re-instated in their places, one of whom has since been discharged, and the remainder probably will be discharged as soon as Congress shall have adjourned. Some of the most notable of the changes made are worth more consideration than will be allotted to them in this brief sketch.

Major M. J. Bunnell entered the service in 1861 in the Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteers. He participated in many of the important battles of the war. In October, 1861, he was commissioned second lieutenant, and in January, 1862, first lieutenant. He was engaged in all the battles from the siege of Yorktown to the second battle of Bull Run, in August, 1862, where he was severely wounded, having been shot through both lungs and the left thigh. He was left on the field for dead, remaining in the hands of the enemy. While he was still ill he was commissioned a captain, remaining as such till the expiration of his regiment's term of service, when he was mustered out. He then entered the Veteran Reserve Corps, and did duty as provost-marshal till the close of the war. He was brevetted major for meritorious conduct on the field.

This brave soldier and meritorious officer was succeeded by F. M. Schell, of Indiana. Schell is a big, pompous fellow, whose business it was to clear the floor of all persons except members previous to the calling of the House to order each day. This duty he discharged in such an imposing and tremendous fashion as at first to make him a butt for ridicule. He became disagreeable by his officiousness, and grave charges were also preferred, which caused his dismissal. He is still to be seen about the floor of the House, and it is said he has been "taken care of," which probably means that he is paid upon a voucher instead of appearing on the rolls. The story of the charges against him is too indecent to print. He is, in short, known as the purveyor to members of the House of a nameless commodity, for the furnishing of which he assisted at the beginning of the session in setting up an establishment.

William M. Gibson was a private in Company C, Thirty-sixth Illinois Regiment. He enlisted on the 1st of June, 1861, and participated in all battles through the Southwest. At the battle of Pea Ridge, Arkansas, he lost his right arm.

Hudson Decker was a member of the First New York Cavalry, and served from 1861 to 1865, through nearly all the cavalry engagements of the war. At Cold Harbor he was so injured by a fall from his horse that he has lost nearly the entire use of both his hands.

J. J. G. Ball was a member of the Twenty-sixth Massachusetts Volunteers, from which he was promoted to the position of captain in the Eighty-sixth Regiment United States troops. On April 9, 1865, at Blakely, Alabama, during the engagement which took place at that point, he was shot through the right chest and lost his right arm.

William Deplitch, another of the disabled soldiers discharged by Fitzhugh, served in Company E, Third Massachusetts, and lost a leg at Goldsborough, North Carolina.

Charles H. Sewell, of Company G, Ninty-ninth New York Volunteers, was another victim of democratic reform. He was twice wounded in action and saw four years and more of hard service.

J. B. Eugene was a member of a Wisconsin regiment. He served during a large part of the war and lost an arm in the service.

J. E. W. Thompson was also discharged by Fitzhugh among the first of the Union soldiers sent off to make room for confederates. He lost a leg in one of the notable battles of the war.

Philip W. Coleman was one of the recent discharges from the Doorkeeper's department. He lost an arm while battling for the Union, and was four times severely wounded at James Island, South Carolina. He served in the Eighth Michigan Infantry.

That the House was not fortunate in the character of its appointees has been well known, but a brief summary of a few instances is worth attention. The Clerk, Mr. Adams, has been under investigation, and of the charges of corruption has been acquitted, no doubt deservedly. A committee still has before it a resolution of inquiry whether Adams has not labored to oppose the legislation of the House relative to the reduction of his own salary. This he admits, in a way, but the committee has not reported any condemnation of such action. His fault consisted chiefly in trying to secure assistance in this affair from the republican side of the House. While Adams himself escapes any condemnation, the appointees under him have been less fortunate.

The veteran journal clerk, John M. Barclay, who had held the position for thirty years, and was still a most valuable officer, was forced to resign, and his assistant, J. W. Clayton, was dismissed. One C. H. Smith, of New Hampshire, was appointed to succeed Barclay, and proved to be not only incapable, but dishonest. He was caught using his position to secure business as a claim agent in anticipation of the passage of the bill equalizing soldiers' bounties, and he was no doubt counting upon aiding the passage of the bill by using the influence of his office. He was investigated, threatened with dismissal, and resigned in disgrace.

The successor of Clinton Lloyd as Chief Clerk in the office of the Clerk of the House is Green Adams, the uncle of the Clerk Adams: a case of nepotism reversed. Green Adams was formerly Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department. While in that position the chief clerk, Sharretts, sold waste paper to the value of $5,392.76, and paid to Green Adams out of the amount $2,517.52. Neither Sharretts nor Adams ever accounted for the money till both were out of office. When the facts were partially discovered through the man who bought the paper, Sharretts refunded $2,345.24, and turned over Green Adams's receipts for the remainder to the amount stated above. Adams makes a long statement, which is in effect that he was informed by Sharretts that this money had been kept by the auditors because there was no fund into which it could be received in the Treasury Department, and Sharretts said, "If you pay it to any person, pay it to your successor in office." But Sharretts had never heard of this money being paid over except by one auditor. Adams had intended to pay the money over to his successor, but went home before his successor was appointed. These facts appear in the public records, and show that the present Chief Clerk is either not a very honest man or not a very competent officer. Adams is also an ex-member of the House.

The engineer, Ellison, is under investigation on various charges, and no report has been made. It would require more space to set forth the nature of the charges affecting his character than is warranted by the importance of his position. The greatest trouble with him is his incompetence. Mr. HEWITT, who originally recommended Ellison, withdrew his recommendation on discovering by inquiries of his own that Ellison did not know there was any difference between a high-pressure and a low-pressure engine, and could not explain what he would do if he found the water in the boiler had become too low. Ellison was afterward put through a competitive examination, and came out at the head and was appointed. It is commonly supposed that he was "crammed" for the occasion, and knew what questions to expect. That he was incompetent was shown by the condition of the air in the House, which never was so bad before, though the machinery remains unchanged. The result of the investigation is unknown.

J. J. Piatt, the Librarian of the House, a writer and scholar of some celebrity, was succeeded by John D. Young, a democratic ex-member of Congress.

John B. Clark, jr., a Union soldier, superintendent of the document-room, was succeeded by Morgan Rawles, an ex-confederate and democratic ex-member of Congress.

The committees have a larger army of clerks than ever were employed before. They are supposed to be made necessary by the numerous investigations. Many clerks to committees are not regularly appointed, but are simply employed and paid on vouchers, so their real positions will not appear in the records. The disgrace of two of the most important of the regular committee clerks is notorious.

MORRISON appointed as clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means J. P. Hambleton. This man was a cotton-claim agent and lobbyist, and, besides, was an unusually bitter and vituperative rebel. He named a son John Wilkes Booth, for the assassin of Abraham Lincoln. This charge having been made, he denied it intemperately. The charge having been proved, MORRISON was unable to stand the pressure, and Hambleton resigned.

Boughton, clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs, was charged with entering into collusion, while a revenue officer, with fraudulent whisky distillers, and sharing the profits of the frauds. The investigation was made by his own committee, which was as lenient as possible. The ex parte case was clear against him, but division arose in the committee about the extent of the examination, and he was finally permitted to resign, instead of being dismissed. His offense was outlawed under the statute of limitations.

Several committee-clerks were discharged employés of the Departments. Such men seemed to be preferred for committee-clerks, and in one or two notable instances they used the committees as instruments for revenge, not, however, very successfully.

The only reform in the democratic party that I know of is the reform of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He has reformed, from being the leader of his side of the House in all forms of governmental extravagance, who has time and again on this floor advocated high salaries, even up to and including the closing hours of the Forty-third Congress; who once went so far as to say that a man who could not earn $7,500 as a member of Congress was not fit to be one. He has now reformed and has even become a reformer, and the democratic side of the House has reformed with him. How long this will last is quite doubtful. Like all old and hardened sinners, he and they are more than ordinarily zealous in their professions of reform. It is to be hoped that unlike this class of zealous reformers generally they will not fall by the way-side after the election.

My purpose in briefly alluding to this matter of reform is to institute a number of comparisons of the expenses of the Government between the years of democratic rule and the present republican rule.

In 1859 the expenditures of the Government were $68,984,090; in 1876 they were about $258,000,000 in round numbers; making a difference of $189,000,000 between the expenses of the Government in 1859 and 1876.

This difference can be accounted for quite easily. Three causes account for it:

First, the war and the expenses incident thereto, which entail an expense of $170,000,000, divided as follows:

Interest on the public debt about	$100,000,000
Pensions about	28,000,000
Expenses incident to the war	42,000,000
Total war expenses	170,000,000
Second, natural growth of the service with the growth of the country	10,000,000
New service, not in existence in 1859	9,000,000
Total expenses for 1876 in excess of 1859	189,000,000
Add expenses of 1859	69,000,000
Total for the service in 1876	258,000,000

Add nineteen millions to the cost of the service on account of the growth of the country to the sixty-nine millions, cost for 1859, and we have eighty-eight millions as the present cost, less war expenses. population in 1859, 31,000,000; per capita cost, $2.10; population in 1876, 44,000,000; per capita cost, $1.85. The actual per capita expenses to-day (less expenses caused by the war) is twenty-five cents less than in 1859.

It will be seen by this table, which is entirely accurate, that in 1860 in the First Auditor's Office there were nineteen hundred and eighty-one subjects examined, against seven thousand and sixty-five in 1875. In 1860 the amounts involved were $157,000,000, against $1,144,000,000 in 1876. The expenses in that Bureau for 1860 were $42,340; in 1875 $76,780; whereas the work performed is more than fourfold, and with this relative expense, namely, in 1860, it cost $4.10 to settle a single account, whereas in 1875 it costs but $3.06.

In the Third Auditor's Office the number of accounts settled was 2,300 in 1860 and 19,138 in 1875, amounting in 1860 to $14,591,815; in 1875 it was $53,418,828.50. The average salary of each clerk in 1860 was $1,490.82, in 1875 it was $1,312.13; showing the average salary to be in 1875 $178 less than in 1860. So that after all the talk about high salaries the average cost is $178 less than in 1860.

The cost of settling an account in 1860, in so-called good old democratic-reform times, was $35; the cost now in times of so-called republican extravagance is $12.30. An examination of all the Bureaus of all the Departments presents precisely similar results. The fact is, examination discloses the fact that the average cost of settling any given account is from 25 to 50 per cent. less now than in 1860; thus showing beyond controversy that the employés of the Treasury to-day do at least from 25 to 50 per cent. more work now than then, and that, too, at an average annual expense of $178 less for each clerk.

Comparative statement of work performed in the several Bureaus of the Treasury Department, below specified, during the years ending June 30, 1860, and June 30, 1875, respectively.

	1860.	1875.
FIRST AUDITOR'S OFFICE.
Number of accounts for money received	1,985	7,065
Amount involved	$157,596,761 36	$1,144,320,298 80
Number of accounts for money disbursed	8,334	17,994
Amount involved	$125,630,648 78	$1,491,427,101 07
Expenses	42,340 00	76,780 00
Cost per account	4 10	3 06
SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE.
Number of accounts settled	2,174	25,347
Amount involved	$9,972,757 31	$27,536,257 49
Letters, claims, &c., received	5,042	118,602
Letters written	8,003	131,321
Number of employés	24	176
Expenses	$35,540	$245,480
Number of accounts settled to each employé	90	144
Number of letters received to each employé	210	673
Number of letters written to each employé	333	746
Cost per account	$16 34	$9 68
THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE.
Number of accounts settled	2,300	19,138
Amount involved	$14,591,815 00	$53,418,828 50
Number of employés	61	173
Expenses	$90,940 00	$237,000 00
Average salary of each clerk	1,490 82	1,312 13
Average amount settled by each clerk	239,210 00	308,779 30
Number of accounts settled by each clerk	39⅓	111 59
Average cost per account	$35 00	$12 30

Comparative statement of the work performed at the several Bureaus of the Treasury Department, &c.—Continued.

	1860.	1875.
FOURTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE.
Number of accounts adjusted	320	1,111
Number of vouchers embraced in same	58,098	189,451
Amount involved	$17,442,757 43	$42,109,798 61
Number of prize-claims settled	.....	2,842
Amount of prize-money distributed	.....	$358,588 39
Number of general claims adjusted	346	1,352
Amount disbursed in above settlements	$74,682 15	$243,561 89
Monthly statements from paymasters received and examined	.....	1,500
Certificates of service furnished Commissioner of Pensions	.....	340
Number of pay requisitions entered	780	1,919
Amount	$11,856,201 98	$26,498,130 30
Number of refunding requisitions	115	218
Amount	$326,608 00	$4,697,428 00
Number of allotments registered	1,867	1,428
Number of letters received and registered	5,252	17,383
Number of letters written	5,673	21,859
Number of clerks employed	15	45
Expenses	$27,740 00	$78,328 25
FIFTH AUDITOR'S OFFICE.
Number of accounts adjusted	1,347	11,697
Number of clerks employed	8	33
Expenses	$17,840 00	$52,400 00
Cost per settlement	1,324	4 48
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS.
Receipts	$53,166,728 09	$159,117,443 87
Disbursements	6,542,912 67	19,726,337 81
Letters written	5,426	12,345
Letters received	3,683	10,888
Letters recorded	5,426	10,318
Returns received and examined	.....	10,824
Number of oaths registered	.....	5,841
Number of appointments registered	.....	5,600
Number of clerks employed	11	29
Expenses	$20,440 00	$45,420 07
FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE.
Accounts revised and balances recorded	7,580	21,533
Requisitions	1,116	4,435
Warrants entered and posted	17,022	48,407
Letters written, &c	3,732	12,252
Internal-revenue tax-lists received and entered	.....	2,715
Internal-revenue reports copied, &c	.....	3,538
Powers of attorney examined and entered	68	1,527
Expenses	$28,201 00	$73,768 00
REGISTER'S OFFICE.
Certificates of registry recorded	2,738	2,608
Emoluments recorded	7,269	7,296
Statements of tonnage published	7	26
Warrants registered	16,376	47,979
Drafts registered	13,852	40,046
Entry of accounts, journal pages	1,709	4,558
Certificates for settlements of accounts	3,494	14,972
Accounts received	14,131	23,538
Division receipts and expenditures:
Ledger headings	1,213	3,305
Entries in ledgers	26,120	66,661
Ledger accounts, loan division	1,500	40,000
Number of employés	37	208
Average salary of each employé	$1,397	$1,176

I submit a table herewith showing the receipts and disbursements of the Government since January 1, 1834. This table also shows the receipts, losses, and ratio of losses per $1,000 to aggregate of receipts.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 19, 1876.

Statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Government from January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1875; exhibiting also the amount of defalcations and the ratio of losses per $1,000 to the aggregate received and disbursed, arranged in periods, as nearly as practicable, of four years each, and also in the periods prior and subsequent to June 30, 1861; prepared under the direction of the Secretary, to accompany his answer to a resolution of the United States Senate, dated February 9, 1876, calling for a detailed statement of balances due from public officers no longer in the public service which have arisen since 1830:

Receipts, losses, and ratio of loss per $1,000 to aggregate of receipts.

Period.	Customs.			Internal revenue.
	Receipts.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Receipts.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.
January 1, 1834, to December 31, 1837	$70,185,498 66	$1,211,566 25	$17 26	$20,519 41	.....	.....
January 1, 1838, to December 31, 1841	67,283,444 08	264,502 94	3 93	9,964 20	.....	.....
January 1, 1842, to June 30, 1845	78,946,436 31	254,939 03	3 23	5,892 71	.....	.....
July 1, 1845, to June 30, 1849	110,564,342 31	7,719 11	06	3,647 26	.....	.....
July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1853	194,957,446 48	215,749 08	1 10	.....	.....	.....
July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1857	245,148,753 03	131,277 05	53	.....	.....	.....
July 1, 1857, to June 30, 1861	184,125,082 85	38,776 03	21	.....	.....	.....
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1865	305,360,453 61	31,261 99	10	356,846,137 30	$423,288 60	$1 18
July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1869	699,977,488 65	254,498 55	36	924,698,401 12	2,126,602 16	2 29
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1873	805,268,591 96	20,935 15	02	572,369,401 98	826,265 67	1 44
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1875	320,271,556 04	3,407 28	01	212,417,278 48	283,195 63	1 33
Total	3,082,089,093 98	2,434,632 46	78	2,066,371,242 46	3,659,352 06	1 77
January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861	951,211,003 72	2,124,529 49	2 23	40,023 58	.....	.....
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875	2,130,878,090 26	310,102 97	14	2,066,331,218 88	3,659,352 06	1 77

Receipts, losses, and ratio of loss per $1,000 to aggregate of receipts—Continued.

Period.	Miscellaneous.			Net total.			Gross total.
	Receipts.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Receipts.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Receipts.*	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.
January 1, 1834, to December 31, 1837	$62,796,953 70	$172,259 16	$2 74	$133,002,971 77	$1,383,825 41	$10 40	$135,995,960 92	$1,383,825 41	$10 17
January 1, 1839, to December 31, 1841	26,832,178 67	127,825 40	4 76	94,125,586 95	392,328 34	4 16	129,948,548 91	392,328 34	3 01
January 1, 1842, to June 30, 1845	8,545,683 07	175,042 36	20 48	87,498,012 09	429,981 39	4 91	116,736,004 87	429,981 39	3 68
July 1, 1845, to June 30, 1849	12,019,158 04	10,390 87	86	122,587,147 61	18,109 98	14	201,857,508 45	18,109 98	08
July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1853	12,624,329 01	60,521 50	4 79	207,581,775 49	276,270 58	1 33	211,908,612 91	276,270 58	1 30
July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1857	37,024,174 86	81,724 73	2 20	282,172,927 89	213,001 78	75	282,179,829 56	213,001 78	75
July 1, 1857, to June 30, 1861	12,838,290 35	155,227 80	12 09	196,963,373 20	194,003 83	98	312,359,679 56	194,003 83	62
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1865	67,251,745 08	53,943 01	80	729,458,335 99	508,493 60	69	4,670,460,137 61	508,493 60	10
July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1869	91,743,064 44	181,621 19	1 97	1,716,418,954 21	2,562,721 90	1 49	4,042,316,438 46	2,562,721 90	63
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1873	79,624,848 56	107,497 86	1 35	1,457,262,842 50	954,698 68	65	2,576,645,585 22	954,698 68	37
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1875	51,273,027 73	35,581,01	69	583,961,862 25	322,183 92	55	1,420,222,298 62	322,183 93	22
Total	462,573,453 51	1,161,634 89	2 51	5,611,033,789 95	7,255,619 41	1 29	14,100,631,205 09	7,255,619 41	51
January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861	172,680,767 70	782,991 82	4 52	1,123,931,795 00	2,907,521 31	2 58	1,390,986,145 18	2,907,521 31	2 09
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875	289,892,685 81	378,643 07	1 30	4,487,101,994 95	4,348,098 10	96	12,709,645,059 91	4,348,098 10	34

* Includes receipts for loans.

Disbursements, losses, and ratio of loss per $1,000 to aggregate disbursements.

Period.	Miscellaneous.			Post-office.
	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.
January 1, 1834, to December 31, 1837	$23,921,077 47	$300,154 05	$12 54	$11,697,884 58	$13,696 31	$1 17
January 1, 1838, to December 31, 1841	25,372,936 06	2,485,356 47	97 95	18,284,961 77	51,809 86	2 83
January 1, 1842, to June 30, 1845	21,535,282 45	4,008,453 22	46 82	18,666,750 20	2,679 46	14
July 1, 1845, to June 30, 1849	32,133,077 73	766,262 44	23 84	16,861,478 41	2,571 24	15
July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1853	68,899,995 00	899,785 74	13 05	26,582,570 74	52,946 20	1 99
July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1857	111,122,107 75	862,084 11	7 75	40,439,110 70	280,128 05	6 92
July 1, 1857, to June 30, 1861	101,502,826 81	814,731 96	8 22	56,957,922 74	172,278 46	3 02
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1865	115,145,844 93	1,111,281 85	9 65	48,779,085 45	93,467 63	1 91
July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1869	201,926,036 61	1,080,156 82	5 34	81,016,286 91	167,236 74	2 06
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1873	248,032,245 27	440,953 04	1 77	104,132,079 69	117,797 60	1 13
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1875	156,212,296 59	317,248 86	2 03	65,737,724 03	34,970 63	53
Total	1,105,803,726 67	10,106,467 56	9 13	489,155,854 82	989,582 38	2 04
January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861	384,487,303 27	7,156,826 99	18 61	189,490,678 74	576,109 78	3 04
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875	721,316,423 40	2,949,640 57	4 08	299,665,176 08	413,472 60	1 38

Period.	War.			Navy.			Indians.			Pensions.
	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.
Jan. 1, 1834, to Dec. 31, 1837	$36,885,422 32	$502,062 83	$13 60	$20,275,832 24	$213,405 94	$10 53	$12,095,456 75	130,256 56	$10 76	$10,873,957 03	$17,906 63	$1 65
Jan. 1, 1838, to Dec. 31, 1841	37,711,097 43	206,873 89	5 48	24,428,848 64	101,256 23	4 14	12,879,740 60	4,215 61	32	10,290,804 48	101,951 64	9 90
Jan. 1, 1842, to June 30, 1845	20,483,584 91	48,359 58	2 35	24,920,331 48	54,291 93	2 17	4,573,354 42	10,585 29	2 31	6,650,769 55	11,553 38	1 74
July 1, 1845, to June 30, 1849	88,500,208 38	747,275 33	8 44	33,550,831 62	115,666 69	3 45	5,084,563 30	11,768 92	2 31	6,112,345 31	71,196 44	11 64
July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1853	40,280,994 32	373,158 05	9 26	36,771,937 67	141,493 87	3 85	11,417,463 40	69,497 61	6 08	8,318,428 22	1,257 41	15
July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1857	62,492,668 32	378,333 37	6 05	50,843,720 68	377,505 68	7 42	11,322,013 17	38,088 97	3 36	5,316,887 56	18,840 51	3 54
July 1, 1857, to June 30, 1861	88,307,575 55	287,516 48	3 25	52,645,998 89	183,510 52	3 49	14,325,403 42	982,417 05	68 58	4,577,393 06	4,649 51	1 01
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1865	2,713,569,422 83	4,241,868 55	1 56	314,223,986 21	1,079,639 44	3 43	13,169,317 75	136,582 62	10 37	23,263,779 07	29,650 45	1 27
July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1869	583,749,510 99	542,547 69	92	120,173,925 90	98,422 02	81	19,135,153 08	73,973 97	3 86	88,810,848 02	94,540 67	1 06
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1873	175,150,962 73	169,900 39	97	85,987,323 86	180,964 68	2 10	25,848,369 29	23,557 44	91	120,676,926 67	230,826 93	1 90
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1875	83,434,573 20	23,742 80	28	52,430,213 69	26,670 77	50	15,077,118 91	2,676 38	17	58,494,630 88	.....	.....
Total	3,930,566,021 03	7,521,638 96	1 91	816,252,950 88	2,572,827 77	3 15	144,927,954 09	1,483,020 42	10 23	343,386,769 85	$82,373 57	1 69
Jan. 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861	374,661,551 28	2,543,579 53	6 79	243,437,501 22	1,187,130 86	4 87	71,697,995 06	1,246,830 01	17 39	52,140,585 21	227,355 52	4 36
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875	3,555,904,460 75	4,978,059 43	1 39	572,815,449 66	1,385,696 91	2 41	73,229,959 03	236,790 41	3 23	291,246,184 64	355,018 05	1 21

Period.	Net total, exclusive of post-office.			Gross total, exclusive of post-office.			Administration.
	Disbursements.	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.	Disbursements.*	Losses.	Loss on $1,000.
January 1, 1834, to December 31, 1837	$104,051,745 81	$1,163,786 01	$11 18	$110,308,325 19	$1,163,786 01	$10 55	Jackson's.
January 1, 1838, to December 31, 1841	110,683,427 21	2,899,653 84	26 19	137,094,438 34	2,899,653 84	21 15	Van Buren's.
January 1, 1842, to June 30, 1845	78,163,322 81	1,133,242 40	14 49	109,187,401 24	1,133,242 40	10 37	Harrison and Tyler's.
July 1, 1845, to June 30, 1849	165,381,026 34	1,712,169 82	10 35	205,194,700 57	1,712,169 82	8 34	Polk's.
July 1, 1849, to June 30, 1853	165,688,818 66	1,485,192 68	8 96	194,370,493 14	1,485,192 68	7 64	Taylor and Fillmore's.
July 1, 1853, to June 30, 1857	241,007,397 48	1,674,852 64	6 94	285,638,875 65	1,674,852 64	5 86	Pierce's.
July 1, 1857, to June 30, 1861	261,359,197 73	2,292,825 52	8 77	328,183,268 39	2,292,825 52	6 98	Buchanan's.
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1865	3,179,372,350 79	6,599,022 91	2 07	4,667,457,921 22	6,599,022 91	1 41	Lincoln and Johnson's.
July 1, 1865, to June 30, 1869	1,013,795,474 60	1,889,641 17	1 86	3,891,576,259 10	1,889,641 17	48
July 1, 1869, to June 30, 1873	655,695,827 82	1,046,202 48	1 59	2,601,158,569 90	1,046,202 48	40	Grant's.
July 1, 1873, to June 30, 1875	365,648,883 27	370,338 81	1 01	1,406,699,819 31	370,338 81	26
Total	6,340,937,422 52	22,266,928 28	3 51	13,936,870,072 05	22,266,928 28	1 59
January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861	1,126,424,936 04	12,361,722 91	10 97	1,369,977,502 52	12,361,722 91	9 02
July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875	5,214,512,486 48	9,905,205 37	1 89	12,566,892,569 53	9,905,205 37	78

* Includes expenditures for public debt.

POSTAL MONEY-ORDERS.—Amount involved to June 30, 1875, $389,718,785.38; loss, $156,818.42; loss per $1,000, forty cents.

NOTES TO PRECEDING TABLES.

1. In cases where the accounts of defaulting officers embraced more than one period the losses, unless known to have occurred in other periods, have been charged to the periods in which the accounts were opened in this Department. In cases of defaulting banks, however, for want of other information, the losses have been charged to the periods in which they are reported on the books, though doubtless in several instances they actually occurred in previous periods. No losses of the latter kind, however, have been included unless known to have occurred within the period covered by this statement.

2. No deductions have been made for amounts which may be collected hereafter, though a large percentage of the recent losses will doubtless be yet recovered.

3. In preparing this statement the receipts and disbursements since June 30, 1843, have been classified by fiscal years as in the published official reports; the losses have in all cases been classified by calendar years, it not being practicable to separate the losses occurring in the fractional years of each period, but the periods compared being of the same length the result is substantially correct.

From customs receipts the loss during Jackson's time from 1834 to 1837 on $1,000 was $17.26; in Van Buren's time, $3.93; in Grant's administration, two cents loss on each $1,000.

From January 1, 1834, to June 30, 1861, the losses to the $1,000 was $2.23 per $1,000; from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1875, during republican administrations, fourteen cents per $1,000. The internal-revenue system did not exist during democratic administrations. The losses per $1,000 of receipts have been $1.70; from miscellaneous sources during Jackson's term, $2.75 per $1,000; during Van Buren's service, $4.76 per $1,000; during Buchanan's time, $12.09; and now, General Grant's term, sixty-nine cents per $1,000! The average losses during democratic administrations, $4.53 per thousand; in republican administration, $1.30 per thousand.

On the total receipts from all sources the loss during democratic administrations was $2.09; during republican administrations, thirty-four cents. Now take the disbursements, the losses, and ratio of loss per $1,000. In the War Department during good old democratic times—General Jackson's term—the losses were $13.60; during Van Buren's term, $5.48; during Polk's four years as President, $8.44; during Pierce's term, $6.05; during Buchanan's term, $3.25; during Grant's administration, twenty-five cents. The total losses on disbursements of offices belonging to the War Department in democratic times, from 1834 to 1861, was $6.79 per thousand; total losses from 1861 to 1875, $1.39 per $1,000.

In the Navy Department, in the disbursements the losses during Jackson's term per $1,000 were $10.53; in Pierce's term, $7.42; during Buchanan's term, $3.49; during General Grant's term, fifty cents per $1,000. Total democratic, $4.87; total republican, $2.41. Indian Bureau: Here our democratic friends have so much to say about extravagance that this table will be read with interest. The losses during Jackson's administration per $1,000 were $10.76; in Buchanan's time, $68.58 per $1,000. (I suppose these were the reform times that our democratic friends desire to bring us back to;) during Grant's time, seventeen cents per $1,000. The total loss in democratic times, $17.39 per $1,000; during republican administrations, $3.23 per $1,000.

Losses on account of pensions during democratic administrations, $4.36 per $1,000; during republican administrations, $1.21 per $1,000.

In the Post-Office Department during democratic administrations, losses on each $1,000 were $3.04; during republican administrations, $1.38. From miscellaneous sources, losses in democratic times was $18.61 per $1,000 as against $4.08 in republican times. The total losses per $1,000 on disbursements from all sources from 1834 to 1861 during democratic administrations was $9.02, while during republican times it was only seventy-eight cents per $1,000. And it may be added here that the losses during republican administrations are recent, and it is estimated at the Departments that 25 per cent. of what is put down as losses recently will finally be recovered, so that actually the losses during republican administrations will be probably 25 per cent. less than the figures here given.

When the republicans came into power it was found that looseness and disorder in all the departments of Government were the rule and order and care were the exception.

Congress was in the habit of making appropriations in gross and in indefinite sums. The Departments were permitted the widest range and discretion.

Under republican rule all appropriations were made in the greatest possible detail and in specific sums, leaving little or nothing to the discretion of the officers of the Government.

Now the conditions that obtained in democratic times are reversed, and we find order, care, and integrity the rule, and looseness and disorder the exception.

As a sample of the way things were done in old times, I give the following:

On pages 257 and 262, finance report for 1854, in the report of Special Agent Gouge, of November 27, 1854, will be found statements showing the careful method in which public moneys were kept in the better days of the Republic, and the unique, economic method by which transfers of such moneys were made in those days.

Mr. Minor, who undertook to transfer the $100,000 from New York to New Orleans, as far as known to the Department, has not yet reached his destination.

The amount appears on the list of defaulters sent the House by the Treasury Department, charged against the City Bank of Columbus, Ohio.

This is but a sample of hundreds of others that are shown on the books of the Treasury Department and in the report sent to the House.

The system of checks and balances, instituted since the republican party came into power, renders such a transaction impossible.

The burden of the democratic song is now the cry of corruption. I admit there is corruption in Government officers; I do not expect it to be otherwise as long as human nature is what it is.

To the charge of extravagance and corruption against the Administration so often made, I desire to say that in the discharge of my duty as a member of the Appropriation Committee I have had occasion to meet many of the officers directly in charge of the expenditures of the appropriations made by Congress.

It affords me pleasure to say that they are a superior body of men in all that pertains to genuine manhood, and they will rank in intelligence and honesty and in an honest discharge of duty with any private employment in this or any other country; while private employers pay for similar service greater salaries than these men can possibly receive. It therefore is a duty and a pleasure to say this for a class of men who are constantly maligned by the opposition for the sole purpose of making party capital. There are, possibly, among these men, here and there, one who is wanting in official integrity. It is expecting too much of human nature not to find it so, as the reign of democracy for a period of a quarter of a century conclusively proves. Investigation shows that the average of this class was far greater in numbers and costs to the Government under democratic than during republican rule.

I make the statement deliberately that, in my judgment and in the judgment of all candid men having knowledge of the subject, never in the history of the country was there as much capacity and integrity exhibited by the officers in charge of the administration of the Government as there is to-day. In making this statement I make full allowance for all the disclosures made by the committees of investigation this session. My opportunity for knowing these officials has been that of an actual, personal contact with and knowledge of them such as is enjoyed by but few of the public men of the country.

I do not believe that any of the walks of society can show an equal number of men more capable, more honest, and more deserving in all respects than these men.

As an illustration of the loose manner in which the House conducts its business, I will refer to one case as a sample. A democratic member offered a resolution calling for a list of the names, places of residence, and number of shares held by each of the stockholders of the national banks, the object being to obtain the names of members of Congress who were shareholders. To answer this request it required fifty-two months of the labor of the clerks, equal to the labor of one clerk for four and a half years. The cost of answering this resolution, including the labor, stationery, and printing, was about $20,000.

This House has utterly failed to act on a proposition of the Secretary of the Treasury, agreed to by the republican Senate six months ago, relating to the refunding of the 6 per cent. bonds into a bond bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent., thereby saving to the country the sum of five millions annually in the payment of interest. If the House had acted promptly on this matter, by this time the refunding would probably have been an accomplished fact and the sum named above saved annually to the people.

There are lying in the committee-rooms of this House bills unacted upon, introduced by gentlemen from the South, aggregating a sum of not less than $2,000,000,000, to be warmed into actual, real life by the success of Tilden and Hendricks.

Not acted on this session; why? Because if pressed now they would injure the prospects of democratic success.

Another of the reform movements of this House was the passage of the following proviso to one of the clauses of the sundry civil bill:

Provided, That all of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the registration of voters and the appointment of supervisors of elections, and deputy and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections are hereby repealed.

It will be seen that the repeal would remove all restraint against dishonest voting in the great cities of the country as well as in the States where the rights of the colored men to vote are flagrantly interfered with. With this law repealed, Tammany Hall and John Morrissey could give Tilden so large a majority as to overcome the honest vote of the State, as was done in 1868, when General Grant and John A. Griswold were cheated out of the vote of the State, and that, too, under the management of the present democratic candidate for President. I make this statement on the authority of the last democratic candidate for the Presidency.

I put with it the circular letter sent to the faithful all over the State; the compliance with the suggestions therein contained enabled the present democratic candidate for the Presidency, the then chairman of the democratic State committee, to (by withholding the announcement of the count in the city of New York until he heard from the State) count enough votes in the city to give the State to Seymour and Hoffman:

[Private and strictly confidential.]

ROOMS OF DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE.
October 27, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Please at once to communicate with some reliable person in three or four principal towns and in each city of your county, and request him (expenses duly arranged for this end) to telegraph to William M. Tweed, Tammany Hall, at the minute of closing the polls, not waiting for the count, such person's estimate of the vote.

Let the telegraph be as follows:

"This town will show a democratic gain (or loss) over last year of (number.") Or this one, if sufficiently certain: "This town will give a republican (or democratic) majority of ——."

There is, of course, an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, but not longer waiting. Opportunity can be taken of the usual half-hour lull in the telegraphic communications over lines before actual results begin to be declared, and before the Associated Press absorb the telegraph with returns and interfere with individual messages; and give orders to watch carefully the count.

Very truly, yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN, Chairman.

I submit that this gentleman will make an excellent reform candidate for the democracy.

As a further proof of the reform qualities of this model reformer, the democratic candidate for the Presidency, I append here a letter from the last democratic candidate for the Presidency, a witness who certainly will not be impeached.

In the New York Tribune of November 9, 1869, Mr. Greeley, in a second letter to Samuel J. Tilden, chairman of the democratic State committee, arraigns Tilden for his complicity in this gigantic villainy and holds him to a just accountability. In this letter Mr. Greeley reviews the labors of the constitutional convention of 1867; the defeat of the results of its labors, the "reform constitution," by the great champion of reform, Samuel J. Tilden, at the election of 1869; the defeat of a fair registration and the means of purging the ballot-box of its notoriously infamous frauds, and of securing to the people and State a fair election. Mr. Greeley reviews all in detail in the light of incontrovertible facts, and says:

But while honesty and law act spasmodically, villainy ever sleeps with one eye open, and plans new and more subtle devices for circumventing justice and overthrowing right. Had no illegal vote been polled in this city and Brooklyn, General Franz Siegel would now be our secretary-elect, as Grant, in the absence of fraud, would have received the electoral vote of our State by more than 20,000 majority. Let me multiply demonstrations on this point: Since your party pretends to believe our last State census erroneous and imperfect, I put that aside and appeal to official returns whereof no one can even affect to doubt the accuracy. Here follows the number of deaths in several of the lower wards of our city, where your party has swelled its vote so monstrously in the past two or three elections:

Number of deaths in the lower wards.

Wards.	1855.	1858.	1859.	1861.	1862.	1864.	1868.
Fourth	844	934	817	781	768	838	649
Sixth	1,142	874	933	1,054	928	970	697
Seventh	1,189	1,134	1,040	1,017	1,018	1,156	1,103
Fourteenth	776	913	858	806	798	1,006	736
Total	3,951	3,855	3,648	3,658	3,512	3,970	3,185

Now, Mr. Tilden, you know that those wards have not increased in aggregate population since 1855. People who live packed up in tenement houses fronting the narrowest, crookedest, worst smelling streets of our city die at least as fast as those who live in more cleanly, airy, and commodious quarters; and the increase or diminution of the population of these wards is accurately reflected in their annual return of deaths. Now look at their total vote at our several presidential elections since 1855 and at our State elections last week:

Wards.	1856.	1860.	1864.	1868.	1869.
Fourth	2,689	2,535	2,820	4,310	3,865
Sixth	2,880	2,924	3,781	5,401	6,274
Seventh	4,454	4,800	5,259	8,160	5,864
Fourteenth	3,218	3,578	5,000	5,252	4,214
Total	13,241	13,837	16,920	23,123	20,037

You know what these figures prove as well as I do. You know that every vote was drawn out that could be in the intensely contested election of 1860, and that not a few were then polled which had no right to be. You know that the population of these wards has not increased, yet they polled over 9,000 more in 1868 than they did in 1860, and over 6 000 more in 1869, when the sixth ward cast 873 more than her monstrous vote of last year, and considerably more than double her vote in 1860 or 1864.

I do not instance these cases as worse than others. Probably none of them are so bad as that of the twenty-first ward, where your sheriff bears sway. But the twenty-first is a growing ward; so I confine myself to those which the bills of mortality clearly show to be less populous to-day than they were when their aggregate vote was but 13,241 against the 23,232 they rolled up for Hoffman last fall.

Mr. Tilden, you have confederates who will chuckle over this exposé, as showing that "the democrats know how," and that they can never be driven from power. "What if the public judgment condemns us? Let our repeaters vote twice more all round, and we'll come out all right." But I believe in God, and feel a profound conviction that the fruits of triumph thus achieved will turn to ashes on the lips of the victors. I believe you will yet realize that an honest defeat would have been more advantageous to you in the long run than either of your fraudulent victories.

I will print here a table showing the reduced cost of Government expenditures year by year since 1866, which conclusively shows the general good management of the Administration. A constant decrease of expenses is shown in all Departments of Government except the Post-Office Department.

In making these reductions the number of clerks has been reduced in the Departments at Washington to the number of twenty-five hundred and to the number of five thousand men throughout the entire country. The Post-Office Department of course shows an annual increase in proportion to the growth of the country.

REDUCTION OF PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

The following table shows the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal years from 1865 to 1876, inclusive, with the reduction each year from 1865:

1865	$1,297,555,224 41	maximum.
1866	520,809,416 99	reduction	$776,745,807 42
1867	357,542,675 16	reduction	163,266,741 83
1868	377,340,284 86	increase	19,797,609 70
1869	322,865,277 80	reduction	54,475,007 06
1870	309,653,560 75	reduction	13,211,717 05
1871	292,177,188 25	reduction	17,476,372 50
1872	277,517,962 67	reduction	14,659,225 58
1873	290,345,245 33	increase	12,827,282 66
1874	287,133,873 17	reduction	3,211,372 16
1875	274,623,392 84	reduction	12,510,480 33
1876	258,500,000 00	reduction	16,123,302 84

While this constant reduction was going on Congress gradually reduced taxation, making the reduction of expenses and the reduction of taxation go hand in hand. Our present pretended reformers pretend to large reduction of expenses, but are not willing to reduce taxes.

This illustrates the difference between the policies of the two parties now contending for supremacy.

The following table shows the dates of the acts of Congress reducing taxes and of the amount of the annual reduction:

REDUCTION OF TAXES BY ACTS OF CONGRESS.

The following exhibits the estimated reduction of annual internal taxation and customs duties under the laws mentioned:

Act of July 13, 1866	$65,000,000 00
Act of March 2, 1867	40,000,000 00
Act of February 3, 1868	23,000,000 00
Acts of March 1 and July 20, 1868	45,000,000 00
Act of July 14, 1870	78,848,827 33
Acts of May 1 and June 6, 1872	51,823,761 38

Time will not permit me to go further into details.

The great republican party, besides saving the Republic whose destruction was sought not only by the rebellion but by all the crowned heads of the world, (save the Czar of Russia,) has shown itself capable of adjusting the delicate task of reconstruction, and to-day, but eleven years since the close of the war, every State is fully represented on this floor.

This great party has given freedom and citizenship to all its people. Every one of its great fundamental principles form a part of the Constitution and are the accepted principles of all parties. As a practical business-like party it has reduced the per capita expenses (less war expenses) twenty-five cents below what it was when it assumed governmental power.

Since this party assumed control it has reduced the average annual cost of clerks by the sum of $175 each and they do 50 per cent. more work.

The losses on the collections and disbursements of the public funds have greatly decreased.

The system of checks and balances in the keeping governmental accounts is vastly improved.

The character and capacity of Government officials are greatly bettered.

The Government credit which stood at 12 per cent. interest on its loans is now reduced to 4½ per cent.

It has gradually year by year since the war reduced expenses and taxation.

It has paid nearly $600,000,000 of the public debt in the last eleven years.

It has provided for every obligation of the Government, including the sinking fund.

It has reduced the annual interest burden by $45,000,000. It has pensioned the brave soldiers who fought to save the country.

It may not at all times have done the wisest thing, and some of its officials have been dishonest and corrupt.

But it has a glorious record, one that causes its adherents to rejoice and be glad that they share its glories.

To put against this party, the democracy propose economy and reform, when they have not shown a single characteristic that entitles them to the appellation of reformers. Under this cry they will try to have the people forget that the complete fruition of reconstruction is not yet an accomplished fact.

They want us to forget that democratic success means the practical loss of the rights of citizenship to the colored people of the South. With democratic success these rights will exist only in name.

They want the people to forget that hundreds of millions of war claims are to be paid, dependent upon their success.

They want the people to forget the many schemes of southern plunder that will be accomplished facts with their ascendency.

The people who saved the Republic are ever watchful and alert. They who have sacrificed so much to make the old flag an emblem of freedom and glory will not trust gentlemen with power who sought to trail it in the dust and substitute in its place the stars and bars, until they manifest a spirit that will assure them that the great principles fought for and won are secure in their hands.

The spectacle of a people turning over the destinies of a great country to the very men who sought to destroy it will not be witnessed for four years to come at least.

The following statement shows reductions and postponements finally agreed upon by both Houses:

Statement showing the reduction and postponements of appropriations as finally agreed upon.

Pension		$466,500 00
Military Academy		74,675 00
Consular and diplomatic		216,405 50
Fortification		535,000 00
Legislative		4,528,276 99
River and harbor		1,643,517 50
Deficiencies		3,886,975 62
Post-office		2,408,707 00
Naval		4,260,651 00
Indian		690,437 53
Army		1,946,662 10
Sundry civil		10,286,444 62
		29,944,352 86
Deduct deficiency		3,886,975 62
		26,057,377 24
Deduct Court of Claims	$2,000,000 00
Indefinite for assay office	500,000 00
Indefinite	500,000 00
		3,000,000 00
		23,057,377 24
Deduct also—
Centennial	$1,500,000 00
Washington Monument	200,000 00
Pennsylvania avenue	200,000 00
Fortifications	200,000 00
New York post-office	227,000 00
Agricultural Reports	130,000 00
		2,457,000 00
Actual reduction and postponement		20,600,377 24

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker, in the time granted to me I shall not be able to elaborate any of the points upon which I propose to touch. But I cannot resist the temptation which the opportunity affords to me of indulging in a few remarks upon the testimony taken by the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department. And the temptation is greatly enhanced when I consider some of the speeches made upon the opposite side of this Hall, comparing the corruption and stealing of the present Administration with the democratic Administrations before the war and with the management of the present House of Representatives, notably the speeches delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] and the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

The first case of improper conduct (which out in the country where I was raised would be called stealing, but which, I suppose, out of deference to the custom which has grown up of late years I must call "an irregularity") is the case of Parkman & Brooks; and that I may do no injustice I will give you a brief statement of the case in the language of Mr. Wilson, the Solicitor of the Treasury, as contained in an official letter to Secretary Bristow, bearing date December 31, 1874. The letter of the Solicitor is printed in full, commencing on page 79 of the statements and letters relative to captured and abandoned property. The extract which I wish to read is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., December 31, 1874.

SIR: * * * It appears that in the year 1865, George L. Carleton, then United States depositary and acting surveyor of customs at Memphis, Tennessee, issued to J. W. Page, jr., president of the Commercial Bank at that place, certificates of deposit on account of subscriptions to 7.30 Government bonds to the amount of $556,945, taking therefor, instead of money, Page's individual checks.

It is alleged by Page, and the evidence tends to show, that neither the bank nor himself received any advantage from these transactions other than the difference of exchange, but that the proceeds of the sales of these bonds were all placed, as soon as received, to the credit of Parkman, Brooks & Co., and drawn out by them.

In May, 1875, the checks of Page, thus held by Carleton, were given up by him, and canceled at the solicitation of Page, on the ground that Parkman & Brooks had received the proceeds of the bonds, Carleton receiving in their place from Page the checks of Parkman, Brooks & Co. of like date and amount.

The evidence shows, however, that the checks of Parkman, Brooks & Co. were obtained by Page in April, 1865, in their absence from Memphis, from a Mr. Learned, who was claimed to be their partner, and who was authorized to draw checks in the firm-name in the ordinary course of business, and who also was accustomed to sign as partner the name of the firm.

In May, 1865, Parkman, Brooks & Co. denied the authority of Learned to sign their name to checks.

In this state of affairs the Secretary of the Treasury sent a special agent to investigate the matter. From his report it appears that Parkman, Brooks & Co. acknowledge themselves indebted to the Commercial Bank and were willing to assume and secure, as best they could, $201,603.12 of the checks held by Carleton on being discharged by the bank.

Acting upon the conclusion that the proposal of Parkman & Brooks was the best on the facts that could be had, the agent of the Treasury obtained from them, on settlement of the checks held by Carleton, five notes aggregating $201,003.12, four of them dated August 14, 1865, and one August 16, 1865.

The agent, however, did an unauthorized act himself in this matter which he was investigating. He made at the same time—August 14, 1865—in behalf of the United States, a contract with F. W. Brooks, one of the firm of Parkman, Brooks & Co., for collecting and delivering to Treasury agents certain lots of confiscable cotton and property.

The contract was made, as is alleged by the agent, for the purpose of securing the payment of Parkman & Brooks's note.

By its terms the share of Brooks in the proceeds of property delivered over and above actual expenses was to be applied to the payment of four of Parkman & Brooks's notes, amounting to $150,000. Brooks understood when the contract was made that it was subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but, without waiting for this approval, agreed, in writing, to this application of the proceeds, and proceeded to collect the property.

The Secretary, however, refused to ratify the contrac and Brooks was notified that it terminated on the 20th of August, 1865.

In the mean time Brooks claimed that he had collected six hundred and forty-four bales of cotton under the contract, and made a claim therefor, which, on the 30th of April, 1866, evidently with some hesitation, the Secretary of the Treasury decided to allow to the extent of one quarter of the six hundred and forty-four bales in full, and to credit the amount allowed upon the notes given by Parkman & Brooks.

This credit, amounting in the whole to $24,315.75, was accordingly indorsed upon the note of $94,000, namely, May 18, 1866, $21,112.55, and June 25, 1866, $3,203.20.

This is all the money ever awarded to Parkman & Brooks by the Treasury Department for cotton collected under the Risley contract, as appears by the records.

They were allowed, however, another sum, amounting to $33,297.28, the history of which is as follows: Some time in May, 1865, a claim was made by one A. K. Shepard and Parkman & Brooks for the proceeds of 19,700 bales of cotton collected by the agents of the Treasury, on the grounds that the claimants had purchased it under proper authority from the confederate government for delivery to the Treasury Department.

The Secretary declining to consider the claim thus presented, the parties then made a claim for salvage, alleging that, having acquired an interest in the cotton, they had, through their influence with the military authorities of both armies and by the expenditure of money and personal attention, saved the same from loss and damage.

In this form the Secretary decided to allow $157,944.66, dividing this sum into three drafts, for the purpose of keeping the interest of Parkman & Brooks, which was 40 per cent., amounting to $33,297.28, separate, for the reason that at the same time he determined to apportion the share of that firm in part payment of the indebtedness due from them to the United States on their five notes.

This application was made with the knowledge and consent of Parkman & Brooks and their attorney, and the amount was afterward sent to the Treasurer of the United States, and, in point of fact, credited to the indebtedness of Carleton, which was the same thing, for what was paid on the notes of Parkman & Brooks would liquidate to that extent the indebtedness of Carleton.

Parkman & Brooks, not having paid the balance due on their notes, they were afterward, namely, June 25, 1869, put in suit by the United States attorney at Memphis, Tennessee, which suit was pending until May, 1874, when it was dismissed by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The reason of the dismissal was as follows: On the 13th of December, 1873, one P. D. Roddy made an application to the Secretary of the Treasury for the $33,297.28, the history and the disposition of which I have just related, on the ground that this sum had been adjudged to Parkman & Brooks in settlement of what was known as the Shepard case, and that the interest of Parkman & Brooks in this case and in other cotton and confederate property reported by Brooks under the Risley contract had been assigned to him previous to the settlement.

It will be observed that in the first settlement with Carleton, the defaulting agent of the United States, the special agent sent to settle said claim sacrified more than one-half of the entire claim; the original claim being $556,945, and the agent accepting the notes of Parkman & Brooks for $201,003.12 on their admission that they were indebted to the Commercial Bank in that amount. During the years of 1865 and 1866 Parkman & Brooks, it will be observed, had by their dealing with the Government obtained credit upon said notes to the amount of $57,613.03, up to this time at least not claiming that they had any defense to said notes. And thus the matter runs along until 1869, when the balance due on said notes not having been paid, they were put in suit, so says the Solicitor of the Treasury; and said suits were permitted to drag along until May, 1874, when they were dismissed by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, as will be seen by examining the following letters. I read first the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on page 74 of the document to which I have referred:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
February 20, 1874.

SIR: It having been decided by the proper accounting officer of this Department that certain notes executed by Parkman, Brooks & Co., now in your possession, "are invalid and impose no obligation on the makers," I have to request that they may be returned to this office, and that any suits now pending in relation to said notes may be discontinued.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Hon. E. C. BANFIELD,
Solicitor of the Treasury.

I shall examine hereafter who this "proper accounting officer" of the Treasury was to whom reference is made in this letter.

I now read the letter of Mr. Banfield, the then Solicitor of the Treasury, from the same page, and it will be observed that Mr. Banfield, the law officer of that Department, did not concur with the Secretary's "proper accounting-officer" of the Treasury.

It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1874.

SIR: It has been decided by the Treasury Department that the notes of Parkman, Brooks & Co., upon which suits are pending in your district, are invalid and impose no obligation on the makers.

While I cannot agree with the decision reached by the Department in this regard, I am constrained by the terms of the Secretary's letter to me, a copy of which I inclose, to ask you to comply with the request therein contained.

Very respectfully,

E. C. BANFIELD,
Solicitor of the Treasury.

W. W. MURRAY, Esq.,
United States Attorney, Memphis, Tennessee.

Now how was this decision arrived at, and what was the occasion for it? I will explain. On the 13th of December, 1873, one P. D. Roddy filed a petition in the Treasury Department, claiming to be the owner of the interest of Parkman & Brooks, and also claiming that the original notes were void and created no obligation on the part of said firm of Parkman & Brooks, and asking the Department to pay to him the amounts which had been credited upon said notes. This petition it will be observed was filed more than seven years after the date of the credits upon said notes; and I might say right here, as I go along, by a party who was before or about the same time mixed up with this same Brooks, of the firm of Parkman & Brooks, in a disreputable swindle of the Treasury Department with a certain seallock, with which they swindled the Government out of thousands and thousands of dollars, and therefore the Secretary of the Treasury should have been upon his guard, unless he was a party to the steal, for I can call it nothing less. This petition was referred to Mr. Solicitor Banfield, the only person who, in the language of the Secretary, could be called "the proper accounting officer of the Department," to give an opinion upon such a subject. Mr. Banfield gave the matter his attention and had prepared a letter giving in full his reasons for deciding against Mr. Roddy's claim, but which had not yet been forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury, when on the 28th of January, 1874, he received the following polite note from Mr. Sawyer, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury:

MR. BANFIELD:

Please return the Roddy claim and papers, and oblige yours, very truly,
F. A. SAWYER.

Now, why was this claim taken out of the hands of Mr. Banfield just at that time? Plainly for the reason that it had been discovered that he was going to decide against it. There can be and there is no other reason given for the act.

It was no sooner taken out of his hands than it was referred to a Mr. William T. Haines, the Commissioner of Customs, whom the Secretary designates as "the proper accounting officer of the Department." The only reason which I can see from the testimony why he should be called that is that he had his mind made up to allow the claim before it was referred to him, as I think the testimony which I shall quote hereafter will abundantly prove; but on this particular point I desire now to read from the testimony of Mr. Joseph Burr, an employé of the Treasury Department at this time. He said:

Question. Please state to the committee, if you can, who was the proper accounting officer to pass upon the validity of these notes?

Answer. There is no accounting officer that has that power.

Q. Do you know, in fact, what officer it was that assumed to have that authority and power?

A. I know who it was that reported that they were invalid.

Q. State to the committee who it was.

A. It was William T. Haines.

Q. What was his position?

A. Commissioner of Customs.

I have read from page 38 of the testimony taken by said committee, which I think shows very satisfactorily that the reference of this matter to Haines was a mere arbitrary exercise of power on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it might as well have been referred, so far as the propriety of the thing is concerned, to any other officer of the Treasury. The motive which actuated the Secretary, then, must be looked for somewhere else than in the propriety of referring it to this officer. I think, however, before I get through I shall be able to show from the testimony, in the most conclusive manner, just the motive actuating all of the parties to this most infamous transaction. I read from the testimony of Mr. Gough, at present a clerk in the Department, pages 15 and 16:

Question. Do you know anything about the cotton claim of Parkman, Brooks & Co., and about the manner in which it was paid, the amount of it, and the persons at whose instance it was paid?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. State now to the committee, without the necessity of more particular inquiry, all you know in reference to that matter.

A. I think it was in January, 1874, W. T. Haines, who was then Commissioner of Customs, sent for me and requested me to withdraw from the files the account of George N. Carleton, who was surveyor and special agent at Memphis, Tennessee. I find the record shows that I went down that day and withdrew the account myself, and took it to Mr. Haines. He then asked me for a receipt and papers given by H. A. Risley in the Parkman, Brooks & Co. case. Mr. Barstow, who was a clerk in the office, was in there with Mr. Haines. I found the papers, and handed them over to him, and he said that was all he wanted of me, and I left. During that week I saw this Frank Brooks and Mr. Barstow and Mr. Haines together, and I had been informed by Mr. Noerr that Parkman, Brooks & Co. were after that claim again; knowing the case to have been brought up some years previous, and that it had been allowed these parties, the same claim, but the money was not to be paid to them, but to be applied to notes held by the Government in the hands of the Solicitor of the Treasury, upon which this money was to be applied to their credit. On the 9th day of February, 1874, Mr. Lockwood, who was then chief clerk, came into my room and laid down in front of me the claim of Parkman, Brooks & Co., and requested me to examine and pass the account and enter it on my book. I told Mr. Lockwood that I would enter it on my book, but I would not examine it and pass it. In that case it required my signature, and I declined to do it. He asked me why. I gave him my reasons; I told him I thought it was a bogus claim, and I believed the claim had been paid once before. Mr. Lockwood replied, "It is ordered by the Secretary, and the Assistant Secretary, and the Commissioner of Customs; what are we to do about it?" I said, "I don't care anything about it. I will enter it on my book, but I will not examine and pass it." I entered it on my book, and passed the account in to Mr. Lockwood. Mr. Barstow was standing alongside of me at the time that I replied to Mr. Lockwood that whoever examined and passed that account should put his name to it, as I was in charge of that branch and it would reflect on me. Mr. Barstow spoke up and asked me why I didn't do it. My reply was, "Not by a damned sight. You do it if you are not ashamed of it." I left the office and went back to my desk. Mr. Mahon, the First Auditor, came in shortly after and asked me what I did with the account. Says I, "I took it in to Mr. Lockwood. I got through with it." He said he was sorry; he wished he had got hold of it. Says I, "He has got it; you can get it there." That was a claim for $30,000 and odd, and that was on the 9th day of February.

Q. What year?

A. Eighteen hundred and seventy-four; and I noticed, as I opened the account to enter it, that the warrant had been drawn on the 7th, two days before the account was brought in.

Q. Signed by whom?

A. Signed by W. T. Haines, but not signed by any other clerk as having examined and passed it, and I being in charge of that branch, I didn't like it: I thought at some future day the case might be brought up and the question asked who was in charge of that.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. The warrant was dated the 7th?

A. The warrant was dated on the 7th of February, and the account was brought in to me to be examined and passed and entered on my book on the 9th, two days afterward.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Proceed now with the history of the case.

A. About a week after that Mr. Lockwood came in and laid down on my desk another account of Parkman, Brooks & Co. I didn't know that was going through. I immediately got up from my desk and told Mr. Lockwood that I would neither examine nor pass that account, nor enter it on my book. Says I, "There is the book; you can enter it yourself." And it is entered in Mr. Lockwood's handwriting.

Q. It is entered?

A. Yes, sir; it is the only case in the book that is entered by Mr. Lockwood, or any one else but myself. I declined even to enter that account.

Q. Lockwood held what position?

A. He was then chief clerk.

Q. What was the amount of this last claim?

Q. Twenty-four thousand dollars and odd. The first was $33,000 and some odd, and I think the next was $24,000; or it may have been vice versa; I have forgotten now which. Those are about the two amounts.

Q. Any further facts within your knowlege about that matter?

A. No, sir; not that I know of, of my own knowledge.

By Mr. WILSON:

Q. What position did you say Lockwood held?

A. He was then chief clerk.

Q. Chief clerk of what?

A. Of the Commissioner of Customs.

Q. And he is now what?

A. Deputy commissioner of customs. Mr. Lockwood was working under the instructions of the Commissioner. He could not do otherwise.

Q. Under the instructions of Mr. Haines?

A. Yes, sir. He was authorized to do what he did; he could not help himself.

Q. Was he aware of the nature of the claim?

A. I presume he was, but his reply was that the Secretary had ordered it; the Secretary and Assistant Secretary had ordered it.

Q. The Secretary of the Treasury?

A. Yes, sir; it was approved by Richardson.

Q. And the assistant had ordered it?

A. F. A. Sawyer, the Assistant Secretary, and also the Commissioner of Customs; so he had no one to go to.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. Could he not have done what you did, and said he could not enter it?

A. I presume he could.

Q. He was not any more bound to do it, was he, than you?

A. I don't know as he was. Neither one of the accounts were signed by any clerk.

By Mr. WILSON:

Q. The entry of it in your book was not necessary to the payment of it?

A. Not necessary to the payment; only recording.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have been speaking now of the manner and mode in which the Parkman, Brooks & Co. claim was passed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q Do you know anything about a claim which was made as against this fund of captured and abandoned property in 1866 by Shepherd, Parkman & Co.?

A. That is pretty much the same thing—the same identical amounts. That is what I said in the first place; the claim had previously been allowed these parties.

Q. I observe in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury that on the 11th of December, 1866, Shepherd, Parkman & Co. were allowed $157,444.66. What relation do these parties mentioned in this account bear to the firm of Parkman, Brooks & Co.?

A. Shepherd, Parkman & Co. and Parkman, Brooks & Co. are the same concern.

Q. This amount, then, had been allowed in 1866?

A. Yes, sir; I had forgotten the figures. What is the total of these two amounts, $24,000 and odd and $33,000? I didn't give you the exact amount. Will they amount to the same thing?

Q. No; this is $157,000.

A. That is a different case altogether, then. I have got a requisition-book of requisitions drawn on H. A. Risley and also on F. E. Spinner. Those amounts will all be found in those requisition-books.

Q. You know nothing of this particular claim, then, to which I call your attention?

A. I cannot explain it now. These two claims of Parkman, Brooks & Co. were ordered to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, I think, seven or eight years ago, to be applied to their credit on notes held by the Treasury Department against Parkman, Brooks & Co., in the hands of the Solicitor of the Treasury. That is as I understand it.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. And you understand that those credits were so put there?

A. Yes, sir; and it is upon that ground that I objected to having anything to do with this claim.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Notwithstanding that objection, these claims were allowed and the money paid again to these parties?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. WILSON:

Q. Have you reason to believe now that those officers who ordered this payment were aware of the identical amounts having been credited on those notes held by the Solicitor of the Treasury previously?

A. I think that W. T. Haines knew all about it.

Q. You are not positive about the other officers of the Treasury knowing it?

A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you not, though, state as one of your objections to passing upon the claim and allowing it, and did you not in refusing even to enter it on the second occasion when it was presented, say to the officer who insisted upon its being entered that you would not enter it because you knew that it had been previously allowed?

A. Yes, sir; he asked me to give a statement of the particulars of the case, and I did so. In the records—I don't know where they are—but in this book there is a letter written by me, in lead pencil, with my signature to it, giving the particulars of this case, and I gave that to Mr. Lockwood. The last I saw of it the grand jury had it, and they asked me if it was my writing, and I told them it was.

The method of manipulating clerks and working up a job will be pretty well developed by a careful examination of the extracts which I have read. And let me say here that the clerks in the Department are not apt to tell more than they know to be true, especially where it reflects in the least upon their superiors. I know the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] reflected severely upon the character of the witnesses who testified before our investigating committees, but you will observe thus far I have only alluded to witnesses who are at present in good standing in the Treasury Department with the exception of Mr. Banfield and Mr. Wilson, and as to them I have only referred to their official communication while in office. So that even as to them the term "sore-head" does not apply. You will see by this extract the anxiety exhibited by Mr. Haines to get possession of the papers pertaining to this matter, an anxiety which it is not possible that he could have felt in the matter if he had not an ulterior design. It was not a mere anxiety to protect the Government and to do his duty as a faithful officer, but rather a desire to assist the firm of Parkman & Brooks and Roddy to swindle the Government out of this large sum of money, as I shall show before I get through by the most incontestible evidence. Before following that line any further I desire to read an extract or two from the testimony of another witness showing the fraudulent and rotten character of this whole concern of Parkman & Brooks with P. D. Roddy thrown in. I read from pages 32 and 33 of the testimony an extract taken from the testimony of Mr. Burr, also at this time a clerk in the Treasury Department:

By Mr. WILSON:

Question. You say those papers will tell all that you can tell about it?

Answer. Those papers will tell everything that is necessary to know in regard to the claim, I think. If there are other papers in the case—and I don't know of any others—I don't think they are material.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. Your answer was not a direct answer to Mr. WILSON's question. He asked whether those papers will tell all that you know about the case?

A. All that I know about the one hundred and fifty-seven thousand-dollar case

Q. Do the papers in regard to the subsequent claim show all that you know about that?

A. They do not show all matter to which I was called to testify before the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Q. How much was the last claim made for?

A. My recollection of it is that it was made for $33,000 and some fraction over.

Q. Do you know anything of the means resorted to to procure the passage of that claim which do not appear upon the papers as there filed?

A. I have knowledge of a great deal of matter which relates to the passage of the claim which does not occur upon the papers at all.

Q. Did the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice take your testimony fully on that point?

A. Well, they took a good deal of testimony upon that point.

Q. Did they pump you dry on it?

A. Pretty nearly so, I am inclined to think.

Q. Did you lay before the grand jury of this District, a short time ago, the official data relating to this claim?

A. I did, sir. Ah, yes, sir; the papers were all there, and I explained them to them as fully as I could.

Q. Those are the same papers that are now on file in the Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury?

A. The same papers, other than a kind of an abstract of the case which I made out some time ago.

Q. Can you procure those papers and lay them before the committee?

A. I can procure all, with the exception of that abstract, which has been lost.

Q. There was a claim of John Duncan, December 18, 1866, for $97,284.26. Can you tell me who were the attorneys for that claim?

A. I cannot, sir.

Q. Do you know what attorney it was that finally procured the passage of the Parkman, Brooks & Co. claim?

A. The one hundred and fifty-thousand-dollar claim?

Q. Yes.

A. Mr. Logan.

Q. Who procured the passage of the subsequent Parkman, Brooks & Co. claim?

A. There was no attorney or professional claim agent in the case. The gentlemen who interested themselves to my knowledge were Senator SPENCER, and Mr. Alexander White, a member of Congress from Alabama. Those two gentlemen interested themselves in the matter, but further than that I have no knowledge of any person except themselves, Brooks and Roddy.

Q. Where did Brooks and Roddy reside?

A. I think they may have been said to have resided at that time in the State of New York more than anywhere else.

Q. Are they still living?

A. Mr. Brooks is living; Roddy is also, so far as I know. I have seen Mr. Roddy frequently; Brooks I never saw to know him.

Q. Can you give their full names and their present places of residence?

A. Mr. Roddy always signed his name P. D. Roddy, and I think it is Philip. That is the way he is indicted, as Philip. Brooks's name is Frank W. Brooks. He has been in Washington a great deal; he may be to-day for aught I know.

Q. Do you mean recently?

A. Quite recently, as I have heard; but I do not know him or about him, except as I have been told. Roddy, I am told, has been for four or five months in England.

Q. Who is Parkman?

A. He was a man who was in partnership with Brooks at Memphis, Tennessee, but I am inclined to think he has never been in Washington in regard to any of these claims; that Brooks used the firm-name, signed it; and so far as the firm's having any existence now I have no knowledge. It had existence many years ago, but I have no knowledge that it is in existence now. A great deal of the matter was mythical to my mind—a shadow. It was very hard to find anything about it that was solid.

Q. Either about the firm or the claim?

A. Anything connected with it; the whole performance. The claim which I spoke of for $33,000 was the only matter that came to the Solicitor of the Treasury and to me as a clerk there. Another amount in addition to that was allowed to these persons, being some $24,000, which they did not claim originally, which two sums made up the $57,000. The second amount was considered as due to them necessarily if the first amount was; therefore the amount that was allowed was $57,000 in the two claims which they secured. The second allowance was composed of two items, one of $24,000 and one of $33,000. That was allowed to them in February, 1874.

Q. Can you tell me if any one, and, if so, who argued the case before Mr. Tayler so as to convince him that he could exercise that power under that act?

A. I don't think any one argued the case before Mr. Tayler; but of that I have no knowledge. I know the case was argued before me by several gentlemen. It was not argued, because there was no argument in favor of it that could be produced; there were efforts made to induce me to recommend it.

Q. Was it presented to you with a view to having you recommend its payment?

A. Yes, sir; to the Solicitor.

Q. By whom?

A. Commissioner of Customs William T. Haines and Philip D. Roddy; no others. They had a number of personal interviews with me, and in those interviews they endeavored to present reasons to me why I should report to the Solicitor of the Treasury favorably upon the claim; in my judgment those reasons amounted to nothing. The reasons for its allowance that were given me and urged by Roddy and Haines were that the President had ordered its allowance.

Q. Did they produce you any evidence of that fact?

A. General Roddy showed me a paper to which was signed the name U. S Grant; whether the President signed it or not I don't know, for I have no knowledge of his signature at all. The paper amounted to a certificate in favor of General Roddy's veracity—that he was a man worthy of belief, and statements made by him could be relied upon. The exact words I cannot clearly call to my mind.

Q. Was there any mention of this claim in the paper?

A. Nothing at all. That is the position I took with these gentlemen—that although they might use the paper to engineer the claim through, nevertheless it did not seem to me that it would bear that construction. I said to them also that there was no use urging it even if it did, for I did not pass papers on that kind of evidence.

Nothing which I could say, Mr. Speaker, would add to the strength of this testimony and from one whom our friends on the other side dare not assail, for he is still in their employ.

Mr. Speaker, I have stated that before I was through I would show that Mr. Banfield's opinion was known, and that the knowledge of his adverse opinion was the cause of the papers being withdrawn from him before he had time to make a report, and further that they were afterward referred to Mr. Haines because it was known that he was a supple tool that could be used, and that in fact the decision was made by him in favor of Roddy's bogus claim before the papers were placed in his hands. I think the circumstances already detailed, added to the direct testimony which I have already cited, abundantly prove both propositions. But I have one more extract on this point which I will detain the House to read. This extract is from the testimony of Mr. Burr, on pages 42 and 43 of the testimony taken by the committee. This testimony shows in the most conclusive manner not only that Mr. Banfield had arrived at an adverse decision of the Roddy claim, as stated by Mr. Wilson in his letter to Mr. Secretary Bristow, but that his adverse decision had been communicated by this witness to both Haines and Roddy. The extract reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1876.

Examination of JOSEPH BURR continued.

The witness produced paper indorsed "Bluford Wilson, Solicitor, to Hon. B. H. Bristow, Secretary of the Treasury, December 31, 1874. Opinion that money fraudulently obtained by Parkman & Brooks can be recovered by the United States, and stating views in regard to criminal proceedings against the parties to the fraud."

The letter was read to the committee by Mr. STENGER.

By Mr. HOOKER:

Question. Who wrote that letter?

Answer. I wrote it, unless there are changes in it. I am the author of the paper, but it is not in my handwriting. That is a copy of the paper which I did prepare.

Q. Under whose order did you prepare it?

A. Under no one's order.

Q. Who was at that time Solicitor of the Treasury?

A. Mr. E. C. Banfield.

Q. State the whole circumstances about it.

A. The petition of Mr. Roddy for $33,297.28 was referred to the Solicitor of the Treasury, E. C. Banfield, by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Richardson. When it came to the Solicitor's Office it was sent to my desk for examination. I examined the claim, and I wrote that letter without conference with the Solicitor or anybody else. I laid the letter on his desk with the papers, and it lay there in his possession for some length of time. I have a recollection that he told me that he intended to have signed the letter at the time after he read it, and he told me some two weeks ago here in this city that he intended to sign it, with, it may be, one or two immaterial alterations.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. Did he say why he did not sign it?

A. The reason why he did not sign it was that an order was received by him from the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Sawyer, sending the paper back. I stated to William T. Haines, Commissioner of Customs, that the claim was groundless and without any foundation, and I gave him my reasons for such conclusion. I stated that also to Mr. Roddy.

Q. Was that statement to Haines and Roddy made by you prior to the order to return the papers?

A. Yes.

Q. When the papers were returned did they go back to the Secretary's Office and were they referred by him to the Commissioner of Customs, or did they go directly from your office to the Commissioner of Customs?

A. I take it for granted, without knowing the fact, that they were taken to the Secretary's Office.

Q. And by him referred to the Commissioner of Customs?

A. Yes; the papers show that. Mr. Banfield desired that this paper written by me should be kept in the office as an indication of his views in the case, and that is how it chances to have been preserved.

The witness also produces a duplicate of the paper actually sent, signed by the Commissioner of Customs himself, and a copy of which has been prepared for the committee.

The witness also presents a copy of the order from Assistant Secretary Sawyer, under which the papers were returned to the Secretary's Office.

The following is a copy:

Mr. BANFIELD: Please return the Roddy claim and papers, and oblige,

F. A. SAWYER.

JANUARY 28, 1874.

By Mr. HOOKER:

Q. In accordance with that letter, the papers were returned to the Secretary, and were by him referred to the Commissioner of Customs?

A. Yes.
Q. He had previously decided in favor of the claim?
A. Yes; the dates speak for that.
Q. And that decision is to be found in the letter addressed to Hon. Alexander White?
A. Yes.
Mr. HOOKER. If there is any fact or circumstance within your knowledge, derived either from records in your office or from conversation with the parties in interest, in reference to the allowance and the payment of this claim, you may state it.
The WITNESS. I cannot recall anything just now that I deem of particular importance in the matter. There was a good deal developed by a gentleman who had this thing in charge, more particularly with a view to having an indictment found.
Q. Who is that gentleman?
A. His name is Benson; he is the assistant of Mr. Washburn in the secret-service division.

By Mr. STENGER:

Q. Have those papers ever been laid before Secretary Bristow, or has any statement of the facts connected with this whole transaction been laid before him?
A. That letter of the 31st December, 1874, was sent to him. This has been a very notorious thing in the Treasury Department ever since the claim was first filed. Of course the warrant clerk, who has charge of all money matters, (so far as drawing the warrants is concerned,) must have had knowledge of the transaction then and since, because (although I never have talked to him) I heard of his speaking in regard to it.
Q. Who was the warrant clerk?
A. The warrant clerk was Mr. Conant. He is the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. The opinion of the First Auditor and the Commissioner of Customs and the First Comptroller was had upon the matter, and after that it went to the warrant clerk, Mr. Conant. The First Auditor was D. W. Mahon, the First Comptroller was R. W. Tayler, both of whom are yet in the Treasury Department. The warrant clerk records the warrants. They are signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, I think. The warrant clerk, as I understand it, is the particular clerk who has in charge the matter of drawing warrants.
Q. And signing the Secretary's name to them?
A. No; I do not think anybody but the Secretary ever signs his name to warrants.

By Mr. HOOKER:

Q. You mean that the warrant clerk draws the warrant and presents it to the Secretary for his signature, and he signs it?
A. I am not well enough acquainted with the exact duties of the warrant clerk to speak of them. I only know that the office is an exceedingly important one under the Secretary. I know that there is a record kept of every warrant, but the particular functions of the warrant clerk I am not able to state exactly.
(Mr. R. W. Tayler, First Comptroller of the Treasury, was invited to appear before the committee, and was given the privilege of making any explanation he might desire in regard to the payment of the claim about which the committee was investigating and about his action in connection with it.
Mr. Tayler replied that he had no desire of saying further than the record evidence.)

This testimony also shows that some of the officers who had at least a very intimate if not guilty knowledge are still high in authority at the Treasury Department. This transaction is traced to the very door of some of these high officials who now occupy a position where they should be the guardians of the people's Treasury, and when they had an opportunity to explain their connection with it they declined to avail themselves of it. This may not prove guilt, but it at least casts a cloud of suspicion which ought not to hang over a man who occupies a position of such vast importance to the people of this country.

I have no disposition, Mr. Speaker, in this matter to go beyond what is required of a faithful representative of those who have honored me with a seat on this floor. And I certainly have no disposition to treat it in the spirit in which my friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] treated the House of Representatives in his review of it a few days ago. But that there has been a great wrong perpetrated in this matter there cannot be a shadow of doubt, and that the wrong was winked at, if nothing more, by some of the very men who now hold the most important positions in your Treasury Department, is equally well established. I could not, with my view of the matter, suffer it to pass without at least calling the attention of the House to it, in the hope, if it did nothing more, it might at least prevent a repetition of such conduct upon the part of Government officials.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another matter of still more importance connected with this Bureau to which I wish to call attention, as showing the utter unreliability of the reports emanating from the Treasury Department, as well as of the officers connected therewith. In the finance reports for 1874 and 1875 the total proceeds of captured and abandoned property covered into the Treasury is stated to be $20,910,656.44. To show the inaccuracy of this statement, allow me to read from the testimony of Mr. Lovell on page 60 of this report:

By Mr. STENGER:

Question. Let me understand whether the figures of twenty-six millions and odd given by you include the premium on sales of coins?
Answer. Yes, that includes the premium as stated in this executive document.
Q. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of December 8, 1870, dated February 9, 1871, which purports to give a statement of moneys covered into the Treasury as the proceeds of captured and abandoned property; look at that aggregate amount of the payments given, and say whether in your opinion that is a correct statement of the amounts that were covered in from your knowledge of the books.
A. I should suppose it to be more nearly correct than the figures given in Executive Document No. 56 of the second session Fortieth Congress, alluded to in my previous testimony, and having been made up more fully in 1871 than in 1868, and containing as it does, the Holabird contribution to the captured and abandoned fund, would also be more accurate than my estimate made on the 4th of April, 1872. With data that I had I made up a statement for the Treasury in 1868 or 1869, where I found $26,092,460.96 as the grand total of the captured and abandoned property turned into the Treasury; this Executive Document No. 113 (report of February, 1871, they having access to all sources) proves the same to be $26,709,268.89, (page 4.)
Q. Then this letter, giving this sum of $26,709,268.89, embraces the premium of sales of coin and the Holabird sales to which you refer?
A. Yes, sir; it does. I have examined it, and I see it embraces the premium on sales of coin; and on looking at it further I find the Holabird amount.
Q. In your judgment, it gives the accurate statement of the amounts of money covered into the Treasury from the sales of captured and abandoned property?
A. I believe it does, sir.
Q. Do you know who compiled that statement?
A. I do not, sir, of my own knowledge. I had been out of the Treasury Department about a year at that time.
Q. Can you tell me whether or not there is a book in the office of the chief of the division of captured and abandoned property which shows how much was realized from the sales of captured and abandoned property by all the agents of the Government?
A. The statement is contained in Executive Document 56, which shows all the agents that I know of. The returns that were sent in were kept in that office, or manuscript copies of them.
Q. They ought to be there, or in some other department of the Treasury?
A. Yes.
Q. But was there a book in which those statements were entered?
A. Not that I know of.

You will observe that there is a difference in the two statements emanating from the Treasury Department of $5,798,612.45. A few days ago, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] was arraigning this side of the House for their extravagant investigations, which he alleged would cost $1,000,000, (but which, by the way, is an extravagant estimate,) he had no word of condemnation against this deficiency of over $5,000,000, which it seems has occurred right under the nose of one of his personal and party friends, as will be abundantly established by the following from the testimony of Mr. Brown, of Kentucky, page 76:

Question. Do you know anything about the former positions held by Noerr or Fessenden?
Answer. Of Noerr's antecedents I know nothing. Fessenden was a paymaster in the Army, and was dismissed from the Army on account of embezzlement. I know that from an examination of the record in the Adjutant-General's Office.
Q. Do you know whether that fact was ever brought to the attention of the present Secretary of the Treasury?
A. It was brought to his attention by myself in 1874.
Q. Under what circumstances?
A. I did it chiefly at Dr. Hamilton's request, believing, from his statement to me, that these people would not do him justice. He called my attention to the matter, and I got an official copy of Fessenden's case from the Adjutant-General's Office.
Q. Do your politics and those of the Secretary of the Treasury agree?
A. Yes, sir; except that I am a republican of the extreme type. I went to Mr. Bristow with the papers in Fessenden's case. Mr. Bristow said to me that Mr. HAMLIN of Maine, Mr. Blaine of Maine, and Mr. EUGENE HALE of Maine had vouched to him for Fessenden's integrity and good character, and that under these circumstances he did not feel called upon to take notice of it.
Q. When did this conversation occur?
A. In the fall of 1874. I only called his attention to the matter, and handed him a copy of the papers from the Adjutant-General's Office. He expressed surprise that Fessenden had been guilty of anything of that kind.
Q. When was Fessenden dismissed from the Army?
A. In 1862 or 1863, and he was appointed in the Treasury in about 1864.
Q. Do you know whether Fessenden's account in which he was a defaulter to the Government was ever settled?
A. The only information I have on that subject is from a printed report of a committee of the Senate of the last Congress on the claim of a man named Colby, to whom Fessenden had furnished about $18,000 of the funds for which he was a defaulter. In that report the committee stated that this money had never been reimbursed to the United States Government.

It is not to be wondered at, Mr. Speaker, that deficiencies should occur in a Department that is controlled and managed by confessed embezzlers of the public funds. But what shall be thought of the party which in the face of such a record will still continue a man of that character in places of such trust and responsibility? Would not the sincerity of my friend from Maine have been less questionable, if instead of exhausting his vials of wrath upon the unfortunate employés of this House, whom we have dismissed from office, he had expended some of his genius in unearthing and bringing to punishment some of the scoundrels and thieves who now infest the Treasury Department, and many of whom revel in ill-gotten wealth? But I have not time to further discuss this matter. There is one other extract from this same witness, which I must crave the indulgence of the House while I read. It shows the method adopted by the Government agents to make a good thing out of the work of collecting this captured and abandoned property. It is as follows. I read from pages 77 and 78 of the testimony:

Question. Can you inform the committee of any cases where fraudulent charges were made?
Answer. [Referring to the document.] In case of Hamilton & Obenchain there were one hundred and sixty bales of cotton shipped from Sevier County, Arkansas, to New Orleans, by R. G. Curtiss. The cotton was collected by T. Magennis. The expenses of freight to New Orleans were $6,384.12; the expenses of freight to New York, $991, and the expenses at New York, $371.73; making the total expenses of the one hundred and sixty bales $7,746.85. The cotton was sold for $20,796.87. Another case was that of H. C. Boyd. The cotton was collected in La Fayette County, Arkansas, by H. A. Miller, and was shipped by A. B. Miller, eighty-three bales. The gross proceeds were $6,249.99, and the expenses to and at New Orleans, $4,763.70.

By Mr. WILSON:

Q. What were those expenses for?
A. It was simple stealing; that was all. The expense of getting that cotton from La Fayette County, Arkansas, to the city of New Orleans, ought not, at the very outside, to have exceeded $20 a bale. In legitimate commerce $5 a bale would have been a very good price.
Q. Were not the Government agents paid a percentage for collecting this cotton, and would not that be included in the expenses?
A. They were paid 25 per cent. commission. Ordinarily when the cotton was seized, the collecting agent got his portion in cash.

By Mr. HOOKER:

Q. Do you know of their route from La Fayette, County, to New Orleans, and where water carriage would be struck?

A. Water carriage would be struck at Shreveport, Louisiana, which would be four or five days' journey from New Orleans. In that case of Boyd's the expenses were $6,108.50, and the cotton was sold for $6.249.99, so that only $141.40 passed into the Treasury of the United States. Mr. Boyd is now living in Lynchburgh, Virginia.

Q. What was the date of that shipment?

A. The cotton was received at New Orleans January 6, 1865, and was sold in New York, September 12, 1865. There was a case of forty-five bales of cotton that were seized in La Fayette County, Arkansas, taken from Thomas B. Triggs, and shipped by the same agent, A. B. Miller. The gross proceeds were $3,388.55; the net proceeds nothing.

A position in this Bureau for the collection and management of captured and abandoned property was, it seems, a perfect God-send to individuals who had no other views of office than those which embraced the emoluments attached and which they could attach to it. The old farmers and honest yeomanry of my district will agree with this witness when he says, "it was simple stealing;" for, as a class, the people of my district of all parties call things by their right names, and they neither indorse nor approve of stealing, whether it be by republicans or democrats. Neither do I think that the cry raised by Senator MORTON in his speech in Indiana, that the democrats have expended a half million of dollars through their investigations, will avail them; for who can read the extracts from the testimony taken by the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, which I have quoted, and say that the money expended in unearthing the fraud and corruption that is there brought to light has been misapplied? We expected opposition from the leaders of the party in power; we expected to hear them howl over the waste of money, especially if the testimony taken should be damaging to their party friends. If nothing had been proved, as many of them claim, we should not have heard such a howl raised, but, on the contrary, the result of our investigations would have been paraded before the country by every radical stump-speaker from MORTON down to the smallest cross-roads politician of the party.

But the fact that almost every one of our investigations, like the one I have just been examining, has produced such startling evidence of fraud and corruption that even the party leaders of the great republican party quail before the storm which they feel that it must create, and instead of meeting it in a manly way they resort to the most violent vituperation and abuse of all the witnessess who have dared as became men to testify before our committees to the truth as it actually existed. The fact that the witnesses have in many instances been high in authority and respected and honored by their own party has not availed anything to protect them from the envenomed tongue of their former political associates. High and low, rich and poor, republicans and democrats, have all alike been indiscriminately heaped together and charged with being scoundrels and perjurers. This has been the only means which the republican leaders felt were open to them in order to break the force of the startling revelations which the last six months have brought to light, except in the case of Belknap. I see Senator MORTON says that he was a democrat. That is decidedly rich. The idea of a democrat having a seat in President Grant's cabinet is certainly original with MORTON, and I do not think he would ever have discovered it if the late Secretary of War had not been caught in some of his "irregularities." Besides, I do not think the democrats have been treated fairly in this matter by allowing them to be in possession of the War Department all of this time and never letting them know it.

But how about Richardson, Sawyer, Tayler, Haines, Noerr, Fessenden, Miller, and the hosts of others referred to in this testimony, who are if possible more guilty than Belknap? Are they all democrats too? And if they are, why do my friends on the republican side of this House hug them so closely to their bosoms and so industriously labor to ward off every blow which we strike at them? If they belong to us, why do you endeavor to prevent us from exposing and punishing our own thieves? Ah, gentlemen, you know such claims are all bosh, and if you are not, you ought to be ashamed to use it.

I have now said all that I desired to say upon this subject. I had intended to say a few words upon the "irregularities" in the currency department, but I find that I have already extended my remarks too far, and I shall reserve what I have to say upon the other subject for another opportunity if such should offer.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania;

An act (S. No. 1042) to provide for the publication of the report of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap; and

An act (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A resolution concerning the joint rules, in response to the resolution of the House on the subject.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In affixing my signature to the river and harbor bill, No. 3922, I deem it my duty to announce to the House of Representatives my objections to some features of the bill, and the reason I sign it. If it was obligatory upon the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress, I should return the river and harbor bill with my objections, notwithstanding the great inconvenience to the public interests resulting therefrom, and the loss of expenditures from previous Congresses upon incompleted works. Without enumerating, many appropriations are made for works of purely private or local interest, in no sense national. I cannot give my sanction to these, and will take care that during my term of office no public money shall be expended upon them.

There is very great necessity for economy of expenditures at this time growing out of the loss of revenue likely to arise from a deficiency of appropriations to insure a thorough collection of the same. The reduction of revenue districts, diminution of special agents, and total abolition of supervisors may result in great falling off of the revenue. It may be a question to consider whether any expenditure can be authorized under the river and harbor appropriation further than to protect works already done and paid for. Under no circumstances will I allow expenditures upon works not clearly national.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 14, 1876.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to move that this message just read be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed, and before the question is taken on that motion I desire to say a few words.

The President in his message announces that he is under no obligation to expend the whole of this money, and that he will in the exercise of his discretion allow the expenditure of only such portion of it as may be for objects which in his judgment are of a national character. I desire to call the attention of the House to the bill about which this observation is made. The first clause of that bill is as follows:

That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the repair, preservation, construction, and completion of the following public works hereinafter named.

This bill, under the forms prescribed by the Constitution, has been passed by the House of Representatives and by the Senate of the United States, and has been approved by the President of the United States. It appropriates money for objects deemed proper by the Congress of the United States, with the assent of the President of the United States. Had the President believed this bill to be unconstitutional, he might in the exercise of his constitutional functions have vetoed it.

That to which I desire to call special attention at this time, for the purpose of marking this message, is that in it the President assumes that, in reference to a bill making appropriations for objects usually in such bills, his personal judgment is to determine how far these appropriations are to be applied to the objects specified by the law. It is essentially an assumption by the President of the right to exercise an act of personal government, instead of obedience to the laws. It is an assumption that the money appropriated in that bill is to be expended, not under the direction of the Secretary of War, but at the discretion of the Secretary of War. The bill gives no such discretion.

The bill properly provides that the money shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, because the corps of officers by whom these appropriations are to be expended are under his general supervision. The President has constitutionally and legally no more right to assume that he will defeat the objects of this law by refusing to permit the appropriations to be expended as provided by it than he has to assume the right to refuse to have expended appropriations that have been made for the Army, for the Navy, or for any other branch of the public service.

I desire simply to call attention to this matter, because it seems to me that a document so remarkable in its character, with all respect to the President, announcing so great a departure from the Constitution, and containing so singular an avowal in advance that he will not obey the law of the land, should not be permitted by the Representatives of the people to go before the country without at least calling attention to it and expressing some dissent.

The President has called attention to other matters which have been met by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in regard to an anticipated deficiency in the revenue for the reasons to which he alludes. I do not propose to discuss that portion of the message, and will simply move that this message be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. And printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be included in the motion.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. Speaker, I must confess that when I heard the message of the President read I was very much surprised; not so much, perhaps, as some other gentlemen on this floor were when within the last year and a half, or perhaps two years, the same Executive sent to this House and to the Senate a message in which he told us that the Constitution of the United States, republican in form and I hope always to be republican in fact, was very similar to the constitution of the empire of Germany. I suppose that in his construction of the Constitution of the United States, believing it to be similar to the constitution of the German Empire, he has come to the conclusion that he is clothed with that same power that the Emperor of Germany possesses. That is, when a Congress of the United States shall have made an appropriation of money for various specific objects, it is in his power to say whether that money shall be so expended or not.

Have we in the history of our Government arrived at the point where the Chief Executive may say to the Congress of the United States that notwithstanding they have made an appropriation of money for specific objects, he will allow only that portion of the money to be expended and upon such objects as in his judgment should receive the appropriation.

As was said by my friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] my colleague on the Committee on Commerce, this bill makes distinct appropriations both as to certain objects and the amounts for those objects; yet the Executive tells us in this message that he will see to it that no money shall be expended except for such objects as he in his superior judgment may think right and proper! I ask the American Congress to-day whether they believe that the Executive is endowed with any such imperial power; and, if so, whence he derives it? After Congress has made an appropriation of money, and he has signed the bill, and it has become a law, has he authority to say that the money shall not be expended?

But look at some of his reasons. One of them is that "the reduction of revenue districts, the diminution of special agents; and the total abolition of supervisors may result in a great falling off of the revenues." This is one of the reasons why he says he may feel compelled to forbid the expenditure of this money as Congress in its wisdom has directed. Because Congress has not appropriated enough for one purpose he will withhold appropriations for other purposes. In other words, because this House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress, during a tedious session of eight months, has seen fit to act in the line of retrenchment, reform, and economy, he chooses in this message to rebuke both Houses of Congress, and says that the revenues, as he thinks, will not be sufficient. We have not cut down revenues, but stopped extravagance. If the revenues should not prove sufficient, and if the money for these purposes should not be in the Treasury, then of course it will not be expended. But under the provisions of this bill, if the money should be in the Treasury, it is the duty of the President, in accordance with the oath he has taken to protect the Constitution and execute the laws, to expend this money as we have directed.

In this bill we have appropriated moneys for various rivers and harbors by name; appropriated to each a specific amount. What right has the Executive to say as to any of those rivers or harbors, "I do not believe that this is a proper object for the expenditure of money." That is a prerogative of the legislative department. The American Congress has said, "We appropriate so much money for a certain object." The President has signed the bill; it has become a law; yet he now tells us that he will not execute it, although the money may be in the Treasury. In other words, the Executive announces to this House to-day that he intends to set at nought and nullify the laws of the American Congress.

We passed a law, which the President vetoed, declaring that that officer should, after the 4th of March next, receive only $25,000 a year. In that act we spoke our views in tones unmistakable; yet he vetoed that bill, though it was in the line of retrenchment and reform. But when we come to appropriate money to improve the rivers of the United States so that the farmers may be able to get their wheat, their corn, and their cattle to market at less rates than they now have to pay, the President says, "If I do not find it to meet my views I will not allow this money to be expended." How is he going to stop it? We have directed the money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. Is the President going to issue his command, his mandamus pronunciamento to the Secretary of War saying, "I do not believe this river should receive the amount appropriated by Congress; and therefore you shall not expend a dollar upon it." Have we arrived at that?

If the President had seen proper, it was in his power to veto the bill as a whole. But he has no authority to override the Constitution and veto part of this law by non-action. In signing this bill, he comes in here and assumes the prerogative to lecture both branches of the American Congress. This measure has been discussed fully—certainly in the Senate; it has met the approval of committees of both Houses; it has been reported from the conference committee, and has received the vote of two-thirds of each branch of Congress; yet the President comes here to-day and in his message says, "I will not allow this or that money to be expended, although it is the law of the land, if it does not meet my approbation." If the President can prevent the expenditure of one dollar of these appropriations, he can prevent the expenditure of every dollar. He can say that the amount appropriated for the improvement of Hell Gate shall not be expended. He can go into Texas or Michigan or any other State and say, "Although the American Congress has passed a bill appropriating so much money and directing it to be expended in a designated manner, and notwithstanding I have signed the bill, yet I, as President of the United States, will issue my mandate in some form or another to a subordinate officer directing that this money shall not be expended," and the law of Congress is nullified. If he can do so with one appropriation bill, he can do so with each and all.

I heartily approve of the motion made by my colleague upon the Committee on Commerce for the reference of this message to that committee. What right has the President to say that this or that object is not national? What is the nature of a river and harbor bill? I may be permitted to refer in no spirit of criticism, but simply to illustrate my argument, to what occurred the other night when the appropriation for Hell Gate was under consideration. One of the Senators from New York objected to that appropriation, because in his opinion the amount was insufficient; and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] opposed it on the same ground.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD,] in undertaking to repeat the debates in the other branch of Congress, is transgressing the rules of the House.

Mr. HEREFORD. I have endeavored to confine myself within proper limits and I do not desire to transcend the rules of the House. What was the reason given.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the ruling of the Chair on my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will again state his point.

Mr. HOAR. My point is that the gentleman from West Virginia, in designating by name members in the other branch and stating what they uttered in debate, is transgressing the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such references are out of order. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will do so. It has been said elsewhere (I suppose that is in order) that the appropriation for Hell Gate was not sufficient; and for what reason? Because for want of the completion of the work at that point the people of the New England States are obliged to pay a greater rate of insurance in order to get their products to the markets of New York. In other words, (and thisi s all there is in a river and harbor bill; this is its length, breadth, its height, and depth,) the reason assigned elsewhere why an appropriation was too small was because the obstructions at Hell Gate increased the rate of freight paid by the people of New England in getting their products to market.

If you make an appropriation for Hell Gate, which they say is a great national work, in order to let the people of New England and elsewhere get their produce to market, why is it you cannot make an appropriation so that the people along the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Kanawha, the Kaskaskia, Wabash, the Illinois, the Fox, and Wisconsin, shall also have the same facilities for the transportation of their products to market at a less cost? Why shall not the French Broad River be improved and those living along it furnished cheap transportation to market? Why shall we not make likewise an appropriation in the same bill to enable the farmers along all these streams in the interior to get what they raise cheaply to market and to develop the hidden wealth of our mountains and valleys?

And that, Mr. Speaker, is all there is in these river and harbor appropriation bills. Bills exactly like this have been signed by all the Presidents of the United States; by Adams, by Jackson, by Van Buren, by all of them. Such bills as this have been signed session after session by the present Executive. Bills have been signed by him making appropriations for nearly every single object contained in this bill to-day, except a few which may happen to be in the down-trodden South.

Last year an appropriation bill similar to this for precisely similar works, for almost the same works, appropriated $6,600,000, and the President of the United States, this same President of the United States, signed that bill without accompanying it with a lecture to Congress, while the present bill, which only appropriates $5,000,000, he accompanies with a lecture, a criticism, which we have now before us. He signs without hesitation and without deeming it necessary to accompany it with a word of remark a bill last year on the same subject, for the same objects, appropriating $6,600,000, and yet he comes here to-day, when we appropriate in a similar bill only $5,000,000, saying that it is too much. When did the light break upon the Executive that it was too much? Is it because a few dollars have been given to the down-trodden South for the improvement of the Cumberland, the Tennessee, and other streams throughout the South and the North, where appropriations for the improvement of those rivers are very much needed?

The Executive says that certain works are of a national character and others are not of a national character. Now, what does he mean by works of a national character? Is it for the Executive to decide? Both branches of Congress have already decided that all the appropriations embraced in this bill are within the purview of the Constitution. The President, by signing the bill, has said that all these appropriations are within the purview of the Constitution, or else he would not have signed it. He has decided the bill to be constitutional, in his judgment, by putting his signature of approval to it.

But he comes to Congress with a lecture and says that he thinks we should not have made certain appropriations because they are not national. Wherein are the appropriations in this bill not national? Is not the Mississippi with all its tributaries national? Is not the Ohio River with all its tributaries national? Is not the improvement of Hell Gate in New York harbor a national work? Why, sir, the commerce of the Ohio River alone, which gets by this bill only $170,000, is more than the whole foreign commerce of the United States. Is not that a national work? Are the people of the interior to be called upon year after year, for a long series of years, to make appropriations for rivers and harbors upon the Atlantic coast and upon the Pacific coast; to improve the harbors of Boston, of New York, of Baltimore, of New Orleans, of San Francisco, of Toledo, and of Cleveland, and is the great Mississippi Valley not to have its rivers improved, so the farmers living there can get their grain, their wheat, their corn, their coal, and all the products of their industry to market at a cheap rate? Is the President and his party opposed to cheap transportation? That is what this bill proposes to accomplish. It is to secure the improvement of our navigable streams, so that the farmers shall be enabled to transport to market their wheat, and their corn, and their other produce at a cheap rate. Shall this people be refused this transportation, and shall they be bound hand and foot to the railroad monopolies of the country? Is that what the President means?

How is the President to decide which are national and which are not? Can he say that Hell Gate is not a national work? Has he the power to say the improvement of the Mississippi River is not a national work and that he will not give it a dollar of this appropriation?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEREFORD. The President in his message says it may be a question to consider whether any expenditure can well be authorized under a river and harbor appropriation bill further than to provide for works already begun and paid for. Under no circumstances, he says, will he allow expenditures on works not clearly national. What right has this great Cæsar to decide what are and what are not national, when the American Congress has decided the question by making these appropriations?

On what meat hath this our Cæsar fed!

What right has he to say, when this Congress, representing the people of the United States under the Constitution, have made these appropriations and he has signed the bill, that he will not allow one dollar of this money to be spent except to preserve works already begun? Why, sir, there are works which have already received from first to last four or five million dollars, and because they have received so much are they and they only to receive additional appropriations? Are these works only to be kept up? Is it true that to those who have to them shall be given; that those who have received in the past to them shall be given more, while to those who have received nothing to them nothing shall be given? The spirit of his message is, I do not believe a dollar of this money should be expended upon certain rivers and harbors because nothing has been expended upon them heretofore. The money should be expended because the improvements are needed. There is not an appropriation in this bill not recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. There is not a dollar not recommended by the Chief of Engineers. We have acted on the reports of the executive officers, and they have said these works are necessary. They are appointed for this purpose: to examine these works, to examine the practicability of them, to examine the cost of them, to examine the resources of the country, to examine and report to this Congress how much by these works the commerce of the country will be developed. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on Commerce of the House have read all these reports diligently and carefully, and have talked to all the members of both Houses.

I say to-day, that as chairman of the Committee on Commerce I have prepared a just and fair and equitable bill, a bill fair to all parts of the country, north, south, east, and west, and all the members of the committee will give me credit for so doing. There is no political significance in the framing of this bill. We have read all these reports, and I have myself talked to no fewer than two hundred members on this floor in order to get additional information about these rivers and harbors. And after doing all that we have made as economical a bill as would do justice to all parts of the country, north, south, east, and west. And yet the President says he will not allow money to be expended except where he—he, the Chief Executive—may think it is a national work.

What right, I ask again, in conclusion, after this has become a law, has he to say to us, as he does to-day, "I will not carry out the law; I notify you in advance I will nullify and set at nought a law of Congress passed by both branches and signed by myself. I notify you I will not carry it out unless in so far as it may suit my views." I will put it "where it will do the most good." I tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is high time we should come back to the simplicity of the olden times, and stand by the Constitution of our fathers and the laws, and see that the Executive set neither at nought, shall set neither at defiance. Such a message as this sent to the British Parliament would cost Queen Victoria her crown. And, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this message will take the direction indicated by my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and be referred to the Committee on Commerce, where the full measure and magnitude of its monstrous proposition may receive full consideration.

Mr. CONGER. I have listened with very great surprise to the remarks of my distinguished friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] a good lawyer, careful generally in his statements and in his conclusions; and I have listened with still greater surprise to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the gentleman from West Virginia. Sir, the President in approving a bill which was passed hastily, with very many changes, through both Houses, on the report of a conference committee, has seen fit while approving the bill to send a message to Congress suggesting that there may be some imperfections in the bill, that there may be some appropriations which are not warranted in the present state of the finances of the country, and perhaps some danger of money being spent on works of such inferior necessity that they may be postponed. And he asserts in his message that inasmuch as Congress has left under his direction, or that of an executive officer in his Cabinet, the expenditure of the whole of this $5,000,000 of money, he does not feel disposed to veto the bill, to return it with his objections to Congress; but he does desire, exercising the discretion which the bill itself specially commits to him and to his direction, to join the great army of the reformers that come up here in their panoply of strength to prevent any appropriations from being made for an improper purpose. He announces in a very modest way that he desires to join this army of southern reformers and northern reformers in looking over these appropriations; and inasmuch as Congress confides in his discretion, he announces to the House he will exercise that discretion under the Constitution, and under the very orders and direction of this bill, for the welfare of the country; so that the money shall not be squandered on trout streams, so that the money shall not be squandered to enlarge cracks in the clay banks on the shores of our lakes and oceans to make harbors on mere possibilities of harbors, but that it shall be expended for valuable purposes; that it shall be expended as far as in his judgment and discretion it can be for the purpose of promoting the national benefit, the benefit of the American people at large.

What is there in that message that calls up the antagonism of the genial gentleman from Texas? What is there, except an assertion of the Chief Executive, communicated to the House of Representatives and to the Congress of the United States, that inasmuch as they have left the expenditure of $5,000,000 to his direction and to his discretion, he will not be behind all these other gentlemen in economy, in reform, in retrenchment, and that he, so far as lies in his power, will see to it that the Republic receives no detriment, and that this money is not expended for unworthy purposes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Texas to rise in his place and tell this House whether any appropriation for his State in that bill is for an unworthy purpose; whether any appropriation for all Texas of the thousands of dollars that are appropriated to be expended there is not to promote our national commerce? If not, why does he fear for Texas?

Mr. REAGAN. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman can wait until I am through, and then answer. I am asking these questions that the gentlemen out of their own time and in their own manner may reply to them.

I ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what appropriation for West Virginia, and, as he is chairman of the Committee on Commerce for the whole land, what appropriation in that bill for the whole land is not national in its character? He argues that all these waters upon which commerce flows, whether in great quantities or in small quantities, are the rills, the rivers, the streams, the lakes, and the oceans—that all go together to make up the grand national commerce of the country. If he is right in his argument, the President is right in his message. And if the President is right in his message, the gentleman is wrong in condemning it. But why is he afraid of the message? Can it be possible—I have heard no objection from this side of the House—that any of my friends on the other side who have come up here from their wanderings in the wilderness to their father's house and "have come here to stay" could possibly have imposed upon the chairman of the Committee on Commerce with the improvement of an unnational work?

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the gentleman allow me to answer his question?

Mr. CONGER. I decline to be interrupted. I am thrown off the track very easily, and I cannot be interrupted. I want an answer from the gentleman in his own time when he takes the floor again. Now I ask if any of my friends who have come up from their wanderings to stay, as the gentleman from Georgia says "to dwell in their father's house," and who seem to have come here, and come here for the sole purpose of taking their father's business out of his hands and managing the household themselves while they stay here, gentlemen who come here blazing and glowing and sparkling with retrenchment and reform—can it be possible that any of these gentlemen have crowded into this river and harbor bill an appropriation for a work that is not national? I trust not, sir. I trust when the wanderers come here with reform on their tongues and the glory of retrenchment like a halo around their heads, who have come back here whether the master of the household was willing or unwilling for them to stay, have come back to turn the master out and take the control of the household; I trust that not one of my friends has come and imposed upon the gentleman from Texas, and imposed upon the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and imposed upon my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. PIERCE,] the careful and cautious man, in regard to these appropriations, and has secured appropriations for works that are not at all national, and are, therefore, subject to the censure of this message. Why in the world should it be that my friends are so excessively sensitive when their whole souls are glowing, burning, and yearning for reform and retrenchment; when they are so exceedingly active and earnest that every officer of this Government shall not only know his duty but shall perform it; shall scan closely every law; shall scan closely every proposition of every law, and not even by any possibility wander a hair's breadth from its strict construction. Why is it that they blame our President when he announces to the House his determination to scan this law and see if all these appropriations are really for national works? When retrenchment is the great peace-cry of my brethren, why is it that they raise such a tumult in this House because the President says that on account of changes of law, and failures of appropriations, and the cutting off of revenue officers, it is more than probable that there will be such a diminution of the revenues received this year that he cannot carry on all the works of the Government, that he cannot find the money in the Treasury that is unappropriated to fulfill all the demands of the law, and says that if that shall happen he would withhold the money from those works which are not national, from those for which there is no immediate and pressing necessity for this expenditure, and he will thus save the Treasury.

O, sir, I have thought for some time that if these gentlemen who have instituted thirty-three investigating committees to watch every officer of the Government and see whether they stepped a hair's breath aside from the strict construction of the law and have been ready upon a violation by a high officer to impeach that officer and upon a slight violation to condemn, (for the reports of the majorities of the committees are full of these things,) I had hoped that they would not have complained of the President when he, in his message to the House, announced his conviction that it is his duty to comply strictly with the law and expend the money directly in the discretion the House has given him for national objects and for the preservation of works on which money has already been expended. Why did not gentlemen, if they had secured appropriations for such works, repent and ask that the appropriation be withdrawn? Why did not the work of reform then commence? Why does each individual gentleman of the House, when talking so loudly for reform for everybody but himself, if he has got into this bill appropriations of this kind, work out some reform within himself? But, sir, the reports of this House will show that the reformation demanded by the majority is continually the reformation for somebody else besides themselves.

Why, sir, the example of their standard-bearer should have taught them a different lesson. There has been no more pathetic episode in the political history of this year than that exhibited by their own standard-bearer when, in the society of a few friends at his own home, he received the first intimation that he had been selected as the democratic candidate for the Presidency. His friends sat by his side, like the friends of Job, and spoke no more until his own heart, his own judgment, could work out in their own volition his true inwardness, and, at last, I ask the gentlemen to remember what their leader said about himself. He was not looking to everybody else for reform. What did he say about himself? He said in a whispered tone, "I know what the American people want; they want reform," and thinking a moment or two longer, reflecting upon it, he said, with spasmodic violence, pointing directly to his own heart, "they shall find it here." [Laughter.] How little, Mr. Speaker, has that example been followed by his followers here? They all want reform; they all know that the people mean it; they want reform, but, unlike their shrewd, sagacious leader, they do not take the precaution to interpret to the people, as he did, how it was to be in their own heart. O, no; ever since that tender expression of your leader of the campaign I have sat here with extreme impatience for some one of the gentlemen, the followers of your candidate, in a modest manner, in a feeble way to intimate that reform had commenced in their own hearts, because, sir, after the standard-bearer of the democratic party had struck his hand upon his heart and announced that the people could find reform there, I solemnly believe that not one of these faithful followers who sat around him listening with bated breath his penitential utterances but had some reason to believe that the work of regeneration had already commenced in that immortal soul. [Laughter.]

I commend that example of the chieftain to his followers. I would say that they have followed that example if my conscience would permit.

Now, sir, I again ask any gentleman of this House, the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD,] or any other gentleman, when he has the opportunity to reply to me, any gentleman who finds fault with this message of the President, to tell this House which one item in this bill which the President signs is for a work which they condemn as not desirable for national commerce and national prosperity? When they will tell that, then I guarantee that every other man in this House will say that the message of the President is just and righteous, and that that particular work which they condemn as not national ought not to receive the appropriation made for it.

Mr. HOUSE. Which one does the President condemn as not national?

Mr. CONGER. I will tell the gentleman. The great Congress that the gentleman from West Virginia alludes to, composed of two Houses, and each House composed of an almost innumerable number of great men, the great Congress of the United States told the President that this money was to be expended under his direction and within his discretion. In old times all the money for this purpose was appropriated in mass. Until six years ago there had been but one or two river and harbor bills ever passed specifying the objects of the appropriation. The appropriation was made in a gross sum, to be expended entirely at the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War. It is a new thing for Congress to take from the President that power to direct the Secretary of War and the Engineer Department how much and where they shall expend this money. This has been done within the last six or eight years. I think before that time there never had been but two, or at the most three, of these bills passed specifying where the appropriation should be expended. The President, therefore, is returning to the old democratic way, and in so far as he does that he has my most hearty condemnation. [Laughter.]

Up to 1871 there had been expended for the purpose of improving the rivers and harbors of the country $27,863,000. Since that time there have been expended in 1871 one and a half millions in, 1872 two and a half millions, in 1873 three and a half millions, in 1874 five millions, and in 1875 five million six or eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Who did it?

Mr. CONGER. A republican Congress of the United States.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then you introduced the novelty.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Polk vetoed every river and harbor bill ever presented to him; and in the last part of his term the Congress of the United States passed over his veto a river and harbor bill appropriating one and three quarters millions of dollars. Under President Buchanan not one dollar was ever appropriated for the improvement of any river, North or South, except to the extent of $30,000 in all in some bills to repair particular works.

The democratic policy never was in favor of the improvement of rivers and harbors. Since I have been a member of this House, and while I was a member of the Committee on Commerce, southern Representatives came by scores before that committee asking for appropriations for their rivers and harbors, as my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] very well knows. They were asked if they would vote for the bill if their appropriations, such as the committee thought should be put in, were embraced in the bill, or whether their constitutional scruples would prevent their so doing. And they told the committee that their constitutional scruples were of more importance than the improvements of their rivers and harbors. That is the reason why the South heretofore has not had all their rivers and harbors improved that they should have had, because their Representatives have been opposed to that policy.

It seems that they have changed their views, and I am gratified that they have done so. I believe that such means of improvement of water transportation is one of the most effectual for keeping transportation cheap and free throughout the land and preventing monopoly in the means of communication and freightage.

To my mind the message of the President was an appropriate one to make to this House. When I remember that in almost every annual message of the President he has directly called the attention of this House to the importance of legislating in favor of cheap modes of transportation by water and by land, when I recollect that he has called the attention of this House to three plans of water-communication from the Ohio River to the Atlantic and to the Gulf, and when I remember that in all his messages he has urged upon Congress the importance of improving the national water-courses and highways of the country, I cannot condemn his objections to appropriations which, in his judgment, may be for objects purely local and entirely unnecessary.

In view of the President's uniform recommendations in all his messages where he has referred to that subject, encouraging and inciting Congress to make proper appropriations to secure cheap transportation for the whole country, I think these strictures from the gentlemen who have spoken are unjust and unworthy of the occasion. But the habit of making these strictures is so strong, my friends on the other side of the House in their caucuses and in their own hearts have become so accustomed to condemn everything that is done by the President or by the republicans that I think they can hardly avoid it. When the President sent a message to this House, as it was his duty to do, to inform us that our legislation would prevent sufficient revenue being received for the ordinary expenditures of the Government, that message was criticised even more harshly than this has been; and so it is through all the legislation of this House.

Sir, I have no objection to gentlemen wearing out their lives in shouting for reform and retrenchment. I know they are wasting valuable time; I know they are exhausting their stalwart frames; I know they are running their minds into a series of charges and accusations unworthy of the American citizen; but it is their privilege and their right. The people will hear them for a moment and then turn them aside, and still let the father of the household manage his own affairs.

Mr. HOAR and Mr. RANDALL addressed the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I have not relinquished the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the gentleman to have the floor except for his own remarks. The Chair will gladly recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] for a moment. His endeavor is to parcel out the floor fairly.

Mr. CONGER. There was no limit to my time except the hour rule.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. Under the rules of the House when any member takes the floor he is entitled to it for one hour, unless he is speaking under some special limitation; and the Speaker cannot deprive him of this right. And under the rule, as it has been administered for many years, he has the right to yield any portion of his hour to any other member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes that rule; and he is inclined to be entirely fair toward both sides of the House; but the right to one hour for each speaker has not been claimed at all in this debate; and if the rule is resorted to, the Chair must decide that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is entitled to the floor, as he did not exhaust his time.

Mr. RANDALL. I think there need be no controversy between the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] and myself as to the occupancy of the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I think there can be no controversy between us; but I cannot assent to the idea that the Chair has a right to take a member off the floor before his hour has expired. The gentleman from Texas yielded the floor and sat down; the Chair recognized another gentleman in his own right; and now under what rule can the Chair deprive him of the right to give part of his hour to another member?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Texas had the right to the floor to call the previous question at the end of his hour, but by a sort of general consent had allowed the debate to run on.

Mr. HOAR. He yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has sent word to the Chair that he desires to move the previous question, and regards himself as holding the floor. Under these circumstances the Chair does not feel inclined to take the floor from him. Although he recognizes fully the rule as stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, he cannot see how the gentleman from Michigan can take from the gentleman from Texas during his hour the right to control the floor upon his own motion.

Mr. CONGER. I submit to the Chair that a member obtaining the floor has a right to it for one hour. I obtained the floor in my own right without any limitation from anybody; I asked nobody's consent; but the Chair recognized me.

Mr. HOAR. I will remind the Chair that much more than an hour has elapsed since the gentleman from Texas took the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HOAR. Since the gentleman from Texas took the floor and spoke, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] have spoken. More than an hour and a quarter must have elapsed.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not expect any extended debate on this motion. I only desired to state my opinion upon the question, and as soon as other members who might desire it had briefly expressed their views, I proposed to call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I hope that this may not come out of my hour. I either wish to go on myself or to yield to another gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman as entitled to an hour within the hour of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CONGER. That hour had terminated or nearly terminated when I took the floor

Mr. RANDALL. It was extended by common consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All gentlemen know that debates of this kind frequently proceed by common consent, and when there is no objection the Chair is not inclined to interfere; but if it becomes a question of right, the Chair must hold that the gentleman from Texas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I will yield a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and then I will ask to yield a moment to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done by common consent. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired; but if there is no objection the Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and then the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have the highest respect for the Chief Magistrate of the Union, and hence I feel very great regret when I find him falling into errors. In one portion of this message he distinctly implies, if he does not directly state, that by our legislation the collection of the revenues has been crippled, and that therefore the revenues may fall off during the coming year.

Now I want to state the fact that more than one-half of the revenue comes by receipts from customs, which in no wise whatever passes under the control of Congress so far as to make appropriations necessary for their collection.

Mr. KASSON. Yes, there is one to which the President alludes.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as that part of the revenue is concerned appropriation by Congress has nothing whatever to do with it, and therefore the President's complaint in that respect is entirely unfounded.

There is, however, in the appropriation bill something to do with the collection of internal revenue. In regard to the internal revenue the House recommended that the collection districts should be reduced to one hundred and five; the Senate raised the number to one hundred and thirty-one, but lest the Government should be embarrassed in the collection of the internal revenue the House receded from the number they had fixed at one hundred and five and conceded the number asked by the Department, one hundred and thirty-one, which the Senate insisted upon.

The House conferees also consented to a very considerable addition to the amount as fixed by the House committee and the House in connection with the pay of collectors and deputy collectors of internal revenue, and further as to pay of storekeepers, gaugers, and other officers employed in the other branch. Therefore I wish to say to this House that I do not believe any of the conferees on this or the other side of the House or of the Senate will consider that we have embarrassed in any degree whatever the collection of the internal revenue.

Mr. REAGAN. My colleague on the Committee on Commerce from Massachusetts [Mr. PIERCE] desires a few minutes, and I therefore yield to him.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I cordially approve of the position which the President assumes in his message just laid before the House, and admire the manliness and courage which induced him to send it to the House. He only occupies the position uniformly taken heretofore by previous Administrations in reference to appropriations for river and harbor improvements.

Now, sir, the only authority controlling his action is to be found in the first section, which provides that "the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the repair, preservation, construction, and completion of the following public works hereinafter named." There is nothing mandatory in that provision. It does not say that he shall spend a single dollar upon any one of the works provided for in the bill. If in his judgment any appropriation is wasteful, extravagant, or a useless expenditure of the public money, then he need not expend it. Indeed, if he expended any of the amount appropriated for any workdeemed by him to be wasteful, extravagant, or useless, he would be guilty of wrong-doing, and I will say to my democratic friends he would then deserve condemnation.

He is only doing his duty when he says that he will not spend a single dollar of this money, when he is satisfied such expenditure will result in no good whatever. Nor does he claim in his message the right to divert any of this money appropriated for a given object to any other object. He simply says that if he believes the object for which it has been appropriated is not a fit object then he will not expend the money, but will let it lie in the Treasury for the future action of Congress.

I remember in the examination of this river and harbor bill in the Committee on Commerce various instances in which the Engineer Department reported that the sum appropriated could not be used to advantage, and therefore they did not use it at all, and that the money was permitted to remain in the Treasury. The President has simply announced to Congress that he will follow what has always heretofore been the practice of the Engineer Department.

I may be permitted to say here that the preparation of a river and harbor bill is one of the most difficult pieces of work which can be confided to any number of members of this House. The Committee on Commerce is constantly approached by perhaps two hundred members of this House, urging upon them appropriations for various localities in the country, and it has sometimes seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, as though they left their consciences outside of the committee-room. [Laughter.] It is, therefore, with the greatest difficulty such an appropriation bill is framed, and I do not believe there has ever been passed by this House any bill which did not contain some items which ought not to have been included. I believe there are some such items in this bill, but, on the whole, it is a better bill than most of those which have been heretofore passed through this House. When I consider how this bill was made up, how the committee was importuned by members of the House to make appropriations for this little river and that little harbor, I feel that it is of the utmost importance to sustain the President in the position he has assumed, which is simply the position the Engineer Department has always held and acted upon, that if there are any appropriations useless and extravagant, and which will accomplish no good whatever, he will not authorize the expenditure of the public money for that purpose, but will allow it to remain in the Treasury so that Congress may review their action at the next session. We ought not to forget that we are to meet here again in less than four months, and that no harm can be done by any such action, but that, on the contrary, a considerable sum of money may be saved if the President fearlessly carries out the policy which he has indicated in his message.

Mr. REAGAN. Before calling the previous question I desire to occupy just a single minute in responding to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the time of the gentleman from Texas expired several minutes ago. Objection not having been made, the Chair supposed the debate was proceeding by unanimous consent; but unanimous consent has only been given to the two gentlemen who have now spoken; and, unless by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Texas cannot longer retain the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to occupy not more than one minute in responding to the gentleman from Michigan.

There was no objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say that if the President had made the objections to the bill which the gentleman from Michigan made he had a perfect right to do so. It was not complained that he objected to items in the bill that ought not to be appropriated. The complaint was that he declared that a law passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by himself would be just so far executed as to his private judgment it seemed fit it should be executed.

The gentleman from Michigan asked me a question to which he desired an answer, whether there was any appropriation in Texas that would be affected? I am very glad to be able to say, as the gentleman from Michigan also knows, that we have no appropriation there except for works which are confessedly national, unless it be for Cypress Bayou, which is a work for which appropriations have heretofore been made by the Government under the sanction of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] as chairman of the Committee on Commerce. The others are all works on tide-water, and confessedly national. It was because there are no works in my State that are at all affected that I felt free to call attention to the assumption by the President of a right to regard or disregard at his pleasure an act of Congress approved by himself.

I now ask the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to say that I think the Speaker misunderstood the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] That gentleman said he would yield a few moments to one other gentleman, and then he would yield to the gentleman from Iowa. The Speaker said: "The gentleman from Massachusetts;" and I was not disposed to interfere with the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeding. I desire, however, five minutes to speak to a single point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that that was the arrangement; but he will willingly recognize the gentleman from Iowa if it was arranged that he should have unanimous consent to speak.

Mr. KASSON. Five minutes are probably enough.

The single point to which I wish to call attention is the charge made by the gentleman from West Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that the President has assumed an unconstitutional authority in the message which he has sent. If gentlemen will observe the careful language of the President, any such impression I am sure will disappear, and even the gentleman from West Virginia will regret the illustration with which he commenced his address to the House when he made the comparison between the President and a person exercising imperial authority.

Mr. HEREFORD. Did the President not say in one of his messages that our Constitution was similar to that of the German Empire? Does the gentleman deny that?

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from West Virginia compared the President to an officer exercising the authority of the Emperor of Germany. Let us see. The President says in his message:

> If it was obligatory on the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress, I should return the river and harbor bill with my objections.

Thus the President assumes that it is not obligatory on him to spend all the money appropriated, and, resting upon that hypothesis, he declares that he will exercise his authority as an executive officer of the Government, directing the Secretary of War so to disburse these moneys that no part of them shall be expended on objects of private or local interest, or, in other words, which are unconstitutional. Now, sir, does this bill compel the President by force of law, ex vi termini, to expend each of these sums on each of these places? If it does, and if such an act is constitutional, then the President has proposed to violate the Constitution. But, sir, the entire precedents of this Government, to which my honorable friend from Massachusetts referred, are against this proposition. In most instances the year expires with a balance in the Treasury. In some cases the expenditure is found to be a mere waste and is stopped; and more than that, the language of the bill is not mandatory on the President, but simply appropriates for various purposes a maximum sum of money and nowhere tells the President that he must spend it on each one or spend all of it; so that on the bill, without the Constitution, there is nothing which prevents the President from taking that position. But let us see further. Suppose the gentleman from West Virginia was right and the President violates the Constitution by not spending the money, we will say for example, for a survey of "Towne Creek, Monroe County, Mississippi," or for the improvement of the "Etowah River near Thompson's bridge," Georgia, or of "Murder Kill Creek," or of "Mispillion Creek." We will take Mispillion Creek, as for that there is some money to be expended. Suppose the President should not spend it all; for what will the gentleman impeach him? He will come next session, if he is here, and impeach the President of high crimes and misdemeanors, and he will specify what the high crimes and misdemeanors are, to wit, that whereas he might have expended $15,000 on this Mispillion Creek he only expended $5,000 on it, and left $10,000 in the Treasury; and therefore he will present articles of impeachment against him to the Senate of the United States for high crimes and misdemeanors!

Mr. DURHAM. Will the gentleman look at the paragraph of the bill beginning at line 544, in regard to the duty of the President and Secretary of War under this bill?

Mr. KASSON. I have not so many lines in my copy of the bill. Does the gentleman have Laurel Creek, Kentucky, in his bill?

Mr. DURHAM. No, sir; that was stricken out. I again ask the gentleman to look at line 544 of the bill, where the duty of the Secretary of War in the expenditure of these moneys is prescribed.

Mr. KASSON. I will answer the gentleman. Where the work can be done by contract, the Secretary is required to cause it to be done by contract; that relates to the mode of doing the work.

Mr. DURHAM. But the whole power is given to the Secretary of War, and the President has no power to control it.

Mr. KASSON. And the work is to be given to the lowest bidder under that section. The gentleman says that the Secretary of War must do it, because wherever it is required by law that the work shall be done by contract he is required to let it. I will say that President Grant, in case the Secretary failed in his duty, would stand where President Jackson stood, and will say, "I took the oath to support the Constitution as I understand it, and if the Secretary of War stands in the way of the observance of the Constitution I will turn him out as Jackson did Duane, when he put Taney in the Treasury, and will appoint some man who will observe the Constitution."

These are the points touching which I wanted to show, first, that there is nothing in the bill that requires the President to spend all the money appropriated for any one place or for all the places; and second, that under the Constitution he is not compelled to spend money for an unconstitutional purpose simply because a certain sum is appropriated for it. We have just appropriated $60,000 for extra clerical service in our Executive Departments. Suppose they do not spend it all; will you impeach the Executive for not spending the whole of it?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Texas to allow me a single word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has no longer a right to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I merely wish to protest against the assumption that the Executive is bound to expend the money appropriated by Congress, and especially in a bill of this character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist that the gentleman is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for one moment

No objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is clear that if the Executive or the Engineer Department of the Army discovers that an appropriation of money has been made for an object purely local; having no national importance whatever; not designed to promote the national commerce of the country, that that money ought not to be expended.

Mr. REAGAN. That question is not in debate here. Nobody is insisting on any such thing. The gentleman is discussing an abstract proposition, and not the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is clear that money cannot be appropriated constitutionally for purely local objects; it can only be appropriated and applied to the promotion of the general commerce of the country.

Mr. KASSON. Then you stand by the President?

Mr. HOLMAN. I stand by that doctrine.

Mr. KASSON. And by the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been the doctrine of the dominant party in this House in all its past history.

Mr. KASSON. It is the doctrine of the President now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the Constitution we have no right to appropriate a single dollar for local purposes.

Mr. HEREFORD. I say to the gentleman that if that was the doctrine of the party I would uphold it nowhere. [Loud cries of "Order!" and "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to have my own time, and I will occupy the balance of it. [Cries of "Time is up!" and "Regular order!"] I only wish to say that this bill is of the same class of bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors that have passed during the last five years. I have been here all that time protesting against appropriations of money for purely local purposes, and during that period I have voted, I believe, for but a single one of that class of bills.

Mr. HEREFORD. The gentleman sustains the imperial power of the President. [Loud cries of "Order," "Regular order."]

Mr. REAGAN. I insist on the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the message of the President was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the message was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 131, noes 36.

Mr. BANNING called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at eight o'clock.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their Clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House to print additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to the petition of real-estate owners in the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill to repeal part of section 5 of an act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue, approved July 19, 1876.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not inquired, and no vote has been taken which shows that fact.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to proceeding with business unless a quorum is present, and for the purpose of testing the question I move that the House take a recess until nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BANNING. I would like to offer a bill in the first place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, in order to ascertain if there is a quorum present, may either move to take a recesss or demand a count of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a count on my motion to take a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask for tellers.

Mr. EAMES. Pending that motion I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to state a fact in reference to legislation. In the Senate to-day an objection has been made under their rules to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, which compels it to go over until to-morrow, as I understand. [Cries of "What of that?"] It is better perhaps that I should modify my motion and propose that we should take a recess until nine o'clock this evening.

Mr. BANNING. I would like to state a fact with reference to legislation. I have in my hand a bill asked for by the President providing for an addition of twenty-five hundred men to the Army, in order to aid in the Indian war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot hear that at this time.

Mr. PAGE. I am credibly informed that the Senate will be ready to adjourn at twelve o'clock to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will modify his motion so as to make it a recess until nine o'clock this evening.

Mr. RANDALL. I have already modified my motion so as to make the recess until nine o'clock to-night.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be permitted to inform the House of the condition of the public business and as to when we shall probably be able to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection the gentleman from Pennsylvania will make the statement.

No objection was made.

Mr. RANDALL. From the information which I gather from Senators I do not believe it is possible that the Senate will be ready to adjourn before to-morrow at twelve o'clock; but out of abundant caution I have modified my proposition so that we shall take the recess until nine o'clock this evening that we may learn with more certainty whether an early adjournment on the part of the Senate can be arrived at. I therefore insist on my motion for a recess.

Mr. PAGE. And I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I call for tellers.

Mr. PAGE. I do not see why the gentleman from Pennsylvania should undertake to clog the progress of public business.

The question was taken on Mr. RANDALL's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 62, noes 59; no quorum voting.

Mr. PAGE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Mr. BANNING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 27 members voting therefor, (being more than one-fifth of the last vote.)

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 58, nays 83, not voting 145; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, Bradford, Bright, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Forney, Ganse, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartzell, Haymond, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Holman, House, Joyce, Kehr, Levy, Lewis, Mackey, Magoon, Maish, McMahon, Morrison, New, Payne, Poppleton, Randall, Reagan, Riddle, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Whitthorne, Willard, James Williams, and Jeremiah N. Williams—58.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Boone, Bradley, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, Clymer, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Douglas, Durand, Eames, Felton, Finley, Franklin, Goode, Goodin, Henderson, Henkle, Hereford, Hopkins, Hunton, Hyman, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Lord, Luttrell, Lynch, McCrary, McDill, Money, Monroe, Mutchler, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Piper, Potter, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Roberts, Sampson, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Spencer, Springer, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Erastus Wells, White, Whiting, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Young—83.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Caswell, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynde, MacDougall, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Morgan, Nash, Neal, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Martin I. Townsend, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—145.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. VANCE, is confined to his room by indisposition.

Mr. COOK. My colleague from Georgia, Mr. SMITH, is detained at his room by severe illness.

Mr. STEVENSON. My colleagues, General ANDERSON and Judge CAMPBELL, are absent by leave of the House.

Upon the announcement of the vote as above recorded

Mr. RANDALL said: No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, no business is in order except to adjourn or a motion that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BANNING. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 88, noes 35.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has the floor on the unfinished business. I suppose there will be no objection to his proceeding with his remarks even if there be no quorum present. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the call of the House be withdrawn, and that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] be allowed to proceed.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The clerk proceeded to call the roll; when the following members failed to respond to their names:

Messrs. Adams, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Caswell, Chapin, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynde, MacDougall, McFarland, Meade, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Martin I. Townsend, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—126.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk reports that one hundred and sixty members have responded to their names; more than a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that all proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now take a recess for a half an hour.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise to make a report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to submit a report from a committee of conference.

PARTITION OF REAL ESTATE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LAWRENCE submitted the following report; which was read by the Clerk:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 3168 entitled "An act relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia," respectfully report that they have met, and after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate; and agree to the same, with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "may," in line 3 of said amendment, and insert "in the discretion of the court be compelled in any court of competent jurisdiction to make or suffer partition of such estate or estates. In proceedings for partition all persons in interest shall be made parties in the same manner as in cases of equity jurisdiction. And in proceedings for partition under this act the court may, in addition to the powers herein conferred, exercise such powers as are or may be conferred by virtue of the general equity jurisdiction of the court."

"SEC. 2. That the court in all cases in decreeing partition, may, if it satisfactorily appears that said lands, tenements, or any estate or interest cannot be divided without loss or injury to the parties interested, decree a sale thereof and a division of the money arising from such sale among the parties according to their respective rights and interests.

"SEC. 3. That in all such sales, unless the court shall, by special order, direct or require, for good cause shown, that the sale be made for cash, the purchase-money shall be payable, one-third on the day of sale, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years thereafter, with interest; the deferred payments to be secured to the parties according to their respective interests, by good and sufficient mortgage upon the premises so sold, which shall be subject to the approval of the court."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
SCOTT LORD,
GEORGE F. HOAR,
Managers on the part of the House.

FRED. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
J. W. STEVENSON,
T. O. HOWE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to hear some explanation of this report.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I presume it is not necessary to make any extended statement in regard to this report. The original bill providing for the partition of real estate in the District of Columbia was passed by the House and sent to the Senate, where it was amended in matters not very material except the addition of a prvoision that sales in partition proceedings, unless otherwise ordered, should be for one-third cash in hand and the balance in deferred payments of one and two years, with interest.

The bill coming back to the House, the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate and asked for a committee of conference. The committee of conference has unanimously agreed upon this report, there having been no objection to the report as it stands from any member of the committee. It has been agreed to by the Senate. It has been submitted to members of the bar of the District of Columbia and meets their approval. I suppose there is no objection to it from any quarter. I hope the House will agree to the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BANKS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has the floor on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to reconsider the vote by which the President's message in regard to the sundry civil appropriation bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PAGE. Was not that laid on the table to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not.

[Mr. BANKS addressed the House on the bill to utilize the products of gold and silver mines. His speech will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. KASSON and Mr. SPRINGER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] served notice that he would during the session of to-day, if he could obtain the floor, move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and the Chair, therefore, recognizes him to test the sense of the House upon that question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not wish to deprive any gentleman who desires to discuss this question of the opportunity of doing so, but I did intend to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table for the purpose of getting the motion out of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. We shall probably be compelled to remain here until to-morrow, and there is one gentleman I know of who desires to speak on this question, and if the gentleman from Illinois would postpone his motion that gentleman might be enabled to go on.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] desires to discuss the question, I will yield to him.

Mr. KASSON. I believe I am next in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do; and I yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. DURHAM. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois has not the floor to parcel it out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is perfectly correct, and the point of order is well taken; he must either occupy the floor with his motion or not at all.

Mr. WADDELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 84, noes 45.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Before the announcement of the vote, Mr. REA was granted an indefinite leave of absence from to-morrow.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House, of the papers in the case of Peter D. Rank, no adverse report having been made.

On motion of Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of M. S. Mephum, W. Mephum, and A. H. Shaw, of Saint Louis, Missouri, asking compensation for the loss of the steamboat Jimmie.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 897) granting a pension to Andrew Evarts; and

An act (H. R. No. 4085) to repeal part of an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," approved July 19, 1876.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to inquire——

[Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore then announced the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. I call for tellers if gentlemen will not hear the request I have to make, which is simply that instead of an adjournment a recess be taken.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. We are tired of waiting the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. BANNING and Mr. HANCOCK called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BANNING. Before the question is put on the yeas and nays——

Mr. DURHAM. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain anything but the regular order.

Mr. BANNING. I think there will be no objection.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore The regular order is now demanded, and that is objection sufficient.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; only 20 members voting therefor.

Mr. FORT. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WADDELL and Mr. BANNING were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 55.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not in order to move to suspend the rules?

Mr. RANDALL. Was that a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not require a quorum to adjourn or refuse to adjourn, [cries of "Regular order!"] so the Chair will recognize on the regular order the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who claims the floor.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa cannot parcel out the floor to any one.

Mr. ATKINS. I shall object to the gentleman from Iowa yielding to any one at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already so objected.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to inquire whether there will be objection if I yield the floor for a motion to adjourn or to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] to report a bill for the protection of the frontier?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRADFORD. I object.

Mr. KASSON. Then I will proceed with what I have to say, and will endeavor to dispose of this motion, so that the gentleman from Ohio may be in order. I regret to introduce what I have to say in the presence of the fact of an objection coming from that side of the House which is detrimental to the public interest, as the objection to the reporting of the bill from the Military Committee of this House designing to save the Army from further destruction and our frontier settlements from pillage and plunder and slaughter by the Indians.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not in order for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] to move to suspend the rules and pass his bill? This is Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order while the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] holds the floor.

Mr. PAGE. But if that gentleman yields the floor would it not be in order for the gentleman from Ohio to move to suspend the rules and put his bill on its passage?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] chooses to yield the floor he can do so, and the Chair will then recognize whom he may see fit. But the Chair does not propose that the gentleman from Iowa or any other gentleman shall assign the floor, that being the province of the Chair.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ATKINS. My parliamentary inquiry is, Has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] the right to discuss military matters at this time? There is no question of that sort now before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair regards that as scarcely a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ATKINS. I make the inquiry, and with all due deference to the Chair I think it is a proper parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider, upon which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] holds the floor, opens up the subject to a wide range of debate. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] knows as well as the Chair knows that on such motions there is always wide latitude of debate. The gentleman from Iowa certainly cannot trespass upon any rights of members. But the Chair cannot determine what shall be the line of his remarks.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, if all the parliamentary inquiries of gentlemen have been answered, I will once more endeavor to proceed with what I have to say.

My honorable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made an elaborate speech to-day, embracing many tables, many figures, and a great deal of mathematics. He was followed by my able and honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] with counter-tables of correct figures and better mathematics. I do not propose to go into the mathematical questions which were debated by those two gentlemen. I will say, however, that my friend from Pennsylvania in his figures often reminded me of a remark once made in my hearing. One said that no doubt the old maxim that "two and two make four" was absolutely true. But said he, two and two also make twenty-two; and that was what he could not understand. Now it depends upon the manner in which you arrange your figures as to what they will make. I think I may say, without doing any injustice to the gentleman, that one 2 was put after the other 2, instead of under it, in many places by my honorable friend from Pennsylvania.

In the course of that gentleman's remarks he expressed his desire that ere long we might have an Executive who would be in harmony with his side of the House, and he promised great things in the way of reform should such an Executive be elected. Availing myself of the accustomed liberty of debate on a motion of this kind, I propose now, as briefly as I may, to inquire which of the two parties have offered a candidate for Chief Executive of the country who, if elected, would be most likely to gratify the people in their aspirations for an honest and loyal Government and reform.

I will first ask whether the candidate supported by my honorable friend from Pennsylvania is that Executive by whom the people may expect their honest aspirations to be realized? Who is Samuel J. Tilden, and what is his record?

"THE CANDIDATE IS THE PLATFORM."

Prior to his nomination at Saint Louis we often heard the phrase that "the candidate will be the platform." Is the democracy of this House and of the country willing to accept that maxim and apply it to their candidate?

I need not say that during the last few years, since 1860, this Government has been partially remodeled. The masses of the northern people have become possessed of new desires and new principles; and those principles yet remain deeply ingrained in their hearts, as deeply, I trust, as they were at the time Ohio gave 100,000 majority against a colleague of Mr. Tilden in the convention at Chicago in 1864—Mr. Vallandigham, of Ohio.

What, then, has been the record of Mr. Tilden in respect to the issues which will be presented to the people of this country in the course of the pending canvass? What was his position in 1860 touching the fundamental doctrine upon which the battles for the Union were fought, the perpetual unity of the nation, for which on our side so many hundred thousands of men shed their blood or laid down their lives? Was Mr. Tilden in harmony with the Union sentiment of the country? Was he in harmony with the sentiment of the country which sustained the war? Did he urge the people to sustain the Union? Did he urge the filling of our armies? Did he censure the secession movement out of which the war grew? Is he anywhere or anyhow upon the record as the strong friend of the Union in its time of danger?

MR. TILDEN AS A SECESSIONIST.

In 1860 Mr. Tilden wrote a letter, under date of October 12, to Hon. William Kent, then a democratic elector for the State of New York, in which he said:

> The masters of political science who constructed our system preserved the State governments as bulwarks for the freedom of individuals and localities against oppression from centralized power. They recognized no right of constitutional secession; but they left revolution organized when it should be demanded by the public opinion of a State; left it with power to snap the tie of confederation as a nation might break a treaty, and to repel coercion as a nation might repel invasion. They caused us to depend in a great measure upon the public opinion of the States in order to maintain a confederated Union.

Again he said:

> Especially is this true of a compact of confederation between the States, where there can be no common arbiter invested with authorities and powers equally capable with those which courts possess between individuals for determining and enforcing a just construction and execution of the instrument.

Here, then, in 1860 we find upon the written record of Mr. Tilden a declaration that this was a confederation of States instead of a Union; that the States by their own action could "snap the tie." After that, in 1860 and 1861, the South acted upon his declaration of doctrine and proceeded to "snap the tie," supported clearly by the doctrines then enunciated by Samuel J. Tilden, whom they now seek to make President of the United States and of the restored Union. Calhoun was not stronger nor Buchanan weaker than this. It was the identical doctrine adopted by Buchanan when he denied the power to coerce the rebellious States, and left them to organize armies and batter down the walls of our forts. Nobody claimed the right to secede by the terms of the Constitution. They only claimed that the Constitution "left" them with such a right.

MR. TILDEN AS AN OPPONENT OF THE WAR FOR THE UNION IN 1863.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in February, 1863, we once more hear from Mr. Tilden upon these doctrines that connect themselves with the question of the Union. There was a conference called at Delmonico's, in the city of New York, and of that conference Mr. Tilden was a member. The members of it were all known throughout the war as copperheads. In that conference in February, 1863, they organized a Society for the Diffusion of Political Knowledge. I myself received month after month the issues of that society, of which Mr. Tilden was one of the organizers and members. In their declarations they took secession ground. They assailed the Government of the Union; they urged a counter-sentiment against the work going on in the war for the maintenance of the Union. They endeavored to terrify the people touching the destruction of the Constitution, which they charged against the government of Mr. Lincoln. They did everything except support the country and maintain our nationality one and indivisible. They argued constantly against the right of the Union Government to save the nation by the power of arms and discouraged the loyal people in their struggle in their darkest hours, before the sunburst of our victories at Vicksburgh and Gettysburgh.

This was the first half of 1863. I will not stop to read extracts from those articles, which showed clearly the object of the society and the influence they were designed to exert; but I will call to the minds of gentlemen that this society organized in February, 1863, and commencing immediately afterward their publications, was followed by those fearful and bloody riots in the city of New York in the succeeding month of July.

We thus far find Governor Tilden commencing as a secessionist and proceeding as an encourager of the disunionists, embarrassing the operations of the Government, and endeavoring to sow the seeds of secession broadcast in this country by means of this "Society for the Diffusion of Political Knowledge."

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KASSON. On this point?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Governor Tilden was a secessionist and disunionist in 1863?

Mr. KASSON. I tell the gentleman that he wrote that secession doctrine which I have read, in a letter to Hon. William Kent in 1860. I tell him that Governor Tilden was a member of that Society for the Diffusion of Political Knowledge, of which the literature was all copperhead and all discouraging to the war. Is the gentleman answered?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir. Does the gentleman say that Governor Tilden was a secessionist and a disunionist in 1863?

Mr. KASSON. I say what I have said upon the record. The gentleman may consider it as exhibiting him as a disunionist or he may consider it as the highest exposition of loyal Union sentiment. I only know that in my part of the western country, and in the State of Illinois, such doctrines were met with denunciation, and men hid their heads behind the blackberry bushes when they uttered them. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will not assert and does not assert and dare not assert that Governor Tilden was ever a secessionist or disunionist.

Mr. KASSON. I dare assert exactly what I have asserted, and let the gentleman deny it if he can.

Mr. SPRINGER. I deny it, sir; and every man will deny it who knows anything about the history of the country. [Applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. KASSON. I refer you to the record.

Mr. SPRINGER. Governor Tilden never was a secessionist or a disunionist, and the gentleman from Iowa knows it.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Where was the gentleman from Iowa during the war?

Mr. KASSON. I will tell the gentleman where I was during the war. I was on this floor passing appropriation bills to maintain the Army which fought the men you supported and with whom you are acting. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot consent to the continuance of these demonstrations of applause or dissent upon the floor of the House. They are unparliamentary; and the Chair hopes they will not be repeated.

A MEMBER. They came from the galleries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If repeated in the galleries, the galleries will be cleared. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed in order; and gentlemen upon the floor will not interrupt him without his consent.

Mr. KASSON. And at another time I was taking care of the records of this Government, which were threatened by men coming over from Virginia to take possession of the city of Washington and haul down the Union flag and trample it under their feet, as they recently did in the State of Virginia and in one or two other States of this Union on the 4th of July last. That is the work which some of us were engaged in; while others, more fortunate perhaps in obtaining honors, were gallantly fighting the enemy at the front with Rutherford B. Hayes.

MR. TILDEN IN 1864 DECLARING THE WAR A FAILURE.

Now where was Governor Tilden in 1864 when the convention met that nominated McClellan? He was at the convention at Chicago with Vallandigham, representing the State of New York upon the committee on resolutions, a member of the committee on the platform which declared this war to have been a failure. Let me give the exact words. I send them to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the resolution then adopted and it will show where Governor Tilden was in 1864, following out the theory upon which he acted in 1860 and 1863.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this convention does explicitly declare, as the sense of the American people, that, after four years of failure to restore the Union by the experiment of war, during which, under the pretense of a military necessity or war power higher than the Constitution, the Constitution itself has been disregarded in every part, and public liberty and private right alike trodden down, and the material prosperity of the country essentially impaired, justice, humanity, liberty, and the public welfare demand that immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities, with a view to an ultimate convention of the States, or other peaceable means, to the end that, at the earliest practicable moment, peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal States.

Mr. KASSON. Thus, Mr. Speaker, you find him uniting in reporting from the committee on the platform that resolution declaring the war a failure, assailing the government of Mr. Lincoln, denouncing the administration for the manner in which they were carrying on the war, and asking the American people to condemn it, as they are going to ask them again in November next, but with a result in the former case well known in the history of this country. The people put their foot upon the platform. They put their foot upon the men who stood upon the platform; and they will put their foot, as long as loyalty to the Union and Constitution is respected, upon the men who have not changed their faith, but still dare to come before them and ask their suffrages.

Mr. HEREFORD. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa whether the people put their foot upon General McClellan who headed their Army?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from New York says any fact I have stated is not correct I will yield to him.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask whether the gentleman from Iowa does not know as a matter of fact that Governor Tilden as a member of that committee voted against that resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I will answer the gentleman that as far as the record goes I know the contrary. Mr. Guthrie, who was on that committee, stated, in speaking of their not being ready, that it was in the hands of a subcommittee for revision, but the general committee were unanimous in their views. Mr. Tilden followed Mr. Guthrie in the declaration, "I wish to add that upon the adjournment of the general committee there was no dissent among the members." That is my answer to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Governor Tilden voted against that esolution.

Mr. KASSON. Further evidence publicly given of Mr. Tilden's concurrence appears in the published reports of that convention:

Mr. Brown, of Delaware, one of the committee, said:

There is not the slightest dissension among us. We have been a unit from the first.

Mr. Weller, of California, said:

The subcommittee have agreed upon the only portion of the platform which by any possibility can divide this party. We are all in favor of peace, and the only difference of opinion is as to the phraseology to be used in making that declaration.

Mr. Smith, of Wisconsin, added to the general testimony upon this point, as follows:

There is no difference in the committee except upon mere matters of expression.

Mr. McKeon, of New York, explained the cause of delay as originating with Mr. Vallandigham, who wanted the language of the resolution changed, not because it was too strong, but because it was not strong enough to suit him. Finally the resolution was reported from the subcommittee to the committee, and from the committee to the convention, and was adopted without the dissent of a single member of the committee openly expressed in convention.

As to the platform adopted, there is no power unless they raise the dead, who are Guthrie and Vallandigham; no power that is able to prove the contrary of the unpatriotic record.

The further proof I cite is this: that when it was presented to the convention not a syllable of dissent was expressed by Tilden, who was a member of that committee when it came before the convention. And now shall gentlemen go into the secret operations of the committee, unknown to the public, against this evidence, and say he dissented from it in committee? Why if he loved the Union did he not rise like a man who loved his country and dared to hold a patriotic opinion, why did he not rise when it came into the convention and say, "I cannot accept that insult to the Army and to this country? The gallant soldiers at the front are fighting in the hope that the people behind them will sustain them. I will not support that clause of the platform, and I will not support the man who stands upon it." Shall I answer why he did not do it? Because of his doctrines of 1860 and 1863. Because he dared not oppose southern sympathizers. Because, as a politician, he inherits the compromising, evasive character of Martin Van Buren. I suppose 10,000 men in this country when they read his letter of acceptance said, "Martin Van Buren over again." Words to disguise thoughts, phrases to disguise principles, sentences with a double meaning, and he had not the courage to avow in the open convention the opinion, if he ever entertained it, which is attributed to him by my honorable friend from New York.

MR. TILDEN'S RECORD OF WHAT HE DID NOT DO FOR THE UNION.

Here in 1860, in 1863, and in 1864, we have the positive record of the position of Governor Tilden on these fundamental questions. The negative record is more convincing still. Where is the speech he made in the great city of New York to support the war? Where is the speech he made to encourage the soldier? Where is the speech he made to sustain the government of Mr. Lincoln in the days of its trials? Where is the speech he made to denounce the attempt of foreign governments to aid in the breaking up of this Union?

Where is the voice, I ask gentlemen on both sides of the House, and I will ask the whole country through this House, where is the voice shown by any record that that gentleman ever uttered for his country in the time of its peril? (A pause.) Nobody replies.

Mr. HOUSE rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. KASSON. If he rises to produce a public declaration of Governor Tilden in support of the war for the Union, I yield to him.

Mr. HOUSE. I want to ask the gentleman a question in regard to what he has just had read.

Mr. KASSON. Do you propose to give me that information?

Mr. HOUSE. I am asking the gentleman to give me some information.

Mr. KASSON. I have already given you a great deal, and I will give you more if you will be seated.

Mr. HOUSE. I only desire to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa declines to be interrupted.

Mr. KASSON. This is his record, positive and negative, during the war for the Union which closed in 1865. I might stop here and ask any soldier in the United States whom he urged to go to the war to vote for him. I might ask the relatives of any dead soldier whom he comforted for their loss and encouraged with the hope that the sacrifice was for the preservation of the Union to vote for him. I might call upon the fund to answer for him to which he ever personally contributed for the like purposes. But, Mr. Speaker, the positive and negative evidence, considered separately or together, is ample to maintain the proposition I have made, that his principles, his heart, and his action were not with the effort to save the Union; that neither his judgment nor his heart was with the soldiers who fought for the Union, and that no man who ever wore the blue can come to the polls and cast his vote for him without reflecting upon the memory of the dead who died for that cause.

Mr. Speaker, I search this question so particularly because I maintain that deep down in the hearts of the people of the Union States, the war democrats as well as the republicans, there is a deep and affectionate regard for the men who helped them in the time of trouble and of peril; and a deep and lasting censure for the men who withheld their hand, their voice, their heart, their vote from the good cause for which they fought and for which so many perished. It is a profound and honorable instinct of patriotism, which ought to be maintained for the security of the nation in the future as well as a grateful recognition of patriotic action in the past.

MR. TILDEN AS A "REFORMER."

Now, sir, I ask what is the record of this same gentleman as a "reformer" that should lead my honorable friend from Pennsylvania to offer his prayer and aspiration that he might have an opportunity to work in harmony with him in another Congress? We are not without a record on this point. There have been certain political associations of that gentleman in the past and some public action which is known to the world. In 1868 he was chairman of a committee of which William M. Tweed was an active and efficient member, and at that time a circular was sent out over his signature as chairman, which is so significant upon this question of reform that I wish to secure the attention of the House for a few moments while I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows;

[Private and strictly confidential.]

ROOMS OF DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE,
October 27, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Please at once to communicate with some reliable person in three or four principal towns and in each city of your county, and request him (expenses duly arranged for this end) to telegraph to William M. Tweed, Tammany Hall, at the minute of closing the polls, not waiting for the count, such person's estimate of the vote.

Let the telegraph be as follows:

"This town will show a democratic gain (or loss) over last year of (number;) or this one if sufficiently certain: This town will give a republican (or democratic) majority of ——."

There is, of course, an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, but not longer waiting. Opportunity can be taken of the usual half-hour lull in the telegraphic communications over lines before actual results begin to be declared, and before the Associated Press absorb the telegraph with returns and interfere with individual messages; and give orders to watch carefully the count.

Very truly, yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN, Chairman.

Mr. KASSON. "An important object is to be attained"——

Mr. CLYMER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. KASSON. For what purpose?

Mr. CLYMER. To ask him a question. Does he not know that Mr. Tilden has pronounced this circular to be without his authority? And does he not know that he has said solemnly that he had never signed it and never knew anything about it?

Mr. KASSON. I do happen to know certain facts about it which I should be as willing to state, and intended to state without a question being put to me, as with it.

Mr. CLYMER. Does the gentleman not know that that is a forgery; that Mr. Tilden never authorized it to be issued, and never saw it before it was issued?

Mr. KASSON. I understand that question distinctly, and I am glad the question has been put; for otherwise I should have volunteered to answer it. He was in association on that committee with William M. Tweed. He, this reformer, had previously received a contribution of $5,000 from William M. Tweed, his associate on committee, for election purposes: and this circular was sent out with Mr. Tilden's signature attached, as it is alleged by Tweed, an active member of committee, and not by the chairman. This was in 1868, and in 1873, five years after, Mr. Tilden, so far as I know, is first heard from in a pamphlet, which he published, denying that it was his signature, and asserting that it was put there without his consent.

Mr. COX. I have a letter from Mr. Tilden in 1868 denying that under his own hand and seal. I ask to have it put in the RECORD along with that falsehood.

Mr. KASSON. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. COX. Of course not.

Mr. KASSON. I have learned how to appreciate all these private suggestions——

Mr. COX. I desire to have it in the RECORD.

Mr. KASSON. That does not go into my speech till I know what it is.

Mr. CLYMER. It ought to go into the gentleman's speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa must not be interrupted except with his own permission.

Mr. COX. Of course not; I am not interrupting him.

Mr. KASSON. The course pursued by gentlemen on the other side of the House is exactly characteristic of their leader, Governor Tilden. They evade responsibility for action by disclaiming words. There was no time prior to 1873 or prior to the exposure of Tweed, so far as I know, that Governor Tilden ever came out with this disclaimer.

Mr. CLYMER. In 1868 he did it.

Mr. KASSON. That was when the governorship had been already stolen from the people of the State by this gigantic fraud which startled two continents and put the democratic governor into the gubernatorial chair of New York, to the exclusion of Griswold and as successor of Governor Dix; a fraud perpetrated at least by some of the committee of which he was chairman.

Now there is one witness whom I quote against all the private letters and all the private adherents of Mr. Tilden, because his character has been indorsed by the democrats of the whole country for the high office of the Presidency of the United States. Horace Greeley said this to Mr. Tilden on the very point we are now discussing:

> You hold a most responsible and influential position in the counsels of a great party. You could make that party content itself with polling legal votes if you only would. In our late constitutional convention I tried to erect some fresh barriers against election frauds. Did you? The very little that I was enabled to effect in this direction I shall try to have ratified by the people at our ensuing election. Will you? Mr. Tilden, you cannot escape responsibility by saying with the guilty Macbeth:
>
> "Thou canst not say I did it: never shake > Thy gory locks at me,"
>
> for you were at least a passive accomplice in the giant frauds of last November.

But, says the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] Mr. Tilden in 1868 did say, "Thou canst not say I did it," and shook his gory locks after the fact accomplished and the fruits realized; but Mr. Greeley warns him against that very thing, and gives this reason for it:

> Your name was used, without public protest on your part, in circulars sowed broadcast over the State, whereof the manifest intent was to "make assurance double sure" that the frauds here perpetrated should not be overborne by the honest vote of the rural districts. And you, not merely by silence, but by positive assumption, have covered those frauds with the mantle of your responsibility.
>
> On the principle that "the receiver is as bad as the thief," you are as deeply implicated in them to-day as though your name was Tweed, O'Brien, or Oakey Hall.

Mr. Greeley's real opinion of Mr. Tilden's excuses and of his relation to the fraud appears further and very plainly in this additional extract from that historical denunciation of election fraud:

> On one very important point, however, your bitterness as a partisan has impelled you to ignore and come short of your duties as a citizen and a professed upholder of government by the people, and for this dereliction I here arraign you. I allude to the preservation of the purity of the ballot-box.
>
> I can imagine how a man may shut his eyes to many things which he deems it convenient not to know; but I must speak of what you must know, however you may wish to seek to be ignorant of it.

Now I put the evidence of that great and honest man, for whom Mr. Tilden himself voted in the last presidential campaign, against any evidence that the gentleman from New York may produce. This was the testimony of a man upon the spot who had been nearly forty years side by side with Mr. Tilden, who knew his character and all the facts as well as any member from New York upon this floor, and he pronounced that Mr. Tilden must have known the scheme of fraud, and that he was a "passive accomplice" in the frauds; and further tells him he could have stopped them if he chose. Now is that the kind of reformer to place in the presidential chair? A man who was one of the executive officers of that committee and sat on the committee with Mr. Tilden, and signed Mr. Tilden's name, as it is claimed, to this circular without his consent; and yet Governor Tilden did not denounce it, nor reject the benefits of it, and gave no light to disclose the frauds so that the perpetrators might be punished, and the man who had been truly elected might be seated, a man who was as truly entitled to his seat as any member here is entitled to a seat on this floor.

Mr. CLYMER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. I cannot yield at this point.

Mr. CLYMER. He declines to hear the truth.

Mr. KASSON. I am repeating the truth, and that is what hurts. Whenever you touch his history prior to the disclosures in the New York Times of the Tweed ring and of their frauds, you touch that organization of which Mr. Tilden was an active member on the executive committee or as a member of the Tammany ring. Such is his history as a "reformer" in respect to the purity of elections.

MR. TILDEN IN CONNECTION WITH RAILROADS.

But that is not all. Sir, we have some further evidence touching his qualities as a "reformer." We have had many railroad questions before this House. We have investigated them, and we have been endeavoring to settle them on a principle that would protect the people and the Government of the United States.

It will be claimed that if Mr. Tilden is elected he will reform the legislation of the country in respect to the railroad system. I am frank to admit that he has considerable knowledge of the disposition to be made of a bankrupt railroad, and a knowledge of the manipulation of railroads, which gives him a practical idea as to the things to be amended and reformed. But that history is such a one as will not give the people of the country confidence in his disposition to reform them in the public interest. Among various railroad corporations investigated in this House was one which was called the Credit Mobilier a corporation connected with the railroad which was charged with having defrauded the Government of the United States by improper contracts made with themselves under the name of the Credit Mobilier and with plundering the Government of the United States of many millions of money. We took evidence in that investigation before a committee of the House. I give the following questions and answers from the record of this House in the examination of Mr. Oakes Ames:

> Mr. HOAR. Were you not informed by the counsel who drew the contract that this was a violation of law?
>
> Mr. AMES. We were informed by counsel whom we consulted that this issuing of stock (to the C. M.) as a payment upon the contract for building the road was in entire compliance with the law.
>
> Question. Who were the counsel that gave you that advice?
>
> Answer. Mr. SAMUEL J. TILDEN, Mr. Charles Tracy, and Judge Allen.
>
> Q. All of New York?
>
> A. All of New York.

Again, Mr. John B. Alley put upon the stand and examined. I quote from his testimony:

> Question. And further, I understood you to say that you were instructed by eminent counsel, upon whose advice you relied, that the course you took was a compliance with the law?
>
> Answer. Yes, sir.
>
> Q. Have you ever seen, or do you know whether that opinion of eminent counsel is in existence now in writing?
>
> A. I do not know. I do not know whether it was given in writing.
>
> Q. Was it given to you by these eminent counsel?
>
> A. Mr. TILDEN, I know, told me that he regarded it as a compliance with the law.

There, sir, you have a record of this House proving that this "reformer" was one of the counsel who advised the very thing that has shocked the whole country with the enormities of the wrong and the extent of the robbery involved in it. What would you not have said of him had he been the republican candidate for the Presidency? How you would have investigated him, what committee reports you would have supplied, and what inquiries into his stocks and bonds and bank account! And yet we are asked to believe, the country is asked to believe, that Mr. Tilden is to purify this Government and to restore it to the purity of our fathers.

It is not necessary for me to proceed much further in this direction, for the simple reason that Mr. Tilden is so well known, particularly to the people of the West, if not to the people of the whole country, in his relation to railroads, that I need not further detail the evidence. Mr. Tilden has spent nearly his whole life in the city of New York; he has made nearly all his fortune in stock operations centered in that city and in connection with railroads. I do not allude to the question of his fortune, said to be so very large, except as it is involved in this exhibition of his relation to railroads, of which the journals of the country have been full, and which has an interest for the public in view of possible legislation touching railroads and their subsidies of land and money.

This, however, I will say, that the farmers of the West, the people of our villages, the people who believe in the characteristic disregard of the people's interest by the speculative rings of Wall street, will not accept for their candidate for the high office of President a man whose education upon these subjects has been almost exclusively received in Wall street, and who has had no relation with the interests of the great masses of the people of this country and no sympathy with them.

TAKING HONORS WHICH BELONG TO GOVERNOR DIX.

One word upon his relation to the State government of New York as exhibited by himself. He claims to be a reformer in another respect, which I think is inconsistent with his honor as a public officer. Governor Dix, during his term of office, found that the sinking fund of the State of New York had been depleted by his democratic predecessors to the extent of many millions of dollars in order to save themselves from the responsibility of taxing the people for their extravagant expenditure. Governor Dix replaced that entire sinking fund and paid off a large amount of public debt, as the fruit of the taxation and economies practiced during his term of office. Governor Tilden has since made a speech in regard to the reduction of the public debt of that State and of the taxes—a reduction which his republican predecessor had brought about by the purity, economy, and high honor of his administration—and has claimed himself the credit for what had been secured by that noble statesman and soldier of two wars, Governor John A. Dix. In this respect I charge Governor Tilden with having stolen the honors that belonged to Governor Dix and with having shown that, instead of being a reformer himself, he claims the honors which belong to the reforms of his predecessor, the fruits of which he enjoyed in his official capacity as governor of the State of New York. His own official claim to reform rests upon his movement against the canal ring, in which, however, he has stopped with the conviction of a single offender.

THE RESULT OF THIS INVESTIGATION.

I have now shown Mr. Tilden's relation to the doctrines of secession, his committal to the theory of disunion, his abstinence and silence in the time of his country's peril, his failure to put on record any word or act of cheer to our army, and his presence and association with Vallandigham and others of like stamp in the anti-war convention of 1864. I have also shown the unsoundness of his claims as a representative reformer, because of his relations to the election frauds of 1868, his silence after their discovery, and his failure to condemn them or the perpetrators of them when called upon to do so by Greeley; because of his association with Tweed until others had exposed and denounced him; because of his willful appropriation to himself of the reform honors of Governor Dix; and because of his failure to carry on the war against the canal ring from the moment it appeared likely to injure his anticipated nomination for the Presidency by the help of New York.

Does this candidate represent the aspirations of the Union-loving and reform-loving people of the United States?

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES, THE REPRESENTATIVE REPUBLICAN.

Whom have the republicans presented to oppose him? Not a lawyer from the speculative ranks of Wall street. Not a man bred in the views of public life which pertain to the peculiar associations of a great money center where speculation supersedes productive industry. But they present a man born in the country, in a comparatively new State, and raised in the country, in the midst of its simple life and toil; a man who from his maturity devoted himself to the hard work of his profession until higher and more dangerous duties called him away; a man of education, a man who has established a reputation for honesty in professional life and in public life perfectly irreproachable, unassailed as well as unassailable; a man whose record on the questions of secession and of disunion is shown by the offer of his life to his country, by the marks of the wounds that still leave their traces upon his body; shown by manuscript written with his patriotic blood and proved by every word that he has uttered since the outbreak of the war.

The candidate for whom we ask the votes of the men who fought for the Union is a comrade of theirs. He is the man who, when lying upon the ground at South Mountain with broken arm and wounds bleeding, arose in his pain and rushed forward to save his command from the peril into which he conceived they were going. He is the man who has dismounted from his horse to allow the weary-foot soldier to ride him. He is the man who while in the field was offered an office at the rear, and replied by a laconic letter worthy of the noblest Spartan whoever fought in phalanx—a letter dated in camp, in which he took time to say between battles, "Any man who would leave the Army at this time to electioneer for Congress ought to be scalped," and signed and sent it.

No man doubts his position in respect to the war; no man doubts his courage, his discretion, his devotion to his country. No widow mourning for the loss of her husband can hesitate to ask her son to vote for the man who fought on the same field, for the same cause, and endured the same deprivations and dangers. No orphan now grown up and old enough to cast his vote for the Union his father helped to save, can hesitate as to the man he should vote for to secure the great rights preserved by the war and the perpetuity of the Union.

And, sir, he is equally acceptable to the country in its aspirations for reform. I have known him and served with him on this floor. Show me, if you can, where ever a corrupt thing was done by him or encouraged by him. Show me his advice to a Credit Mobilier job at the expense of the Government. Show me the William M. Tweed of whom he ever solicited $5,000 for a corrupt election fund. Show me the William M. Tweed with whom he ever associated on a campaign committee. Show me the Vallandigham with whom he ever sat in council to draw up the platform of principles upon which a political campaign was to be fought and a nation saved. Show me the man, enemy of his country or corruptionist in his country, with whom Rutherford B. Hayes was ever an intimate associate!

THE VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES.

And if you look at those associated with these candidates on the same ticket, you will see how inconsistent the nominee of the democratic party is with the platform which they have adopted. For instance, they denounce the republican party for granting the public lands to aid in the building of railroads, a "waste" they call it of the public domain and demand reform in it, and then they nominate Mr. Hendricks as their candidate for Vice-President, who turns around and accepts the situation confidingly. Our own republican convention had already denounced the system, and had put a stop to it by legislation in the interest of actual settlers. Yet when Mr. Hendricks was a Senator of the United States he rose in his place in 1864 to advocate the land grant (one of the most enormous ever made, I think 37,000,000 acres) for the Northern Pacific Railroad. He said:

The bill before the Senate proposes to encourage the construction of a very important railroad to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the waters of the Pacific Ocean. Everybody can see at a glance that it is a work of national importance. It proposes to grant lands in a northern latitude, where without the construction of a work like that the lands are comparatively without value to the Government. No person acquainted with the condition of that section of the country supposes that there can be very extensive settlements until the Government shall encourage those settlements by the construction of some work like this. I do not think that a work of such national importance ought to be embarrassed in its passage through this body and through the House of Representatives by amendments proposing works that are comparatively local.

Again, in 1868, he said:

Now, sir, this is a great work. It can be accomplished with the aid of the land grant; it is one of the greatest achievements this country has ever contemplated. * * * But all that is proposed to this road is to give it lands that are to-day not worth one cent per acre to the Government. There is not a Senator here who would give for that vast region of country, unaided by some work of this sort, one cent per acre. Senators forget what it is that gives value to the public lands.

Again, in respect to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad grant he said in debate:

It was constructed in part by the Government of the United States. As a member of the House of Representatives, a number of years ago, I felt it to be my duty to vote in favor of a land grant to enable the State of Missouri to build that very important road.

I also refer to the Senate debates of 1864 for his liberality in land grants, and especially to the Bayfield and Saint Croix Railroad.

If you look to the democratic candidate for the Vice-Presidency in reference to his loyalty to the Union and his relations to secession, you find him in 1864, after his election to the Senate, making a speech at Seymour, in Indiana, in which he so mildly spoke of the errors of the soldiers who deserted that he was cheered by the men around him who had sheltered the deserters in their midst, and spoke so severely of the men who should come to arrest them and take them back to the Army that the whole audience burst out into a roar of applause.

That meeting was called by a remarkable paper, which probably most of you have seen, which invited "all who favored peace, who desired to be free from the death-grip of this infamously wicked, imbecile, and tyrannical administration, its arbitrary and illegal arrests, its drafts and conscription laws, by which peaceful citizens are dragged from their homes and all the endearments of domestic life to butcher and be butchered"—inviting all these to "come out and hear this advocate of peace and reunion;" and that advocacy was made in the manner I have stated.

So, Mr. Speaker, in respect to the constitutional amendments which the nation secured at such cost and holds so dear, he always voted in the negative. We are asked to elect to administer the Constitution, as amended, the very man who voted against and opposed every one of those amendments and who is still bitterly hostile to them in principle.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Has the gentleman before him the speech of Governor Hendricks to which he has referred?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir, I have that speech; not at full length, but very interesting parts, in which in a manner not precisely peaceful he recommended that the men who came to arrest deserters should meet an unwelcome reception. I cannot stop to read it. I will refer the gentleman to almost any of the newspapers, particularly the Chicago Tribune and other papers in which I have seen it.

This is the record of Governor Hendricks in respect to these questions.

On the other hand, we have nominated for Vice-President WILLIAM A. WHEELER, of New York, a man with whom many of us have stood here for years side by side; against whom a corrupt thing was never charged, to whom a disloyal sentiment was never attributed; a man above reproach and fearless for the right, and who has been one of the most admirable presiding officers we have ever had in the chair, either permanently or temporarily.

I have spoken of the candidates particularly and their records, because I earnestly believe that there is great import in the declaration which we heard before the nominations, that this year the candidate would be the platform.

Mr. CLYMER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How does Mr. WHEELER'S record in reference to railroad grants compare with that of Mr. Hendricks?

Mr. KASSON. I have not examined it, and remember no speech of his about it. I think that in some cases he may have voted for grants; but generally Mr. WHEELER was more prudent and careful than Mr. Hendricks.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. WHEELER voted for everything of that kind.

Mr. KASSON. I have no doubt that in the old times, before the evil of this system had developed, Mr. WHEELER, like Douglas, may have voted for some of the land grants. But we have not done as the democrats have; we have not denounced the men who formerly voted for land grants and then nominated one of them on that platform.

Mr. CLYMER. You are for them all the time.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman knows that I am not.

Mr. CLYMER. I mean your party.

Mr. KASSON. Our party has long since declared against them, as the gentleman and every one else knows, and the grants are stopped.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the candidates are the platform, for which of these should the votes of Union men and reformers be cast?

Mr. SPRINGER. For Tilden and Hendricks.

Mr. KASSON. I think a weak voice said, "For Tilden and Hendricks;" a weak voice, and but a single voice. The question is to be put to the country; and there we are perfectly content to leave it.

Mr. SPRINGER. So are we.

Mr. KASSON. The time has not come when the people of the United States have forgotten the experience of the last fifteen years and the fruits of the war, which even the southern gentlemen on this floor say they do not desire to disturb. We have not forgotten the records of public men during that war; and until the waters of Lethe flow over our minds we shall not forget to sustain the men who have been true to their country and oppose the men who in the time of peril have faltered or gone back from their duty to their country.

When these questions of fidelity to cause and country are put to the people you may attempt to rally them under party cries; you may sound the bugle-call and promise the rewards of office; but gentlemen must not forget that there is deep down in the hearts of the North and of the patriotic men of the border States a feeling that they must intrust the Constitution as it now exists and the Union as now restored to the men who have maintained it and stood by it from the beginning to the end.

THE SOUTHERN QUESTION.

I should perhaps neglect my duty if, for a single moment, I did not speak of another political difference. I have taken no part hitherto in the debates upon the so-called southern question. Let me, before I sit down, say a few frank words to the democrats of the Southern States.

We are not, as they charge, desirous to control the Southern States in their domestic affairs. We are not desirous to have incompetent or dishonest men elected to office because they call themselves republicans. If, when you speak of "carpet-baggers," you speak of men who have no interest in the South, who own no land there, who were not born there and have gone there not to exercise any lawful calling or profession, but to speculate upon office, we condemn them as heartily as you condemn them. We have every possible desire to see the men who really have a stake in the country, who have interests there, who belong there, and who are heartily for the Union, take the control of the southern State governments, if they have not already done so.

We wish as a nation, if possible, to have nothing to do with them outside of their Federal relations; and only one thing has led even to the moral interference which is heard from this side upon the floor of this House. That is, that you give us no assurance of repose in respect to your observance of the constitutional amendments. The National Government has taken its hands off as far as practicable. We desire to leave elections free and to leave you exempt from interference on this floor, or by the Executive; but then comes up to us suddenly a great cry from the neighbors and families of murdered black or murdered white republicans, shocking the entire sentiment of the North once more, until we are led to believe you do not intend to observe in good faith the constitutional amendments and rights of citizens.

Here is precisely our trouble. We have the power to enforce those amendments by the Constitution itself. We wish not to have it to do, but you will not enforce them yourselves. You say these outbreaks and massacres are simply the demonstrations of the bad portion of your population. That may be true, but what troubles us is that while the bad organize to commit wrongs and outrages the good have no counter-organization to protect victims against wrong. They accept its fruits. Your society as a society does not organize to suppress them; you do not bring the perpetrators to punishment; you do not bring your moral influence at home to suppress them. All these things lead us to believe it is not yet safe to intrust your candidate with the administration of the amendments to the Constitution or with the protection of the liberties and the rights of citizens under them. Mr. Speaker, it is certain that these violations of life, of liberty, and of right have been frequent, that these crimes are perpetually repeated; and I say in all candor that the only cause why we insist upon the whole power of legislation under those amendments and demand an Executive who believes in them is because the occasion for enforcing them is perpetually presented to us.

I know the northern people feel that the greatest boon which can be given to them in this relation, the greatest demand we present on this side of the House, is simply that every man who by the Constitution is secured in his rights and is authorized to vote shall be permitted to speak, to work, and to vote without intimidation and without doing it at the peril of his life. When that day shall come we have done with all protective interference in elections in the Southern States and the Union will be really restored.

The North looks with hope to the old whig element in the South, which did not originally advocate secession doctrines or accept the resolutions of '98, to return to its prominence in political affairs as an organization for the maintenance of the Constitution and the Union, and with a following of all voters who ask their constitutional rights only. I venture further to say that when that old Union-loving element shall declare itself the protector of the rights of all men, white and black, under the amended Constitution, it will be recognized in its relations to the Federal Government as fully as it ever was before the war; for that is all that republicanism demands. It is to secure such results and the restoration of an era of good feeling that we earnestly advocate the election of Governor Hayes.

Here, then, without detaining the House longer, are the views which I present at this late period of the session in reply to the expressed hope of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the election of his candidate for President of the United States. I do not share his aspirations. I do not recognize them as justified either by the condition of the country or by the interests of the Union, of the Constitution, or of reform, nor by the record his candidate has made.*

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Iowa concluded?

Mr. KASSON. I stated to the gentleman that I would move to lay this motion to reconsider on the table. Does any gentleman desire to speak on the subject?

Mr. COX. Yes, I do.

Mr. KASSON. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. COX. The gentleman cannot adjourn the House in that way.

Mr. KASSON. I can move to adjourn, and I make that motion.

Mr. BANNING. The gentleman promised to yield to me.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not shoot and then run away.

Mr. KASSON. I beg pardon. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COX. The gentleman makes an attack and then runs away from it.

Mr. KASSON. I want to yield to the gentleman from Ohio to offer his bill.

---

*Mr. HEWITT, of New York, having inserted in the RECORD, as a note to his speech, an article never read nor alluded to in the debate, nor shown to me, although supposed to contradict my statements, it only remains to me to speak of it in a like note.

The certificate of Mr. Marble, like the certificate of Mr. HEWITT, to Mr. Tilden's loyalty, is simply the partisan's declaration of his private recollections, and both involve the color of their own opinions as to what constituted Unionism in 1860 and 1864. As I understand Mr. Marble's only quotation from Mr. Tilden's language—all the rest being a general affirmation of political good character, without production of evidence furnished by Mr. Tilden—this only quotation is made from a "manuscript" which I do not understand Mr. Marble to certify was ever published over Mr. Tilden's signature.

So far as this certificate is concerned it would only prove a facing two ways by Mr. Tilden. Certain it is that he wrote the public letter to Mr. Kent which I read from, and which is a secession letter in its doctrines; certain it is that he belonged to that copperhead society for the diffusion of political knowledge in 1863; certain it is that he was a member of the anti-war convention at Chicago which nominated McClellan, and that he served with Vallandigham on the platform committee; certain it is that he did not oppose nor dissent from the peace resolution openly in the convention, where he ought to have done it. These things are certain, and are not denied by Mr. Marble nor by Mr. HEWITT; certain it is that Mr. Tilden did not publicly repudiate the election frauds of 1868 perpetrated under color of his name, nor make a single effort to punish the criminals who were on the same committee with him for their alleged forgery of his name and their consequent frauds.

These things I charged, and these things Mr. Marble does not deny. Now when I make charges resting on a public record in part, like the Kent letter, and the organization of the copperhead society in February, 1863, and in part on the want of a good public record for the Union, it is no sufficient answer to tell me of individual instances resting in private knowledge, and which made no record committing Mr. Tilden openly and publicly to the support of the Union cause and Government. He may have attended meetings, but also have carefully kept his name from papers and speeches committing himself to our cause. He may have sent private messages of advice, but carefully kept them from public knowledge till the Union cause had won. It was the public record I demanded, and Mr HEWITT now alleges private knowledge of individuals, revived as twelve-year-old recollections from the willing memories of his partisans. It utterly fails to meet the issue presented by me.

VOLUNTEER FORCE.

Mr. BANNING. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the service of volunteers to aid in the suppression of Indian hostilities.

The bill, which was read, provides that the President shall be authorized, if in his opinion the exigencies of the public service may require the same, to accept the service of volunteers to be employed as part of the Army of the United States against the Sioux and other hostile Indians, provided that not more than five thousand volunteers, to be organized into companies or regiments of cavalry, shall be accepted, and their term of service shall not extend beyond six months from the date of commencement, and such volunteers shall be discharged at any time when their service can be dispensed with, and the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is thereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for defraying the expense of carrying into effect the act.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it in order to move that the House adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain this motion to suspend the rules. The morning hour expired, as the Chair understood, at the expiration of the first call and at the time the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] presented his conference report. The Chair thinks, therefore, it is in order now to move to suspend the rules. And pending that motion the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let me suggest that a motion to suspend the rules suspends the right of adjournment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. Before putting the motion the Chair asks leave to lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia.

VOLUNTEER FORCE.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the motion to adjourn. When I made it I did not know that another gentleman desired to speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has been read by the Clerk.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 101, noes 42.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

EMPLOYÉS OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I desire to introduce and have put upon its passage a bill providing for the payment of employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing who have been discharged permanently, in regard to which a difficulty has arisen. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain of the employés recently permanently discharged from the service of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Be it enacted, &c., That the clause in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," approved July 31, 1876, appropriating $25,000 for the purpose of paying each of the employés recently furloughed and finally permanently discharged from the service in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, one month's pay, is hereby so amended as to read $29,500 in lieu of $25,000, and the entire sum shall be paid out in accordance with the provisions of said clause, and with the further provision that said sum shall be distributed in payment only to said employés whose wages did not exceed $3 per diem, whether by monthly or daily rate of payment.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Superintendent of the Bureau in which he states that $29,500 will be sufficient for this purpose.

There was no objection. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
August 11, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your personal inquiry of to-day, I have the honor to inform you that it will require the sum of $29,501 to pay each of the persons lately employed in this Bureau, and who have been permanently discharged, whose wages did not exceed $3 a day, an amount equal to one month's wages.

Very respectfully,

HENRY C. JEWELL,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman, &c.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to offer a substitute for the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot allow any amendment. My motion is to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to allow it to be read.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot yield for that purpose. I have no objection to its being inserted in the RECORD.

The question being taken, the rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill (H. R. No. 4107) was passed.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. LANE. I move that the rules be suspended to enable the Committee on Public Lands to report with amendments and the House to pass the bill (H. R. No. 125) to provide for the sale of desert lands in Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, California.

Mr. COX. I have not yielded, if I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] has obtained the floor. The Clerk will read the bill on which the gentleman from Oregon moves to suspend the rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 125) to provide for the sale of desert lands in Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, California.

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of the requisite age, "who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration of intention to become such," to file a declaration with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land, "not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of two years thereafter;" said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed, and if unsurveyed shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey. At any time within the period of two years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment, to the receiver, of the sum of $1.25 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him.

SEC. 2. That all lands, exclusive of timber lands and of mineral lands, which do not produce grass or which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of this act.

The amendments of the Committee on Public Lands were read, as follows:

Amend the title by striking out "Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, California," and inserting "California and Nevada" in lieu thereof.

Insert after the word "situated" in the eighth line, section 1, the words "in the States of California and Nevada;" and after the word "land" in the same line insert the word "therein."

Mr. CLYMER. Is this bill subject to the point of order? Should it not go the Committee of the Whole, inasmuch as it makes disposition of the public lands?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not subject to the point of order under a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CLYMER. This bill received the approval of the Committee on Public Lands last year only for a single county.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this bill include mineral lands?

Mr. LANE. It does not. It is only applicable to lands which are essentially arid and desert, and which are capable, as a matter of fact of which I can speak from my own personal knowledge, of producing only alkali, lizards, horn-toads, and rattlesnakes. If this bill be passed these lands can be utilized.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. It is that the motion being to suspend the rules and take up the bill, it is not in order to explain the bill until that motion is adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This has only been by common consent.

The question being taken on Mr. LANE'S motion, there were—ayes 68, noes 45; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is further count demanded?

Further count was not demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the House refuses to take up the bill.

HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask unanimous consent to present two resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk, in regard to the organization of the House and the business during the vacation. I ask that they be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William H. Smith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $3.60 per day for services rendered as messenger in the office of the Clerk of the House from and including the 1st of July ultimo and until otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask that the other resolution be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot have two resolutions pending at the same time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the House votes on the resolution which has been read I ask that the other resolution be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It may be read for information, but the gentleman must know that two resolutions cannot be offered at the same time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I withdraw the resolution which has been read and ask for the reading of the other resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a foreman, to be placed in charge of the book-folding room of the House of Representatives, to be paid at the rate of $3.75 per day, may be employed until the 1st day of November next, and the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to pay said foreman as above out of the contingent fund of the House, one of the laborers authorized to be dispensed with in the folding-room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will entertain both these resolutions under the motion to suspend the rules and adopt them.

There was no objection made; and the question being put on suspending the rules (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the resolutions were agreed to.

PAY OF A CLERK.

Mr. FORT. I am instructed by the Committee of Accounts to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and recommend its adoption. It is merely to pay a clerk for extra services.

Mr. RANDALL. We shall have as many employés on the House force as we ever had if we keep on in this way.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of my resolutions was not to increase the force except as to the old-time messenger of the Library.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This discussion is out of order and the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized and required to pay to Albert Ordway the sum of $2 per day from the 16th of May, 1876, to the 8th of August, 1876, including both dates, for extra services rendered by him as clerk on the special committee to investigate the charges against Judge Wylie, which compensation was agreed upon between the said clerk and Hon. W. W. WARREN, chairman of the said committee, and which services were in addition to services that he was required to render as clerk to other committees.

Mr. FORT. I move to suspend the rules and pass that resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that this is the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to get the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] on the floor now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to recognize the gentleman from New York, but the gentleman from Illinois has the floor now.

The question was taken on Mr. FORT's resolution to suspend the rules; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the resolution was adopted.

EXTRA PAY TO EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] was recognized and yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] I move to suspend the rules to enable the gentleman from New York to have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize that motion when the pending motion to suspend the rules has been disposed of.

Mr. EDEN. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HUNTON. I now ask that my resolution be read.

The Clerk read the resolution offered by Mr. HUNTON, as follows:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House compensation to the 1st of September, 1876, to the members of the Capitol police and all the employés of the House discharged by reason of the reduction of force provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;" said compensation to be at the rate provided by law before the passage of said act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the resolution will be reported again, so that we may distinctly understand it.

Mr. HUNTON. It only provides for the payment of the discharged employés to the end of the current month, by which time they will be ready to leave the service of the Government.

The question was taken on the motion, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now state that if the gentleman from New York obtained the floor, neither the Chair nor the clerks at the desk knew the fact.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman had the floor and yielded it to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.]

Mr. KASSON. No; on the contrary, I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; your time is out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then either side of the House has, by motion to suspend the rules, been pursuing the regular order of business.

Mr. COX. I do not desire to be ruled by the Chair and the clerks at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of further considering this question.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York on the pending question, which is the regular order, why of course it will not be necessary to suspend the rules.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let him be heard by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order, which is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the message of the President was referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly not; the regular order is the motion to suspend the rules. As the Chair hears no objection, he will recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. HOAR. Before the gentleman proceeds will he allow me to ask——

Mr. COX. Not now. All I desire is one minute to call the attention of the House to a statement made by the defender of Belknap in this House, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman allow me before he proceeds to ask a question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL] about the public business?

Mr. COX. Not now. The gentleman from Iowa repeated an apochryphal statement——

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman does not withdraw that statement——

Mr. COX. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair protected the gentleman from Iowa, and will now protect the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. The apologist of the post-traders made a statement here——

Mr. KASSON. I call the gentleman to order; his statement is untrue.

Mr. COX. I did not say it was you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the point of order by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. KASSON. That the gentleman has no right to state an untruth on this floor against any member.

Mr. COX. I call the gentleman to order, for he lied deliberately about Governor Tilden.

Mr. HOAR. I call the gentleman to order, and ask that his words be taken down.

Mr. COX, (passing over to the other side of the Hall.) I send to the Clerk's desk a statement of Governor Tilden, which refutes the statement of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. FOSTER. I insist that the words of the gentleman be taken down.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, and a demand that the words of the gentleman from New York be taken down.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no occasion for any excitement.

Mr. HOAR. I insist upon my question of order. I call the gentleman from New York to order, and ask that his words be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They will be taken down.

Mr. HENDERSON. I also want it taken down that the gentleman came to this side of the House in an assaulting manner. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule it is the duty of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to state the words he desires to have taken down.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that it is my duty to repeat the words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman will refer to the sixty-second rule of the House he will see that it is the duty of the member calling another to order to repeat the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down at the Clerk's table.

Mr. HOAR. I demand that the words of the gentleman from New York, where he said the gentleman from Iowa lied, be taken down.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the prior remarks be taken down also.

Mr. HOAR. That is the right of the gentleman, of course. I request that the reporter write them out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is being done by the reporter.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. Nothing is in order but the reading of the words upon which I ask the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist that the prior words be taken down also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late to demand the taking down of any words except those which were excepted to at the time they were spoken.

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly justice requires that any words of provocation be taken down also.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, that is the universal rule. All the remarks that provoke any given set of words should also be taken down.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize anything but this question of order.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order; that is, that gentlemen are not in their seats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair hopes that gentlemen will resume their seats. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] rose to a point of order and requested that certain words of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] be taken down. He afterward modified that by requesting that the words of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] be also taken down.

Mr. HOAR. I merely demanded that the words of the gentleman from Iowa be taken down as introductory to what had been said by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman. The words will be read as soon as they are furnished by the reporter.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Iowa has not been called to order.

Mr. RANDALL. He will be the first in order on this censure if there is any.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I suppose that I have the right to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman, of course.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Notwithstanding the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will state my point. I do not understand that the gentleman from Iowa has been called to order. The gentleman from Massachusetts did call the gentleman from New York to order, and asked that his words be taken down. Now I make the point of order that the words should first be taken down upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts; and then if it be in order for anybody to ask that the words of the gentleman from Iowa be taken down, I have no objection; but let us attend to one thing at a time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Massachusetts himself requested, as he stated as a matter of fairness, that the words which were provocative of the remarks of the gentleman from New York should be presented in the same connection. No point of order has been made against the gentleman from Iowa, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HEREFORD. In this connection I wish to make a statement. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] immediately following the language used by the gentleman from Iowa, asked that it be taken down; he desired that the language be taken down formally and for the purpose that such language is taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was that prior to the time when the gentleman from New York obtained the floor?

Mr. HEREFORD. Just as the words passed from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa, the gentleman from Tennessee rose and asked that the language of the gentleman from Iowa be taken down. It is now asked that it be taken down formally.

Mr. HOAR. There is no right of any member to require any other gentleman's words to be taken down unless he first call that other gentleman to order for the words, as I did in regard to the gentleman from New York. Then after the call to order the words may be, must be, taken down in writing at the Clerk's table. The rule goes on to say:

> And no member shall be held to answer, or be subject to the censure of the House, for words spoken in debate, if any other member has spoken, or other business has intervened, after the words spoken, and before exception to them shall have been taken.

I submit that nothing is in order except the reading at the Clerk's table of the words taken down under this rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reporters are writing out the words of the gentleman from Iowa in connection with those of the gentleman from New York. As soon as they are prepared they will be submitted to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The language was very laconic.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the words to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. COX. The gentleman from Iowa repeated an apochryphal statement——
> Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman does not withdraw that statement——
> Mr. COX. I have the floor.
> The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair protected the gentleman from Iowa, and will now protect the gentleman from New York.
> Mr. COX. The apologist of the post-traders made a statement here——
> Mr. KASSON. I call the gentleman to order; his statement is untrue.
> Mr. COX. I did not say it was you.
> The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the point of order by the gentleman from Iowa?
> Mr. KASSON. That the gentleman has no right to state an untruth on this floor against any member.
> Mr. COX. I call the gentleman to order, for he lied deliberately about Governor Tilden.
> Mr. HOAR. I call the gentleman to order, and ask that his words be taken down.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the gentleman from New York be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York may be permitted to explain, or to proceed in order, if it is the will of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the gentleman be permitted to proceed in order. I believe that motion is parliamentary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order unquestionably.

Mr. HOAR. I move to substitute——

Mr. RANDALL. On my motion I call the previous question.

Mr. HOAR. I move, as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the gentleman from New York be called to the bar of the House and censured for the words used by him in debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I have called the previous question, and I did not yield the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must necessarily put the question on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the gentleman from New York be permitted to proceed in order. If the House refuses to sustain that motion then the Chair will recognize the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Will not the Chair recognize me as rising to offer a substitute?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has taken the floor and demanded the previous question.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Chair recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania for that purpose on a point of order raised by me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in his judgment, that it is the proper question to put at any rate. [Cries of "Question! question!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want any points of order. I want to have the motion I have made put to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to be heard.

Mr. RANDALL. Is the gentleman entitled to the floor when I have demanded the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only for the purpose of making such suggestions as he may see proper as to the point of order, but not as to the motion of the gentleman. The Chair will certainly hear him.

Mr. HOAR. I understood this transaction to have occurred in this assemblage of gentlemen——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to state how the question arose.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman asked to put in an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the Chair has decided cannot be done.

Mr. HOAR. Now, the gentleman from New York——

Mr. HEREFORD. The gentleman from Massachusetts has risen to no point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts must be permitted to make his statement.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to state how this thing occurred. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] uttered a personality toward the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who had uttered a personality to no person, calling him an apologist of post-traders. Thereupon the gentleman from Iowa replied that what had been said was untrue, which certainly imputed no motive to state anything wrong to the gentleman from New York. On being asked to state his point of order by the Chair he replied that the gentleman from New York had stated what was untrue.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the difference between that and a lie?

Mr. HOAR. Thereupon the gentleman from New York cries out, leaving his seat and shaking his fist near the face of the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. RANDALL. That is not a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts must confine himself to his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Thereupon he uttered the words read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on my motion being put to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. This is the question of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's statement so far has nothing to do with a point of order.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is that when one member, saying another member lied deliberately, and knew it, a resolution to expel the gentleman from New York is in order as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules of the House the first question in order is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The House may permit the gentleman from New York to explain, or it may permit him to proceed in order. This is the first motion in order, and if it chooses to do so, it certainly has the right to let him proceed in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Is it debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. HOAR, (while the House was dividing.) Is the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] permitted to vote?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York is not voting. The gentleman from New York is not dangerous now, nor was he dangerous to the other side.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 49.

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to say one word.

Mr. HEREFORD. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let me plead for one word. I am the colleague of the gentleman from Iowa and the friend of the gentleman from New York.

[Cries of "Hear him!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman from Iowa, if there be no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I know the House will hear me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In the capacity of friend to both parties, it is only proper to say that both gentlemen were a little hasty, and the House certainly has been very hasty. The first thing to be done in cases of this kind is to permit the gentleman whose words were taken down to explain if he volunteers or will offer any explanation, and to ascertain whether we have the words in the shape they were uttered, and whether we understand them as he meant to have them understood. We cannot afford to be hasty in dealing with members of this House, while I admit if a gentleman does volunteer an insult to another member the House cannot pass over it. I should like the House to hear the gentleman from New York before proceeding further in this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I must insist on my motion. The provocation came from that side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken, there were ayes 43; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 32, not voting 174; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, Banning, Bland, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Levy, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Payne, Poppleton, Powell, Randall, Reagan, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Young—80.

NAYS—Messrs. John H. Baker, Banks, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crounse, Eames, Fort, Foster, Henderson, Hoar, Joyce, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, McDill, Monroe, O'Neill, Packer, William A. Phillips, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stowell, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, G. Wiley Wells, White, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—32.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Ashe, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lane, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Page, Phelps, John F. Philips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, John Reilly, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—174.

During the roll-call the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. LANE. I was not within the bar before the last name on the roll was called. I ask unanimous consent of the House that I may record my vote.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to vote "no"

Mr. LANE. I object unless the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] was within the bar of the House before the last name on the roll was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California votes on that assurance.

Mr. PAGE. I have just come in.

Mr. LANE. And I just came in, and my vote was objected to.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; if the gentleman from Oregon objects——

Mr. LANE. I do object. At the same time I desire to announce that if permitted I would have voted "ay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] the yeas are 80 and the nays are 32.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question being taken on Mr. LUTTRELL's motion, there were—ayes 21, noes 62.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on Mr. THORNBURGH's motion, there were—ayes 46, noes 76.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] and the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a remark. It is very desirable that this matter should be disposed of by the House as soon as possible. I submit that the language was somewhat unparliamentary on both sides. Perhaps the House will allow a proper apology to be made to the House for the words spoken on the part of both these gentlemen. Certainly gentlemen cannot object to that.

Many members called for the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] understand that for a gentleman to say that something that another gentleman has said in debate is not true is not parliamentary?

Mr. HOLMAN. The language, in my judgment, of both these gentlemen was somewhat unparliamentary.

Mr. HOAR. What language?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the language of both was unparliamentary.

Mr. HOAR. What language of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HOLMAN. The remark about the untruthfulness of the gentleman from New York, that he had spoken what was untrue. That was certainly not parliamentary language.

Mr. ATKINS. I raise the point of order that all of this debate is out of order.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman raises it after letting his own side be heard.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Massachusetts has been speaking a good deal to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Remarks made in the nature of a personal explanation are certainly out of order pending a motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 67.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 16, noes not counted.

So the House refused to order the call.

Mr. COX. All I desire to say to the House is simply this——

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. BANKS. Not now, certainly not now.

Mr. TERRY. I want gentlemen opposite to understand that we will stay until daybreak if necessary.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot consent that the House shall proceed in this disorderly manner; gentlemen must resume their seats and preserve order.

The Chair will state that there is an absence of a quorum and that no motion is in order, and that no business is in order except a motion to adjourn or a motion for a call of the House, and he must insist that the rules of the House be observed.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose that the last vote disposed of the question as to the right of the gentleman from New York to proceed.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOAR. No quorum has appeared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted, and that objection has been made.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of order, and it is that the gentleman from New York is not entitled to the floor without the leave of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. BANKS. The Chair rules in that way?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably; no motion is in order except to adjourn or for a call of the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. MAGOON. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not be in order to move that the gentleman from New York be permitted to make an explanation to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It certainly would be in order; and if the House will permit it, the gentleman from New York may make an explanation.

Mr. PIERCE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose the gentleman from New York should be consulted on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not in order to permit the gentleman from New York to explain?

Mr. PIERCE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is certainly not in order while a motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. YEATES. That was the last motion put to the House; we have done nothing since. I raise the point that it is not in order.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I moved a call of the House immediately after taking the vote on adjournment, and I believe my motion is the only one that can be entertained now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The journal shows that the Chair is right. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] moved a call of the House, and that was the last motion entertained by the Chair. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MAGOON] now moves to adjourn.

Mr. YEATES. Why, Mr. THORNBURGH, who had just come into the House and was standing by the door, moved to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is necessarily controlled by the Journal, and he thinks it very likely to be correct.

Mr. YEATES. The Journal is not correct in this case. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MAGOON] that the House adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from New York to explain his language. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BANKS. Not at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman from Iowa explain.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman from Iowa used no language that was not parliamentary and proper under the circumstances.

The question was taken on Mr. MAGOON's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 101.

Mr. MAGOON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; 45 members voting therefor, being more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 39, nays 83, not voting 164; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bagby, John H. Baker, Banks, Bradley, Cannon, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Eames, Fort, Foster, Henderson, Hoar, Joyce, Kehr, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, McDill, Monroe, O'Neill, Packer, William A. Phillips, Piper, Potter, John Robbins, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stowell, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, Willard, and William B. Williams—39.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Banning, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Crapo, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Page, Payne, Pierce, Poppleton, Randall, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, James Wilson, Yeates, and Young—83.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Thomas, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—164.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 87, noes 35.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. THORNBURGH called for the yeas and nays on ordering a call of the House.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 28 in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 42, not voting 164; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cutler, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Payne, William A. Phillips, Poppleton, Powell, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Tarbox, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Yeates, and Young—80.

NAYS—Messrs. John H. Baker, Banks, Bland, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Davy, Eames, Foster, Goodin, Hancock, Haymond, Henderson, Hoar, Joyce, Kehr, Lapham, Lawrence, Mackey, Magoon, Monroe, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Potter, John Robbins, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, White, Willard, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Ashe, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wike, Andrew Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—164.

So the motion of Mr. MORRISON was agreed to.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 3473) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for the fulfilling of treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is possible to arrive at some solution of this difficulty.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is a call of the House, which has been ordered by a vote of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to be heard a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman if there is no objection.

Mr. CONGER. Pending the call of the House I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is willing to make a personal explanation on the point of order, and I suggest that the House give unanimous consent to hear him.

Mr. SPRINGER. And also the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. FOSTER. Do not complicate it.

Mr. ATKINS. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that the gentleman from New York desires to make a personal explanation on the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. We do not want any explanation; we understand the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. He may say something that will relieve the House from this dilemma.

Mr. BANKS. He may say something else.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is no propriety in the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] for this reason: in the first place we refused to hear the gentleman from New York; we refused to allow you, Mr. Speaker, to decide whether the words were disorderly; we took the matter out of the hands of both of the gentlemen implicated and of the Speaker, from whose decision we could have appealed, if we did not like it. The only way out of this difficulty is either by unanimous consent to begin where we should have begun or to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw the resolution which he never should have offered.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the call of the House had better go on.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, while I have all proper respect for all men in office and all due respect for men high on committees, I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania, after having got in a resolution which was entirely out of order because no point was raised against it, has any right now to insist that we shall stay here all night.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not say anything unpleasant about me. I am not going to get angry under any contingency whatever.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I never get angry myself. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state that a call of the House has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope that the suggestion I made may be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. There certainly ought not to be any objection to that.

Mr. PIERCE. I consider that the remarks made here by the gentleman from New York were highly improper. If he is now ready to apologize for them, I for one am ready to hear him; but I am not ready to hear him upon this point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A call of the House has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that I have moved that the House adjourn; and on that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 41, nays 78, not voting 167; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Banks, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Davy, Eames, Fort, Foster, Goodin, Hancock, Haymond, Henderson, Hoar, Joyce, Kehr, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, McDill, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Reagan, John Robbins, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stowell, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—41.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Banning, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Crapo, Cutler, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Payne, Poppleton, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Turney, John L. Vance, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Willard, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Yeates, and Young—78.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Money, Monroe, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—167.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to make a suggestion. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I think the House is weary of this proceeding, and it is due to the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from New York that they should have an opportunity for personal explanation. I understand that these gentlemen have heretofore borne the kindest relations to each other, [renewed cries of "Regular order!"] and it seems to me proper that he who has been the aggressor should say that he spoke under the impulse of the moment, and did not intend to be offensive to the other. It is the first duty of gentlemen when they speak under impulse to be understood and make the amende honorable. I think it is due to them they should have an opportunity for this personal explanation as well as due to the House. I am sure with that concession they will both appreciate the suggestion and the attitude in which they stand to each other and the House, and I hope, therefore, each one will acquit himself as a gentleman and as a man of courage to each other and to the House.

Mr. TERRY. This side of the House——

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to say further——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot hold the floor against the demand for the regular order.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. According to my recollection, although the gentleman from New York made a remark which was somewhat offensive—[laughter.] Hear me out. Do not interrupt me until I get through. On the other side——

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. MORRISON. I have been demanding it for some time.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, made some remarks which were inaudible to the reporter, the Speaker beating with his gavel and calling to order.

Mr. EAMES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair can recognize nobody. The House has ordered that there shall be a call of the House, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN. If unanimous consent——

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Bebee, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stone, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and thirty-five members have answered to their names, which is not a quorum. The doors will be closed.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the Speaker issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody and bring to the bar the absentees.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were ayes 19, noes not counted.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 70, not voting 175; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bagby, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Davy, Eames, Goodin, Hoar, Joyce, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, McDill, Monroe, O'Neill, Pierce, Piper, Potter, John Robbins, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitthorne, Willard, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—41.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Bradford, Bright, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cutler, Dibrell, Durand, Durham, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Thomas L. Jones, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lord, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Page, Payne, Poppleton, Powell, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Throckmorton, Turney, John L. Vance, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Yeates, and Young—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Eden, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hunton, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, Lane, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Packer, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, Rice, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stone, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—175.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] that the Speaker issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody and bring to the bar members of the House absent without its leave.

Mr. CONGER. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. MORRISON. Does not my motion take precedence?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call takes precedence.

Mr. PAGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 72, not voting 179; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. John H. Baker, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crapo, Davy, Eames, Foster, Henderson, Joyce, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, McDill, Monroe, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Potter, Sampson, Sinnickson, Strait, Stevenson, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, Willard, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, Banning, Bradford, Bright, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cutler, Dibrell, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Franklin, Gause, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Lane, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Poppleton, Powell, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Riddle, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, A. Herr Smith, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Throckmorton, Turney, John L. Vance, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Yeates, and Young—72.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Forney, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, Rice, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Singleton, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stone, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—179.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain that motion. The Chair must direct a warrant to issue to take into custody absentees and bring them to the bar of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Why so?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. The House has not ordered the warrant to be issued. That was the motion pending when the motion was made to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The House has not voted on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After the House has refused to suspend further proceedings under the call the Chair certainly recognizes it as his duty to issue his warrant for the arrest of the absentees.

Mr. HOAR. Without the authority of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I take an appeal from that decision.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. PAGE. And upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has the House ordered the absentees to be sent for.

Mr. HOAR. It has not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House, however, has ordered a call of the House, and has refused to suspend further proceedings under the call. Under those circumstances nothing is left to the Chair but to rule that his warrant should issue, so that upon that warrant the absentees may be brought to the bar of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the usual practice has been otherwise.

Mr. HOAR. I believe the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and every other experienced member will agree with me in saying that that has never been done without the order of the House.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. The rule is very clear in regard to this matter. And I desire now to submit the usual motion that the Speaker do issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custody the absentees and to bring them to the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has looked at the rule and the Chair stands corrected. The order for the issue of the Speaker's warrant must be made by the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move that an order do now issue for the arrest of the absentees.

Mr. FOSTER. I have moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. When the two motions, the motion to adjourn and the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call have been voted down, I submit that the only other motion in order is the purely formal one that the Speaker issue his warrant for the arrest of the absentees. I submit that this is the motion now pending.

Mr. HEREFORD. Otherwise we never could have a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must entertain the motion to adjourn. The consequence pointed out by the gentleman from West Virginia is not the fault of the ruling of the Chair, but of the rules themselves.

Mr. HEREFORD. I submit that the ruling has been uniform. When a call of the House has been ordered, these dilatory motions have not been recognized.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. I submit that my motion is more highly privileged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The last vote was not a vote on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. It was a prior vote, and I move to reconsider that vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But a motion to adjourn is now pending.

Mr. CLYMER. The motion to reconsider is of higher privilege. I do not yield for a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot hold the floor against a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. When I have made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to adjourn, I ask what right has another gentleman to be recognized to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. FOSTER. My motion to adjourn was made before the gentleman from Pennsylvania took the floor.

Mr. CLYMER. Then I am in error.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] made a motion that the Speaker issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms, commanding him to bring in the absentees. Pending that a motion was made to adjourn, which was voted down. Then a motion was made to dispense with all further proceedings under the call. That also was voted down. My inquiry is whether the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not now properly before the House; whether the proceedings do not recur to that?

Mr. MORRISON. May I also be allowed to make an inquiry? and all these inquiries can be answered at once. I understood the Speaker to rule that absentees cannot be brought in except on a motion submitted and an order made by the House. I understood him also to rule that the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call would have precedence over such a motion and that the motion to adjourn would have precedence over that motion. If that be so, there is no way in which absentees can be brought in at all under the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the fault of the rules.

Mr. MORRISON. And therefore I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HEREFORD. I hope upon that statement the House will adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want the statement just made to go unchallenged; because I believe that when the House is without a quorum the rule provides that there are but two motions in order, a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I respectfully ask for the ruling of the Chair on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled upon it.

Mr. HEREFORD. I move that we adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is already pending.

Mr. HEREFORD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Undoubtedly it is the rule that the House has a right to adjourn if it desires to do so, and that the motion to adjourn is in order, and, further than that, the Chair has not ruled upon this question.

The question was put on the motion to adjourn; and on a division there were—ayes 66, noes 65.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Carried unanimously.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. HEREFORD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 60.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it in order to have a proposition made? Let us have a proposition.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 33, noes 65; so (one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, (at three o'clock a. m.;) and there were—yeas 43, nays 70, not voting 176; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bagby, John H. Baker, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Davy, Eames, Foster, Goodin, Haymond, Henderson, Hoar, Joyce, Kehr, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, McDill, Monroe, O'Neill, Packer, Pierce, Potter, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, White, Willard, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Bradford, Bright, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Cutler, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lord, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Payne, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Throckmorton, Turney, John L. Vance, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Yeates, and Young—70.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hereford, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Page, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldon, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—176.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MORRISON. I now renew my motion that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to bring in the absentees.

Mr. HOAR. I move that all proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has entertained that motion and also a motion to adjourn. While the Chair recognizes the fact that all proceedings under the call can be dispensed with, yet the Chair does not understand the rule to apply to such an extent as to destroy the whole proceedings under the call. The Chair therefore having entertained that motion and also a motion to adjourn he will now entertain a motion that warrants be issued to the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest and bring to the bar of the House the absentees.

Mr. PAGE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I desire the Chair to hear me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that there can be no appeal from the decision of the Chair unless there is a quorum present. That is not provided for as one of the motions under the rule that can be made during a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must rule that the House finding itself without a quorum is reduced to two motions. It may adjourn or it may enforce the attendance of absent members, and beyond that the House can do nothing, in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Chair that I stated that I took an appeal from his decision, and the Chair was kind enough to say he would hear me, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] immediately addressed the Chair and the Chair decided upon his motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the House that less than a quorum cannot reverse a decision of the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. May I be allowed to say a word upon this point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. MORRISON. As I understand it, these two motions are not of the class of privileged motions, like the motion to lay on the table or the motion to adjourn, which must be put according to their right of precedence and not according to the time of their presentation. These two motions, the one not being more highly privileged than the other, must be put in the order in which they are made.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I understand the ruling of the Chair from the beginning of this session down to the present time has been that when the House finds itself without a quorum but two motions are in order, a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House. The House has refused to adjourn, and the only thing in order is a call of the House, which has been ordered, and the order for the arrest of members should be now made.

Mr. FOSTER. You may change your mind.

Mr. LUTTRELL. You are always ready to change your mind to crowd out free speech.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to submit a remark or two upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOAR. Am I not entitled to the floor on my point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore The Chair supposed he had a right to hear gentlemen who desire to speak on the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; but the Chair was good enough to say he would hear me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposed he had heard the gentleman.

Mr. HOAR. I have not said anything on the subject of my point of order yet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentlemen now.

Mr. HOAR. The question of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] goes against the universal practice of the House. I think every experienced member knows that it has been the right of the minority, a right which the democratic party have enjoyed and used to the fullest extent for sixteen years, to make dilatory motions.

A MEMBER. Louder!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hopes that particular species of disorder will not be resorted to.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose only those who have in their heads some substitute for brains will make that disorder.

Mr. RANDALL. Let those words be taken down. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. To establish the rule contended for would be a destruction of the right which has been accorded to the minority for time out of mind, and it would be a most revolutionary proceeding. The House has the right at any time to dispense with further proceedings under a call, whether before the order to bring in the absentees, while that order is being executed, when a part of the absentees have been brought in, or when they have all been brought in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman mean to say seriously to the Chair that, fifteen members of the House being present, they cannot enforce the attendance of absent members?

Mr. HOAR. I do. I mean to say that the right of the minority to make dilatory motions, the right known as filibustering, in this case the right to alternate the motion to adjourn and the motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, to stop all business, is an absolute right under the rules of the House, and there is no possible escape for the majority except to deny that right which exists under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to speak seriously upon this subject and in no other manner. The Chair recognizes the fact that motions to adjourn, as well as other dilatory motions, may be made at any time. But what the Chair desires the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to state is whether that gentleman holds that it is impossible for less than a majority of the House to enforce the attendance of absent members.

Mr. HOAR. Against the resistance of one-fifth of the members present who may choose to alternate these motions and call the yeas and nays upon them, I do so hold.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to say——

Mr. HOAR. And I will be perfectly willing to take the recollection of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] upon that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must say that the rule is certainly well established that when two motions, one to adjourn and the other for a call of the House, are made, the motion to adjourn takes precedence. But after the motion to adjourn has been voted down and the House has ordered a call of the House to be made, a motion to adjourn is not then in order. The only motion then in order, and in order at every successive stage of the proceedings, is the motion that further proceeding under the call be dispensed with. That has always been held in this House to be parliamentary law; and there is no exception to it except this, that at the end of a very weary contest, in order to cut the matter short, a motion to adjourn has been accepted nem. con. without any point of order being raised upon it.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will see that it is in the power of the minority to accomplish the same result in a dozen other ways, as when a member is brought in and a motion is made to excuse him, the yeas and nays can be called on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is whether the House has the power to send for and compel the attendance of absent members.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman from Indiana thinks that the motion to adjourn during a call of the House is not in order. I will call his attention to the following in Barclay's Digest:

> It is not in order for the House to take a recess during a call of the House.—Journal, 1, 26, page 843. [Indeed no motion, except to adjourn or with reference to the call, is ever entertained during a call.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Where is that?

Mr. HOAR. On page 38 of Barclay's Digest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has held that no motion except one pertaining to a call of the House is in order. But the Chair holds that the House has power to enforce the attendance of absent members, and that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] ——

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will pardon me for making the suggestion——

Mr. TERRY. I hope the Chair will decide this question and be done with it.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Chair whether the power to enforce the attendance of members does not involve the power not to do it, and therefore whether a motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not willing to hold that the House has no power to enforce the attendance of its members, and will therefore rule that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that a warrant be issued for the arrest of members absent without leave is in order. From that ruling the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] takes an appeal.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair will pardon me. I understood that the motion to lay on the table was insisted upon as being in order, and that that was the question on which the point of order was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion has been made to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair entertain that motion to lay on the table? That is the point to which I desired to direct attention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly; the Chair cannot do otherwise.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair hear me a moment on the subject of the motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly; the Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. In Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, page 103, the Chair will find this rule laid down:

> A motion for a call of the House cannot be suppressed by a motion to lie on the table, but must be decided specifically.

My point is that, if you cannot suppress the motion for a call of the House by a motion to lay on the table, you cannot by a similar motion suppress subsequent proceedings, as, for instance, the order to send for absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois mean to say to the Chair that the motion to lay on the table is not in order?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do, sir. I so assert, and I have quoted the law for it. The only motion in the first place is for a call of the House, and then only such motions are in order as pertain to that call. Hence it has been decided in this House that a motion to lay on the table a motion for a call of the House was not in order. Why? Because it did not pertain to the call, but was merely a dilatory motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman mean to say that a motion to lay on the table an appeal from the decision of the Chair is not in order?

Mr. SPRINGER. That pertains to the business before the House and must be disposed of at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably; and that is the motion before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not understand that that was the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It certainly is the motion before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood it was a motion to lay on the table the motion to issue a warrant to bring in absentees. The motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair is in order of course.

Mr. CLYMER. Will the Chair state the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that a warrant shall issue for absentees is now in order. From that decision, the gentleman from Massachusetts has taken an appeal.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair does not quite state the exact posture of the question. The decision from which I desire to take an appeal is the ruling that a motion to suspend proceedings under the call is not in order till the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is disposed of.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CLYMER, there were—ayes 86, noes 35.

Mr. WHITE. As there is no quorum voting I ask for tellers.

Mr. BANNING and Mr. CLYMER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I rise to a point of order. I understood the Speaker to rule a moment ago that in the absence of a quorum only two motions were in order: the motion to adjourn and the motion for a call of the House. But I understand that now the Chair has entertained a motion to lay on the table an appeal. I want to know whether that motion is in order or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot decline to entertain it.

Mr. HOAR. At any rate, the point comes too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under any circumstances, the Chair could not avoid entertaining the motion. Gentlemen must know that these dilatory motions can be made indefinitely.

Mr. MUTCHLER. In view of the previous statement of the Chair that only two motions—the motion to adjourn and a motion for a call—were in order, I wish to know how it is in order to now make a motion to lay an appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably every gentleman in the House knows that these dilatory motions can be kept up indefinitely. There is no means of avoiding it, so far as the Chair is informed. He would be very glad to stop it, if it could be done.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I understood the Chair to rule that the only motions in order, in the absence of a quorum, were the motion to adjourn and the motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending that, an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair. Does the gentleman suppose the Chair can refuse to entertain an appeal from his decision?

Mr. MUTCHLER. Can less than a quorum decide the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It cannot.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the Chair hear me a moment on the right of appeal?

[Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. HOLMAN. At first blush it would seem that the right existed, although I have never known it in my experience. In an attempt to break a call of the House, I have never known the existence of the point in my experience, neither has the gentleman from Massachusetts, I venture to say, nor any other gentleman who has served here long.

Mr. HOAR. Has the gentleman ever heard of such a speech as he is delivering while the House is dividing? [Laughter.]

Mr. MUTCHLER. Is debate in order?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly it is not while the House is dividing.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reason why the appeal cannot be taken is because this is not the House in the absence of a quorum. It cannot establish a rule. It cannot establish an order. It must proceed simply under the rule. It cannot vary from that rule. The rule is constitutionally defined and based on constitutional provision.

If the Chair will indulge me I will read three propositions upon which the whole matter rests. First, the constitutional provision, with which the Chair is familiar; that is, the House may, which means shall, compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide. Under that constitutional provision the following rules have been established, and I wish to say to my friend from Massachusetts that he was not reading from the rules, but from the interpolation of the compiler, drawn from the casual events of the House in the ordinary course of business from year to year; so they are not to be regarded as the law of the House. Therefore I depend upon the rules.

Mr. FOSTER. They are pretty good authority.

Mr. HOLMAN. Rule 34 provides that any fifteen members (including the Speaker, if there be one) shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members. That was made to carry out the constitutional provision. Rules 35 and 36 are to be taken together. They are rules adopted by the House under the constitutional provision, and they are the only ones directly applicable and covering the whole ground. Rule 35 provides that upon a call of the House or in taking the yeas and nays on any question the names of the members shall be called alphabetically.

Rule 36 provides that upon the call of the House the names of the members shall be called over by the Clerk and the absentees noted; after which the names of the absentees shall again be called over; the doors shall then be shut and those for whom no excuse or insufficient excuses are made may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody wherever to be found, by special messengers, to be appointed for that purpose.

All else is merely an interpolation upon those leading rules established under the Constitution. The result deduced from this is that while a motion to suspend all further proceedings under the call may be made at every stage from the necessity of the case, it is the only motion which can be made. Appeal cannot be taken from the decision of the presiding officer, for the reason that it is not an organized House, but simply acting under constitutional provision to compel the attendance of a quorum. On that account I have never known an instance until this evening of the taking of an appeal, and none can be found in our history. None is in order except when pertaining directly to the call. The call must be dispensed with before an adjournment can take place; although, as I have stated, there are many exceptions to that; but they were exceptions when no point of order was made. Those regular steps are peremptory, and have been positively enforced over and over again in past years. Where a call of the House has been ordered, no motion has been entertained except at every successive stage where all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. A member is brought in, and is excused or not excused, and there is another stage. Then a motion to suspend all further proceedings under the call is in order, and so on. Every gentleman can see that it is the inevitable logic of the constitutional provision, and those are the necessary steps which must result from it in bringing about a quorum in the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts will not assert that one-third of the members present may by alternate motions render the constitutional provision void.

Mr. HOAR. My answer to that is that the Constitution makes fifteen or more a quorum of the House, and for this purpose we act as a House. The Speaker retains the chair, the Clerk makes the Journal, and the whole proceedings are read the next day. It has the authority of a House.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Suppose upon a question to lay an appeal upon the table it is found a quorum is not voting, is it in order to move again that there be a call of the House?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. MUTCHLER. What is the next thing in order then?

Mr. HOAR. On all questions relating to a call of the House a quorum is not necessary; not merely on the general question, but on the subsidiary questions connected with it.

Mr. MUTCHLER. The pending question is on laying on the table an appeal from the decision of the Chair. Now, if on the vote on that question the House is found without a quorum, what then?

Mr. HOAR. That is a question pertaining to the proceedings under the call of the House, and a vote of fifteen members is sufficient. Another answer to the gentleman is, that wherever a body of men are acting with a presiding officer at their head, any member has the right, by universal parliamentary law, to take an appeal from his decision to the body itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will undoubtedly entertain the appeal from the decision; but the Chair will not hold that the House can thereby be deprived of the power of sending for its absent members.

Mr. EDEN. If the motion to adjourn be now in order, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a motion now pending to lay on the table an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to hear nothing at this time except on the parliamentary question. The Chair will very gladly hear the gentleman from Indiana on the question of order.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. This is a new question to me; and I discover that the House is very much plagued over it. If the object be to get rid of it, I want to make a suggestion to the House. This difficulty has been raised by two members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. If the House will now connect with this question the question of greenbacks and silver currency and send it to that committee, I think we may get out of this difficulty. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the question of laying on the table the appeal taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. AINSWORTH. I would like to have the question stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.] The Chair has already, he thinks, stated it plainly enough.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 19, not voting 185; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, Banning, Bradford, Bright, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Cutler, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Foster, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Henderson, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lord, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, McDill, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Payne, Poppleton, Potter, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, and Yeates—82.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradley, Crapo, Crounse, Eames, Hoar, Joyce, Lapham, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Sampson, A. Herr Smith, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, G. Wiley Wells, White, Willard, and James Wilson—19.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynch, Lynde, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Monroe, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Young—185.

So the appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid upon the table.

Mr. CONGER and Mr. LUTTRELL rose.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to reconsider the vote just taken is in order; and the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider is also in order.

Mr. CONGER. I thought I was recognized to make the motion to reconsider. I spoke first.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I believe I was first recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very clear that this motion cannot be entertained. If it could be entertained there could be no such thing as a call of the House.

Mr. SHEAKLEY. I ask that by unanimous consent we take a recess until eleven o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mere dilatory motions are certainly not in order. The House having ordered a call of the House, and having refused to suspend proceedings under the call, and nothing having since intervened, I submit that the motion to reconsider is not now in order. The only motion in order is the motion that was made since the call of the House has been ordered, that the Speaker issue his warrant for the arrest of absent members.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the Chair entertained the motion of the genman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER?]

Mr. LUTTRELL. I have made the motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that a motion to reconsider the vote by which an appeal was laid upon the table is not in order. It does not pertain to this call at all.

Mr. MUTCHLER. As I understand it, when it has been ascertained that there is not a quorum present the only motions in order are a motion to adjourn and a motion for a call of the House. We have had a call and ascertained that there is not a quorum present; there is no other motion in order except a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. O; if that were true there would be an end to the call.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I ask the Speaker if any motion is in order except a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] takes it for granted that the action of the House has been final and moves to reconsider the vote by which the appeal was laid upon the table, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; otherwise certainly the Chair would hold that no motion is in order except a motion to adjourn or a motion to send for absentees.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I understood the Chair to say that no motion would be in order but a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has said so, but no objection has been raised to the want of a quorum, and the Chair understood that the last motion has been laid upon the table.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I withdraw the motion to reconsider and lay upon the table.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I renew it.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I make the point of order that it is not in order, because there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist that no gentleman made the point of order that no quorum was present, and unless that is done it is always regarded that a quorum is present.

Mr. ATKINS. Why, that point has been made all night.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I make it and I now ask that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] be put.

Mr. MUTCHLER. The Chair announced on a call of the House that no quorum was present and ordered the doors to be closed, and they are still closed, which shows that there is no quorum present. A motion has been made to adjourn and lost, and now I submit that the only other motion in order is to issue a warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in the absent members.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the doors be opened and let us all go home.

Mr. CONGER. Is that a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman from Tennessee make?

Mr. ATKINS. My motion was merely in jest.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that it is not in order to move the reconsideration of a vote as to a decision of the Chair during a call of the House, and that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] is in order.

Mr. CONGER. I appeal from that decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot do that. The Chair will put the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw that motion for a moment to allow me to ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order when a motion to adjourn is pending.

(Cries of "Regular order!" and "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent for not more than five minutes' time.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I object, and call for the regular order.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRISON's motion to adjourn; and there were—yeas 55, nays 52.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I call for tellers.

The question was put on ordering tellers; and only 18 members voted therefor; which not being one-fifth of a quorum, tellers were not ordered.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, and Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 31 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 64, not voting 169; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Bagby, John H. Baker, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Davy, Durham, Eames, Forney, Fort, Foster, Goodin, Haymond, Henderson, Hoar, Hunton, Hurd, Joyce, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Lord, Magoon, McDill, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Powell, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, G. Wiley Wells, Willard, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—53.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cutler, Dibrell, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Thomas L. Jones, Lane, Levy, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Morgan, Mutchler, Payne, Poppleton, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Teese, Terry, Throckmorton, Turney, John L. Vance, Wigginton, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, and Yeates—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—169.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. MORRISON. I thought I had a motion pending that the Speaker issue a warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms directing him to bring the absentees into the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that motion is pending.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I move to lay the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] on the table.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the motion I have made take precedence of that which has been made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SPRINGER. That has just been decided on appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No point of order has been decided upon an appeal because no quorum has been present. The Chair will recognize the motion of the gentleman from Illinois as being now before the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. And on that I call the previous question.

Mr. HOAR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain that class of motions; there are certainly enough dilatory motions to be made. The Chair has once recognized an appeal from his decision upon that very question and will not recognize another.

Mr. PAGE. I staid here a member of the majority one year ago last winter while the other side of the House kept us here for two days and two nights making dilatory motions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that perfectly; and he also understands that he can stay here two days and two nights again.

Mr. PAGE. Very well; he cannot stay here unless he allows this side to make dilatory motions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to bring in the absentees must be presented to the House. The Chair has already so ruled and the House has sustained him.

Mr. PAGE. But an appeal is again taken from that decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has refused to entertain that appeal, having already entertained it once.

Mr. HOAR. Will not the Chair entertain another appeal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker——

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAGE. I call for a division of the House on that question.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is too late.

Mr. HOAR. I rose in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain an amendment after the motion of the gentleman from Illinois has been submitted to the House.

Mr. HOAR. I rose in my place and addressed the Chair before the question was submitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division having been called for, those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will rise and stand until counted by the Chair.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 81, noes 30.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. PAGE called for tellers,

Mr. RICE and others called for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first submit the question upon ordering tellers.

Upon ordering tellers there were 25 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon ordering tellers upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICE. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE and others renewed the call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being 36 in the affirmative, (more than one-fifth of the last vote.)

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Chair will entertain no question of order at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I rose to move an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the Speaker pro tempore be directed to issue his warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring the absentees into the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 78, nays 32, not voting 176; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, Banning, Bradford, Bright, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Cutler, Denison, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lord, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Payne, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Teese, Terry, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, John L. Vance, Wigginton, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, and Yeates—78.

NAYS—Messrs. John H. Baker, Bradley, Cannon, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Davy, Eames, Fort, Foster, Goodin, Haymond, Henderson, Hoar, Joyce, Lapham, Lawrence, Magoon, Monroe, O'Neill, Page, Pierce, Sampson, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stowell, Thompson, Tufts, Van Vorhes, White, and William B. Williams—32.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Anderson, Ashe, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Packer, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schumaker Seelye, Slemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wike, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Young—176.

So the motion of Mr. MORRISON was agreed to.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider——

Mr. MORRISON. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. That motion certainly cannot be made. It is merely dilatory.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DURHAM in the chair.) The Chair will decide that nothing is now in order except the issuing of the warrant and the bringing in of absentees. [Applause.]

Mr. THORNBURGH. From that ruling of the Chair I appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing else is in order under the former ruling of the Chair.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I appeal from that decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not entertain the appeal. [Applause.]

Mr. THORNBURGH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain no motion or proposition. There is but one thing to be done; that is to bring in the absentees.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Then I move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "Order."] Does the Chair hold that, other business having intervened, the motion to adjourn is not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House directed that the absentees should be brought in; and the Chair decides to entertain no motion until the absentees are brought before the House.

[Mr. SAYLER resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.]

Mr. THORNBURGH. I move that the House do now adjourn, other business having intervened since the motion was last entertained.

Mr. RANDALL. The warrant for absentees has been issued of course; and we can vote down the motion to adjourn.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I insist upon my right to make this motion; and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably the motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; has the order for the arrest of absent members been issued?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we can vote down the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. After the warrant to bring in absentees has been issued, is any motion whatever in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably a motion to adjourn is in order; and another motion, that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, is in order. These motions may be alternated indefinitely. The question now before the House is upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. THORNBURGH] that the House adjourn.

The question being put, the Speaker declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. THORNBURGH called for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 16, noes not counted.

Mr. PIERCE. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to make a suggestion which I trust will solve this trouble. [Cries of "Regular order."] I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a suggestion for the purpose of bringing this session to a more agreeable close than has been promised. [Cries of "Regular order."] If gentlemen will hear my suggestion they will find that I am not going to say anything that will trouble them. [Renewed cries of "Regular order."]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know any regular order except the arrest of absentees and bringing them before the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. My suggestion is that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] who made the motion that my colleague [Mr. COX] be permitted to proceed in order, withdraw that motion, and that then my colleague be allowed to speak to the point of order, and, if after so speaking the House shall be willing to hear him further, that then he be allowed to proceed.

Mr. FOSTER. That is fair.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. In that way I think we may possibly arrive at a solution of this trouble; at least by trying it no harm can be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen from New York [Mr. HEWITT] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. COX] may now be allowed to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. COX. I am very much obliged to gentlemen——

Several MEMBERS. Wait. Let us understand the question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Unless the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is withdrawn, I for one shall object to any arrangement till a quorum be present.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am willing and have always been willing to do anything to restore harmony and good feeling. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Is it in order to withdraw the motion pending a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that this proceeding is by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. Before unanimous consent is granted would it not be proper to withdraw the demand for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. The suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is one which has been made two or three times on the democratic side of the House; and it seems to be a fair one. I do not think there will be any objection on this side.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This is the point I proposed to reach four hours ago. I hope the suggestion will be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I object to any proceedings of that kind with closed doors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the request to be that by unanimous consent all proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with, and the gentleman from New York be permitted to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the objection comes too late. Part of the unanimous agreement has been executed.

Mr. CONGER. Not at all too late. I did not hear the gentleman withdraw it. I did not suppose he would withdraw the motion he has persisted in for hours.

Several MEMBERS. O!

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman is evidently weakening.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is bad-tempered while I am good-tempered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order the doors to be opened.

Mr. CAULFIELD. O, no.

Mr. RANDALL. I will renew my motion if gentlemen are not satisfied with the withdrawal of it. There being no objection I will withdraw it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to understand how this thing is done. I want to know if the gentleman has power to withdraw the motion or whether the House not having a quorum has power to give consent to its withdrawal in a parliamentary sense. I understand in fact he has not any such power. I wish more light on that matter. Can anything be done of a parliamentary nature?

Mr. RANDALL. You can sit down by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly; and you can rise by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Keep your hands down. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to understand my rights as a member here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the gentleman can object to anything out of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to understand the gentleman's rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not hear the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Nor does the Chair hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to say to the gentleman he will not withdraw any of his rights.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. Can the House allow this by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. At this time, without a quorum, pending a call of the House, with the absentees sent for?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can suspend all these proceedings by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVY. I think the proposition made by my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] is a fair and honorable one, and I think this side of the House ought to accept it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this Monday or Tuesday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is Monday.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then a motion to suspend the rules is in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to suspend the rules is in order, this being Monday. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted while speaking last evening, as the House is aware, by a point of order, which perhaps was well taken, owing to the use of language which is not regarded as parliamentary. It was used under peculiar provocation, as the House saw, and for its use I have to make an apology to the House, and to recall the language as unparliamentary.

My unparliamentary language had reference to statements which were denied in the card which I hold in my hand from Governor Tilden, dated New York, November 4, 1868. I carried that card in my hand to the other side of the House with perhaps too much belligerent demonstration. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. It was the only weapon you had. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Yes; it was the only weapon I had or needed. I ask to have that card of Governor Tilden read. It is a justification of my statement. I ask to have it read, to go into the RECORD, to make my remarks complete.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late to object.

Mr. COX. I ask that the card be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CARD FROM MR. TILDEN.

To the editor of the Evening Post:

SIR: My attention has been called to an article in your journal of last evening containing a circular to which my name is appended. I hasten to assure you that you will not lose your reputation as critics by assuming, on internal evidence, as you have correctly done, that no such paper was ever written, signed, issued, or authorized by me, or with any participation or knowledge on my part. I have read it for the first time in your columns; but I have no reason to believe that it had any such evil purpose as you suspect. For myself, I refused in 1844 to sign the famous "secret circular" relating to Texas, which is celebrated in the history of the Evening Post, though I might have been tempted by the illustrious association in which I should have found myself. Neither before that nor since have I ever been concerned in any circular marked "secret," "confidential," or "private;" nor shall I be, unless I should adopt that device for the purpose of getting some valuable truth, disguised in such a form, secured a wide publicity in the Evening Post and all the republican newspapers.

Very truly, yours,

S. J. TILDEN.

NEW YORK, November 4, 1868.

Mr. COX. I would not have been so persistent in bringing that denial to the attention of the House but for the fact that I had seen in speeches here and in journals all over this country this libelous injury done to Governor Tilden. And as one of the Representatives of the State of New York, and familiar with all this business at that time, it seemed to be a duty on my part to place the seal of condemnation and denial on any statement in contradiction of that card. I now yield to my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] for a short time.

Mr. CONGER. Where is that taken from?

Mr. COX. This paper is copied from the New York Tribune.

Mr. CONGER. Of what date?

Mr. COX. Of the other day; but it was in the Evening Post of November 4, 1868, where I saw it originally. It was recently recopied in the Tribune. There is no doubt about the truth of the statement.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to fix the date of the first publication.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The date is November 4, 1868. I saw it myself at that date in the Evening Post.

Mr. COX. I saw it also. There can be no doubt of it. I can give you the files to-morrow, if it be not to-morrow already.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] having made an explanation, I think it right that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] should now have an opportunity of saying a word if he so desires.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Iowa has had an hour already.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I understand the gentleman from Iowa desires to speak to the point of order only. If so, I shall be glad to hear him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands there is no point of order before the House.

Mr. HOAR. That is entirely contrary to the understanding which was come to.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. HOAR. I will remind the Chair that I made a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] then made a certain motion, which has been withdrawn. I propose at the proper time to withdraw the point of order. But it is still pending, and it was to that the gentleman from New York spoke. That was the understanding we all had of it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I suppose I have the floor.

Many MEMBERS. No, no; not at all.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I have but a single word to say. The article which has just been read I have now seen or heard read for the first time in my life. And if the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] in pursuance of that understanding of the most agreeable nature which has always existed between us, had advised me in such a way that I could learn what it was, and I had known the contents of that paper, I should have spoken of it as I did of the denial subsequently made, which I supposed was the only one made by Mr. Tilden. That was in his pamphlet published in 1873. My desire was to state the facts with perfect fairness. I had relied upon the statements of one of the most conscientious public writers of the country, the principal editor of Harper's Weekly, in an article in which he gave the denial as having been made in 1873. I knew of no other denial made by Governor Tilden until to-night.

The House will judge of my surprise when without any explanation addressed by the gentleman from New York to myself, and without there being anything in our personal relations to lead me to expect it, he made allegations touching myself which I knew to be unjustifiable, and which I think any gentleman on the floor knowing to be unjustifiable would have felt himself bound to declare in emphatic parliamentary language to be in incorrect. I have never in my life been called to order for unparliamentary speech. I have not yet been, and I am not yet aware that my language was unparliamentary. But I will say frankly, that while still affirming the fact alleged to be incorrect, as uttered by the gentlemen from New York, the relations between us were of such a nature as should have satisfied him that I had no intention to attribute to him a misstatement in the offensive personal sense which he appeared to attribute to me.

Mr. COX. If my friend from Iowa—for I shall now call him my friend—had used the word "incorrect," there would have been no provocation and no remark that looked like retaliation. He used the word "untruth," which has almost the same signification as the word which I unhappily used. I have recalled my language, and the gentleman from Iowa, very properly as I think, has recalled his.

I now yield to my colleague from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] who wishes to address himself one moment to another part of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, to me the speech which the gentleman from Iowa delivered this evening was a painful surprise and a melancholy experience. If I had not heard it, I could not have believed that a gentleman of his intellectual endowments could so far abdicate his own self-respect and forfeit the good opinion of his fellow-members in this House as to have indulged in the partisan and, I am sorry to add, the malicious statements which he has made in regard to Governor Tilden. I confess that I do not intend to make any elaborate reply to what he has said in this House. I approach the subject as I would take hold of a slimy snake, with a desire to get rid of it at the earliest possible moment. But charges were made against one whom I have known for so many years and with such intimacy that it seems to me I have no other course to take than to brand the charges as utterly false before this House and before the country.

Mr. PAGE. Which charges does the gentleman from New York mean?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will state the charges; I was going to state them. The first charge was that Governor Tilden had been a secessionist, and there were quoted as authority for that assertion statements and passages from an open letter to the late Judge Kent, dated in 1860. The gentleman from Iowa possesses only extracts from that letter. He was good enough to allow me to look at those extracts.

Mr. EAMES. I rise to a point of order. If there is anything properly before the House at this time, we ought not as Representatives of the American people to consider it with closed doors.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors have been ordered to be opened.

Mr. CLYMER. And everybody is asleep and nobody wants to come in here.

Mr. EAMES. Some of us want to go out.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, I have only to say in regard to that letter that neither the gentleman from Iowa nor any other person can understand the true purport and bearing of it without having the entire letter before him and without having some reference to the circumstances under which it was written. It is not saying much that since 1860 a great many people in this country have had their theories of government changed and their ideas of political duties enlarged. It is possible that in 1860, before the late strife, Governor Tilden may have entertained views in common with Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson, and other great men who have given construction to the Constitution and Government of this country, which now would be modified. But all that I can see in the extract which he read relates rather to that era of the Government when the States were bound together, not by the Constitution, but by the Articles of Confederation.

The next charge that the gentleman made against Governor Tilden was in exactly these words: "That he was a disunionist." When the question was pressed home to him he traveled around the point a little, but still the charge remained that he was a disunionist. I do not know upon what he based that charge. I can only say that at the outbreak of the rebellion I was in daily and almost in hourly communion with him, and I know that no more loyal or patriotic heart beat in the United States at that date; and when the gentleman from Iowa challenges his friends to say when and where he ever made any contribution to the Union cause or ever assisted a soldier to the war, I answer him by saying that when the first call for troops came, Tammany Hall, which had not then fallen into the hands of the ring, raised a regiment, and the grand sachem of Tammany Hall, William D. Kennedy, was colonel of the regiment. It was officered mostly by members of the Tammany Society, and being myself a member and from the state of my health unable to go to the war, although I rendered other services, I sent my nephew as one of the officers of that regiment.

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM. Does not the gentleman know that the call for the meeting at Cooper Institute immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter was presented to Mr. Tilden for him to sign and he refused to sign it and refused to attend the meeting?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will answer that question that it is not true that he refused to sign the call, and that it is true that he did attend the meeting, [applause,] and I defy that gentleman to bring any authority for the charge he has insinuated.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is a fact as well known in the State of New York as any other facts in its history.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. It is not so. Mr. Samuel Sloan, the present president of the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad Company, then a member of the Union safety committee of New York, applied to Mr. Tilden at a time when he was engaged in the trial of a case before a referee to affix his name to the call, and he said, "I am very busy just now; send me the resolutions after I am out of this case, and if they are entirely proper I will sign the call." When the meeting took place he attended it. The call was never sent to him and he never refused to sign it, but like the prudent and sagacious man which he is, he desired to know the nature of the resolutions. They did receive his absolute and unqualified approval.

Now I say that Tammany Hall raised a regiment, and that Governor Tilden was a contributor, and a large contributor, to the fund required to fit out the regiment.

Mr. CONGER. How much?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am not going to quote dollars and cents. Patriotism is above dollars and cents in some quarters, but enough was raised by the democrats of the city to fit out a regiment without asking assistance from the Government of the United States or from the city of New York. [Applause.] Now so much for the charge of his being a disunionist.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly. I am here to answer questions.

Mr. CONGER. It is denied in the public press that Mr. Tilden ever contributed one cent for any such purpose. [Laughter on the democratic side of the House, and a voice "In the National Republican?"]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now what is the question?

Mr. CONGER. If the amiable gentleman opposite will permit me I will ask it. I say it is denied in the public press that Governor Tilden ever contributed any money whatever to the raising of any regiment or corps of the Army. Will the gentleman state to the House when and where and what amount he ever did contribute?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I state when, when I say the Tammany regiment was raised; and I state where, in the city of New York; and I state how much, for I do not know the exact amount, but it was all he was asked to give, and the democrats did not go begging, carrying the hat around among the republicans, [laughter,] and certainly we did not get any help from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER rose.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now, I have answered that question and I decline to have any further controversy with him.

Mr. CONGER. Then I cannot ask any further questions.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will answer no more questions from you, because you do not ask them in a fair spirit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York must address the Chair, and not the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I beg pardon of the Chair and of the House.

Mr. DAVY. I supposed we had settled all our difficulties and that this was a sort of a love-feast.

Mr. RANDALL. The love-feast is to be on the 4th of March next.

Mr. DAVY. We must not get up our mad again.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Subsequently to this period, I know of no man in New York who was more frequently called into counsel there and in Washington during the troublous times of the war, and when there was delay in raising the men required to recruit the armies of the United States I know that twice he was called for by President Lincoln and came to Washington and held careful consultation with him, resulting in the early and rapid filling of the quota from the State of New York. And I know that during no period of the whole of that trying time was there ever a doubt expressed in the city of New York in any quarter as to the loyalty and patriotism of Samuel J. Tilden.

The gentleman from Iowa says that when Mr. Tilden went to the Chicago convention he was in favor of a resolution practically declaring that the war was a failure and ought to be brought to an end. That gentleman must have known, if he reads the newspapers, that within a very recent period, certainly within a month, there has been made public a positive statement from Mr. Manton Marble, who was the secretary of the committee on resolutions, that Governor Tilden opposed the resolution of which the gentleman from Iowa speaks; that he opposed it publicly and in private. It is within my own knowledge that after the nomination was tendered to General McClellan, Governor Tilden urged him to make such a declaration in his letter of acceptance as would nullify that portion of the Chicago platform.

Mr. RANDALL. Which was, "the Union at all hazards." Those were the words.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Those were the words inserted in McClellan's letter. Now the gentleman from Iowa says that there never was any occasion in which Governor Tilden made a declaration in favor of the Union or the prosecution of the war for its preservation. If that gentleman would study the records of the Chicago convention for the sake of doing justice, as he has evidently studied them for the sake of doing injustice, to Governor Tilden, he would find that in that convention, and before the New York delegation, in an open meeting, Governor Tilden said that the adjustment of the controversy between the North and the South on any other basis than the restoration of the Union was impossible; that the moment any party went out of the Union the questions must be settled by war, and the war must be prosecuted until the questions were settled.

These were his declarations, published in the Chicago and New York papers at the very date of the Chicago convention, and fortunately for the gentleman, who likes very recent and modern literature, he can find those declarations repeated in a sketch published in the Louisville Courier-Journal on the 25th of April last. That is my answer to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that Governor Tilden never made any declaration in favor of the prosecution of the war, and that he was a disunionist.

We now come down to the next charge, that Governor Tilden was the associate of William M. Tweed on a democratic committee, that he levied a contribution on William M. Tweed of $5,000, and that he issued a circular in combination with William M. Tweed intended to promote the fraudulent election of a governor of the State of New York.

It is true that Governor Tilden was chairman of the democratic committee of the State of New York; and it is also true that William M. Tweed was a member of that committee. And if the gentleman knows anything about the organization of such committees in the State of New York, he knows that each district nominates and sends its own member; that Governor Tilden had no more to do with the appointment of William M. Tweed as a member of that committee than he has to do with the man who is supposed to regulate the moon. He was there rightfully a member of the committee, and at the time he was so acting he had not achieved the bad eminence which he subsequently attained and which he now occupies.

No contribution was ever levied upon Mr. Tweed. Mr. Tweed did as other people have done, as I myself have done, and as I have no doubt the gentleman from Iowa has done, sent a contribution to the fund required by the committee to carry on the State election. That was levying no contribution.

Then as to the issue of that circular, the lie has been nailed here by my colleague, [Mr. COX.] If any man doubts whether that declaration of Governor Tilden, which has been read, was published in the Evening Post of the 4th of November, 1868, the files are accessible to them. I saw it with my own eyes; I know it was then published. I know that not more than twenty-four hours elapsed from the time the charge was made in the Evening Post, and it was first made in that paper, until the denial was made in the same paper. That denial I here insert:

CARD FROM MR. TILDEN.

To the editor of the Evening Post:

SIR: My attention has been called to an article in your journal of last evening containing a circular to which my name is appended. I hasten to assure you that you will not lose your reputation as critics by assuming, on internal evidence, as you have correctly done, that no such paper was ever written, signed, issued, or authorized by me or with any participation or knowledge on my part. I have read it for the first time in your columns; but I have no reason to believe that it had any such evil purpose as you suspect. For myself, I refused in 1844 to sign the famous secret circular relating to Texas, which is celebrated in the history of the Evening Post, though I might have been tempted by the illustrious association in which I should have found myself. Neither before that nor since have I ever been concerned in any circular marked "secret," "confidential," or "private;" nor shall I be, unless I should adopt that device for the purpose of getting some valuable truth, disguised in such a form, secured a wide publicity in the Evening Post and all the republican newspapers.

Very truly yours,

S. J. TILDEN.

NEW YORK, November 4, 1868.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it ever known who perpetrated that forgery on Governor Tilden?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Nothing was ever known positively about it except that Mr. Tweed was probably the person who sent out that circular. I have never heard that there is any positive evidence to that effect. Bad as he is, unhappy as he is to-day for his crimes, I hesitate to charge him with a new crime without evidence. In that respect I hope the gentleman from Iowa will follow my example.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Does the gentleman claim that the circular was issued for an improper purpose?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I do not know whether it was proper or improper; but I say it was charged to be improper by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I believe Mr. Tilden claims in his letter that it was not improper.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. This was in 1868. Subsequently the ring, perhaps beginning their corrupt practices at that time for aught I know to the contrary, became so powerful in New York that they threatened to drive out and succeeded in driving out almost every decent man from the democratic party of that city.

Governor Tilden for more than three years, like a sleuth-hound upon the scent, followed these people patiently, secretly, diligently, spending that money of which the gentleman from Iowa thinks he is so parsimonious with a most liberal hand; yes, with a magnificence of liberality that no private citizen has ever exhibited in this country in the performance of a public duty not imposed by any obligation of law. I was with him in those transactions; I know what he did; I know his untiring efforts day and night; I know what an army of clerks he kept busy; I know how he tracked these people to their dens of iniquity and finally dragged them forth to public execration; and not stopping there, he has pursued them until they are either in prison or in exile, and judgments amounting to millions of dollars have been taken against them, and over $600,000 in one case has been restored to the treasury of the city of New York. [Applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. That conduct of Governor Tilden is a warning to all such people, and accounts for much of the opposition to his election.

Mr. DAVY. Will my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] allow me just one question?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. DAVY. Did not Mr. Tilden meet with Mr. Tweed as delegate in the State convention which convened at Rochester a long time after these occurrences, and after the frauds of Mr. Tweed had been exposed, and did Mr. Tilden raise his voice against Mr. Tweed taking a seat in that convention?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. My colleague [Mr. COX] was a delegate to that convention and can answer better than I can.

Mr. DAVY. I asked the gentleman who is addressing the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly; but I yield to my colleague for an answer to that question because he was an eye-witness, and an eye-witness is better than any second-hand testimony.

Mr. COX. I was a delegate to that convention along with Governor Tilden and the other delegates named from the different districts.

A MEMBER. To which convention?

Mr. COX. To the Rochester Convention, to which my colleague [Mr. DAVY] has referred.

A MEMBER. In what year?

Mr. COX. I think in 1871.

Mr. DAVY. Does my colleague refer to the judicial convention or the State convention?

Mr. COX. I refer to the only time a convention ever met there.

Mr. DAVY. O, no; conventions met there several times. The judicial convention met there.

Mr. COX. Not in recent years. Let me answer the gentleman's question. I know that Mr. Tilden's efforts drove William M. Tweed out of that convention.

Mr. DAVY. I asked the gentleman whether Mr. Tilden raised his voice in that convention against Mr. Tweed taking a seat.

Mr. COX. There was no necessity for his doing so, because Mr. Tweed was not in the convention.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Tweed had no seat in that convention.

Mr. DAVY. Was any resolution passed in that convention against the Tweed delegation taking seats?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The question which the gentleman asked me was whether Mr. Tilden protested against Mr. Tweed taking a seat. Mr. Tweed took no seat in that convention.

Mr. DAVY. That is not the question I put to the gentleman. I asked him whether Mr. Tilden ever raised his voice in that convention against Mr. Tweed taking a seat.

Mr. RANDALL. He did not have a seat there.

Mr. DAVY. He did have a seat in that convention.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I can give a satisfactory answer to the gentleman's question. I can say to him that Mr. Tweed at that time knew that Governor Tilden was his bitter enemy, and Governor Tilden knew that Mr. Tweed was trying to crush him; and, as the gentleman knows perfectly well, if it had not been for the stanch support and absolute confidence which the rural democracy of the State of New York extended to Governor Tilden he would have been driven from the chairmanship of the State committee, as Mr. Tweed threatened he should be. But he was kept there by the honest democrats of the State of New York until he had pulled down and destroyed this temple of iniquity and driven these scoundrels out of the places they disgraced.

Mr. DAVY rose.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now I am not going to be interrupted and cross-questioned.

Mr. DAVY. I have one more question I would like my colleague to answer.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will answer; but I want to say that I am an utterly unpracticed speaker. I have never before addressed a body like this without notes for anything like this length of time. If gentlemen are putting these questions with the purpose of disconcerting me, they ought to have more respect for themselves.

Mr. DAVY. I hope my colleague does not attribute any such motive to me.

A MEMBER, (to Mr. HEWITT.) You can hold your own very well.

Mr. DAVY. I want the naked facts of this case.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The bare, naked fact is this: There was war, "war to the knife," between Governor Tilden and Mr. Tweed; and it ended in the defeat and exile of Mr. Tweed. [Loud applause.] That is all there is about it.

Mr. DAVY. Now will my colleague permit me to ask him——

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will not be catechised.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVY] take his seat. His colleague [Mr. HEWITT] declines to be interrupted further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist that the gentleman from New York shall take his seat.

Mr. RANDALL, (to Mr. DAVY.) Take your seat; you are out of order.

Mr. DAVY. Now I ask my colleague——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist that the gentleman from New York, Mr. DAVY, shall take his seat.

Mr. DAVY. Certainly. I bow to the decision of the Chair; but I did not propose to yield to the decision of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I call this House to witness that I have answered and am willing to answer every question of a substantive character bearing upon the merits of this case which any man can ask me. But when gentlemen undertake to catechise me about petty matters of details I must decline to answer.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is perfectly notorious, and certainly no man in his senses, no fair and just man will ever for a moment intimate that there was the slightest intimacy, personal or political, at any time between Samuel J. Tilden and William M. Tweed. There never was, sir. There was that association which comes from the enforced appointment of men on committees and of their living in the same community and belonging to the same party; but the one man stood in the community above and beyond reproach, and the other was always an object of suspicion and finally of detestation.

Mr. DAVY rose.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will not be interrupted more. I have shown a disposition to answer all reasonable questions, and I decline to be interrupted any more. Now the gentleman from Iowa——

Mr. LAPHAM. The gentleman is speaking by the grace of this side of the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I am not speaking by the grace of anybody but of my own colleague and my constituents. Now, the gentleman from Iowa indulged in one insinuation of so mean and despicable a character that I almost hesitate to refer to it. If he could have blushed—and I looked into his face as I sat near him on purpose—if he were capable of blushing he would have blushed then, but he did not. He insinuated that the private fortune of Governor Tilden had been acquired by some dishonorable, and he did not dare to say dishonest, but he implied it, dishonest practices in connection with railways and corporations. Now, when a man makes an insinuation of that sort he should be prepared with the proof. It is a mean, unmanly, dishonorable charge for any man to make behind the back of another man who is not here to answer. But I can tell that gentleman, and I hope his own record is as clear and as good, that Governor Tilden was called from 1857 to 1860 into almost every broken-down railway corporation in the West; that while he found them unable to pay even running expenses, he took them in hand and so administered them that in every case the bonds, whether first, second, or third mortgage, and the stock, preferred and common, all ultimately went above par; and he enriched the people that were wise enough and fortunate enough to have secured his services. I am personally among the numbers of those who were benefited by his wise and sagacious management; and I say, so far from having been overpaid in any of these transactions, that his legal fees and his personal services were the cheapest and most poorly rewarded I have ever known in a long business career, dealing in large transactions in all parts of this country and in Europe.

I defy these gentlemen to lay their hands upon a dishonest dollar in the possession of Samuel J. Tilden. I say that the people whom he served are his friends to-day, and his best friends. And it is the service there which he rendered to the West, notwithstanding the insinuations of the gentleman from Iowa that will give him the vote of those great western States within whose borders he reconstructed highways which are to them to-day the arteries of commerce and public blessings, the value of which cannot be properly estimated.

And as through the whole of his remarkable career he has been the wisest of men, he has been the truest of friends, he has been the most zealous and earnest of patriots, so to-day he is the wisest, the most accomplished statesman in the land, and he will by the blessing of God be one of the greatest, perhaps the greatest of the Presidents of the United States, because he will have the opportunity to rescue this Government from the hands of the incompetent and dishonest men who have controlled it so long and made it a reproach in the eyes of the civilized globe.* [Great applause.]

Mr. MORRISON. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. The gentleman agreed to answer a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has left the floor, and the Chair does not see how the gentleman from Mississippi can be recognized pending the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from New York stated that he would answer a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think that it is due to the occasion I should have an opportunity to say a word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DAVY. I think that after the speech of the gentleman from New York on the other side of the House some opportunity of reply should be allowed to gentlemen on this side.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] be allowed to address the Chair.

Mr. MORRISON. I insist on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for, which is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays. But I will first ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his motion, so as to allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Not for a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been called for.

Mr. DAVY, Mr. LAPHAM, Mr. WELLS of Mississippi, and Mr. SPRINGER made remarks which were inaudible while the Speaker was rapping to order with his gavel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 11; not a sufficient number.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered; and the motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at six o'clock a. m. Tuesday, August 15, 1876) the House adjourned.

---

* In confirmation of his statements Mr. HEWITT inserts the following telegram received from Mr. Manton Marble too late to be inserted in the text:

NEW LEBANON, NEW YORK,
August 15, 1876.

Hon. A. S. HEWITT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram received and shown to me. Although Mr. Tilden was for the ten years previous to the war and during the war in private life, his position in respect to the war was never open to the slightest doubt. He had been early educated to condemn the doctrines of nullification and secession. He had foreseen the danger of civil war when many derided it, and did all he could to avoid it; but when it arrived he took an open and decided stand in support of the Government enforcing its jurisdiction and averting a dismemberment of the country. He attended the meeting of the 20th of April, 1861, and again on the 22d of April the meeting of the members of the New York bar. He soon after addressed a regiment setting out for the front. He attended the presentation of colors to the Seventy-ninth Highlanders, and afterward afforded that regiment special aid and service, to say nothing of frequent contributions of money elsewhere. His attitude throughout the war was that of a man who, disapproving of the scatteration military management and the inflation financial policy adopted by the Administration because they tended to prolong the war and increase its sacrifices, nevertheless sustained the arm of the Government. Every utterance of his during the whole war was in accord with this position. Every statement to the contrary about any single act or expression is totally false. Some of his speeches I heard myself, particularly a great speech which he made before the New York delegation at the Chicago democratic convention of 1864. I was the bearer of a message from him to General McClellan advising him to discard the objectionable words in the platform, which were also discarded in the subsequent platform of the New York State democratic convention. I have possession of the original manuscript of a declaration which he prepared in October, 1862, to be used to define the position of the New York democracy, the position which he thought it ought to take and which it did take. I select this from among many expressions for its brevity. It is as follows: "And now if my voice could reach the southern people through the journals of our metropolis, I would say to them that in no event can the triumph of the conservative sentiment of New York in the election mean consent to disunion either now or hereafter. Its true import is restoration North and South of that Constitution which had secured every right and under whose shelter all had been happy and prosperous until you madly fled from its protection. It was your act which began this calamitous, evil war. It was your act which disabled us, as we are now disabled, from shaping the policy or limiting the objects of that war. Loyally as we maintained your rights will we maintain the rights of the Government. We will not strike down its arm as long as yours is lifted against it. That noblest and greatest work of our wise ancestors is not destined to perish. We intend to rear once more upon the old and firm foundations its shattered columns and to carry them higher toward the eternal skies. If the old flag waves in the nerveless grasp of a frantic but feeble faction to whom you and not we abandoned it, we whose courage you have tried when we stood unmoved between fanaticism and folly from the North and South alike, will once more bear it onward and aloft, until it is again planted upon the towers of the Constitution, invincible by domestic as by foreign enemies. Within the Union we will give you the Constitution you profess to revere, renewed with fresh guarantees of equal rights and equal safety. We will give you everything that local self-government demands; everything that a common ancestry of glory, everything that national fraternity or Christian fellowship requires; but to dissolve the Federal bond between these States, to dismember our country, whoever else consents we will not; no, never! never! never!"

MANTON MARBLE.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 15, 1876.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISCHARGED TREASURY EMPLOYÉS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 4107) to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain of the employés recently permanently discharged from the service of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. SARGENT. I think there will be no objection to that being acted on now. It is very well understood by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill. It amends the clause in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved July 31, 1876, appropriating $25,000 "for the purpose of paying each of the employés recently furloughed and finally permanently discharged from service in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing one month's pay," by making the sum $29,500 in lieu of $25,000; the entire sum is to be paid out in accordance with the provisions of that clause, and to be distributed in payment only to those employés whose wages did not exceed $3 per diem, whether by monthly or daily rate of payment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the ground of the distinction between the three-dollar persons and others?

Mr. SARGENT. The House would only appropriate $25,000 originally. It was shown to them, I think to our satisfaction, that it was not sufficient, and they now have passed this amendment making the amount $29,500 as a partial relief to those who are poorest and seemed to withhold it from those who receive higher wages and were therefore better able to lay something by. I suppose it is the best we can do, and we had better pass it.

There being no objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

COMMITTEES DURING VACATION.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the Committee on Printing have leave to sit during the recess.

Mr. MORRILL. It has been customary to grant permission to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to sit during the recess. There has been no greater necessity for it heretofore than there is this year. I therefore move that permission be given.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report on the bill (S. No. 769) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes, which was returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment. The amendment not only changed the times of holding the courts, but introduced one or two new courts in places where, as we understand from gentlemen of the locality, they are not necessary. We have had no time to consider it fully, and of course there is no time now to dispose of the subject. I report it back to be laid on the table, so that we can consider it at the next session. I move that the bill and amendment lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Louisa G. Chandler, widow of Charles G. Chandler, late lieutenant-colonel Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying to have the records of the court-martial dismissing her late husband from the United States service set aside and an honorable discharge therefrom substituted therefor, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Nancy J. Turk, of Knoxville, Tennessee, praying to be compensated for the value of buildings alleged to have been destroyed at Knoxville by order of General BURNSIDE, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senate to allow me to present for consideration a few private pension bills, some of which have passed the House and are now upon the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right; I hope it will be done.

Mr. DAVIS. May we not go on with unobjected cases?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Take the poor pensioners first. I trust the request of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions will be granted.

Mr. DAVIS. I was going to ask the Senate to go through the Calendar of unobjected cases. I have no objection to taking up the pension cases, however.

Mr. INGALLS. These bills have mostly passed the House. The cases, I can say to the Senate, have been very thoroughly sifted and examined by the Committee on Pensions, and none have been reported that in our opinion have not been exceedingly meritorious.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody will object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SARGENT. How long will it take?

Mr. INGALLS. I can run through all of these bills in twenty minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

PETER HARDER.

Mr. INGALLS. The first case is Senate bill No. 792.

The bill (S. No. 792) granting a pension to Peter Harder was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Peter Harder, late private Company I, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers, on the pension-roll at the rate of $8 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out the words "at the rate of $8 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act" and to insert "subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUSTIN R. MILLS.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is Senate bill No. 210.

The bill (S. No. 210) granting a pension to Austin R. Mills, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Austin R. Mills, late a member of the First Regiment of Kansas Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month. No payment is to be made for any time for which payment may have already been made on his pension-certificate.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with amendments; which were in line 7, after the words "rate of," to strike out the word "twelve" and insert "eight," and in line 8, after the word "month," to strike out the words "the same to commence from the date of his discharge from the Army; this act to be in lieu of his present pension-certificate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN J. PARTILLO.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 1931.

The bill (H. R. No. 1931) granting a pension to John J. Partillo, of Gratiot County, Michigan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of John J. Partillo, late a private in Company H, Sixteenth Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

T. B. MURDOCK.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is Senate bill No. 750.

The bill (S. No. 750) granting a pension to T. B. Murdock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension rolls the name of T. B. Murdock, late a second lieutenant of Company F, Eighteenth United States Colored Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS GALLOWAY.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 3178.

The bill (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain of Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Galloway, some time captain of Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEFFERSON BOWERS.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 1588.

The bill (H. R. No. 1588) granting a pension to Jefferson Bowers, of Mason County, Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, at an increased rate of pension, the name of Jefferson Bowers, of Mason County, Illinois.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was in line 4, after the word "pension-roll," to strike out "at an increased rate of pension," and in lieu thereof to insert "at the rate of $4 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in line 8, after the word "Illinois," to strike out "according to his present disability," and in lieu thereof to insert "which shall be in lieu of the pension now received by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. INGALLS. I am aware that motion is not debatable; but I beg to say that I can conclude the business of the Committee on Pensions in fifteen minutes if I am allowed to go on.

Mr. ANTHONY. It can be done afterward as well as now. I gave notice that I should make this motion. Twenty Senators have asked me to wait until their business is through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was not agreed to.

EMILY E. WEISS.

Mr. INGALLS. The next pension bill is House bill No. 2231.

The bill (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-rolls the name of Emily E. Weiss, widow of Charles N. Weiss, to be paid from the date of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRENA GARRETT.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is Senate bill No. 980.

The bill (S. No. 980) granting a pension to Irena Garrett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Irena Garrett, widow of William H. Garrett, late captain of Company K, One hundred and third Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD F. EDDY.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 2837.

The bill (H. R. No. 2837) granting a pension to Edward F. Eddy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Edward F. Eddy, who, at the time he was wounded, was second lieutenant Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, and who, when discharged, was lieutenant-colonel Twenty-Ninth Regiment Michigan Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI D. HAYWARD.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 2844.

The bill (H. R. No. 2844) granting a pension to Levi D. Hayward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Levi D. Hayward, late a private in Company B, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. M. BRUNER.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 2848.

The bill (H. R. No. 2848) granting a pension to F. M. Bruner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of F. M. Bruner, late captain of Company A, Seventh Regiment United States Colored Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passd.

HARRIS B. LOVELL.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 1236.

The bill (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C of the One hundred and twenty-second Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers in the late war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOVINA ADELINE BOWKER.

Mr. INGALLS. The next is House bill No. 2846.

Mr. ANTHONY. Pursuant to the notice which I gave yesterday, and for reasons which Senators, every one of them, understand, and because we are fast drifting out of a quorum, and because if we do not transact the business that is necessary in executive session, I think a special session of the Senate will be inevitable, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. INGALLS. Allow me to pass this one bill and I will yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

The bill (H. R. No. 2846) granting a pension to Lovina Adeline Bowker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lovina Adeline Bowker, step-mother of Wilbur F. Bowker, late a private in Company H, Eighth Regiment of Vermont Volunteers, and cause to be paid to her the same pension which she would be entitled to if Wilbur F. Bowker were born of her body.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are only two more of these bills on the Calendar. Let them be acted on.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have done my duty. I believe if we do not go into executive session we shall have to come back in special session of the Senate. The Senate can do as it pleases.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876, the House having reconsidered the vote by which a conference was heretofore ordered.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 788) for the relief of Robert N. Eddy; and

A bill (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named.

SUPPRESSION OF INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. LOGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. MAXEY.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods; and

An act (S. No. 944) for the relief of Gilderoy M. Hardy.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 897) granting a pension to Andrew Evarts.

EXPENSES OF DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3962) to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Saulsbury, Spencer, and Windom—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Booth, Clayton, Edmunds, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Key, Logan, McMillan, Oglesby, Paddock, and Sargent—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, McDonald, Merrimon, Morton, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—30.

So the motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

On motion of Mr. OGLESBY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, Whitman County, Washington Territory.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF PAGES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I report back from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate the resolution authorizing the Sergeant-at-Arms to retain in the employ of the Senate until the 1st of September, 1876, all the pages now employed, and allowing them compensation until that date. There being no quorum of the committee to consider the resolution, I report it back without recommendation of the committee, and ask for its present consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms is hereby authorized and directed to retain in the employ of the Senate until the 1st day of September, 1876, all pages now employed, and that the usual per diem compensation be paid to them until that date.

Mr. DAVIS. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that I would object to the passage of this resolution, but the tendency and the influences are bad. It will be followed, I have no doubt, by similar resolutions and this will be a precedent. It will be quoted that we have done it in this instance, and others will ask for it. I want to comply fully with the law and I want to pay fair and proper compensation, but this thing of making extra compensation and of passing resolutions at the heel of the session without proper consideration is wrong. I want to give notice now that I shall object to every case of the kind which does not come strictly within the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. I wish to inquire what employés are included in the resolution?

Mr. WEST. None but the little boys. I wish to say one word in reply to what the Senator from West Virginia says about this being a precedent. It is a practice that has been sanctioned by the usage of the Senate from time immemorial. We have within a few days passed a resolution giving pay to other discharged employés. It has no evil tendency that I can see whatever, and the principle has been universally followed for half a century at least.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Cragin, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Spencer, West, and Windom—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Booth, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Davis, Edmunds, Howe, Key, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Morrill, and Oglesby—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, McDonald, Merrimon, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—34.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDNANCE STORES FOR KANSAS TERRITORY.

Mr. HARVEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnances stores furnished to Kansas Territory. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who reported the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot do that now. I hope the bill will not be taken up.

Mr. HARVEY. The object of the bill is to release the State of Kansas from charges which have been standing against her on account of ordnance stores issued to the Territory during the time of the early troubles there, of which the State never really had possession except of but a small proportion. The bill provides that upon the surrender to the Ordnance Department of all the arms that ever have passed into the possession of the State she shall be released from the charge that stands on the books against the State. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be all correct. I have no doubt my friend thinks it is; but it is too late in the session.

Mr. HARVEY. The bill was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me to call up a resolution that will not occupy three minutes, probably?

Mr. HARVEY. Shall I lose the floor by so doing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not if it is done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARVEY. Very well.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution fixing the time of adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday next, August 14, 1876, at 4 o'clock p. m.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend by making the hour three o'clock to-day. There are reasons why it should not be fixed later.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to make an inquiry, and I suppose the Senator is prepared to answer me. I should like to know in regard to the one or two bills which I have in mind upon which there is a disagreement between the two Houses, for instance about volunteers for the frontier, whether that is certain to be concluded by three o'clock. It is now ten minutes after two. That would leave fifty minutes, and I see Senators who have been appointed conferees upon that bill still sitting in the Senate.

Then I should like to inquire again whether the Senator knows that the bills which have been passed will be signed by three o'clock? Again, if I am not asking too many questions, I ask whether the Senator is prepared to say, we having received no notice from the House of any kind, that other bills to which I might refer and which are not concluded between the two Houses, will not fall if we fix three o'clock and the House concur in it? I am very anxious, for one, to adjourn as soon as we can; but I think after staying here until the 15th of August we should not on the question of a fraction of a day fail to allow any bill to pass which has been deemed important enough to keep the Senate here until this hour, and important enough to keep the Senate here yesterday until the very late hour at which we adjourned.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed that the bills are all signed.

Mr. CONKLING. What about the bill to employ forces against the Indians. Here within a few moments a conference committee was appointed and the conferees have not left the Senate; and now the Senator proposes to fix a time when the hammer shall fall and the session shall end.

Mr. WINDOM. The fact is that the House has not granted a conference, and upon a private consultation with members of the House I am satisfied that it will not appoint a committee.

Mr. CONKLING. And you propose to go away and leave it?

Mr. WINDOM. I understand the House will insist on the bill they have sent to us providing for volunteers, and it is the opinion of our committee that that bill should not pass. Therefore I see no probability of the passage of a bill to meet that necessity.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, as I understand, we are to accept this as a fact that within the next forty minutes we must allow the Indian outbreak so called to go without provision, or we must accept a measure from the House which many Senators, including those familiar with military affairs, have denounced as not only unwise but utterly impossible and futile. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is the appropriate Senator, not I, to determine this question; but I venture to make this suggestion, because it seems to me that if upon a question of adjourning at three o'clock rather than at four or five to-day or even of continuing the session until to-morrow we should lose this one bill, if no other, it would be a very wrong application of judgment and even of convenience.

Mr. WINDOM. There seems to be a good deal of opposition to the resolution at present, and I will withdraw it for a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is withdrawn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPENCER presented a petition of Major John A. Darling, late captain of the Second Artillery, United States Army, praying to be restored to his original rank in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN presented a resolution adopted at the semi-annual meeting of the National Association of Stone Manufacturers of the United States held in the city of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on the 14th day of June last, praying the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 24th ultimo, a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying statements embracing a list of the civil officers connected with the Department of State.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that that communication lie upon the table and be printed; and on the motion to print I ask the permission of the Senate to make a very few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire may proceed by unanimous consent upon the motion to print. A motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARVEY. I yielded the floor by unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution relating to adjournment. I wish to resume it and have action upon the motion to consider the bill to which I referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is correct. The Senator yielded by unanimous consent to the Senator from Minnesota for the purpose of taking up the resolution. The attention of the Chair being called to it he recognizes the Senator from Kansas, and the Senator from New Hampshire will be entitled to the floor following. The question is whether the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill.

ORDNANCE STORES FOR KANSAS TERRITORY.

Mr. HARVEY. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It appears to me, with great respect for my friend from Kansas, that a bill which releases anybody from anything ought not at this stage of the session to be taken up and considered unless it is a matter of extreme public urgency, because we have to do it in haste, and we have often found in such cases—I hope this is an exception—that we make a mistake. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not take up any business except that which is pending between the two Houses in respect of one or two important matters which were referred to by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] That is all I have to say. I know nothing about this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 14 and the noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope a further count will not be insisted on. I trust the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum, and no business can be transacted.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to say that I do not object particularly to the bill of the Senator from Kansas, but I believe that no bill ought to pass unless we have a quorum present, and there is a Senator here now who asks the floor, and I believe it has never been refused when a Senator asked the floor to make some remarks. I have no objection to one bill over another; but I doubt the propriety of passing any bill now before we adjourn. Besides, the Senator from New Hampshire is certainly entitled to the floor under the custom of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no quorum no business can be transacted.

Mr. HARVEY. I move a call of the Senate.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the Senator from New Hampshire will hold the floor.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, do I understand that I am entitled to the floor now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the floor.

NUMBER OF CIVIL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, the report of the Secretary of State just submitted by the President is the last report from the heads of Departments in answer to a resolution passed by the Senate on the 24th of July calling on the heads of Departments for the number of civil officers, not including laborers and mechanics employed by the day and contractors, in and connected with each of said Departments for the years 1859, 1861, 1863, 1865, 1867, 1869, 1871, 1873, and 1875.

On the 18th of July the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] in the course of his remarks to the Senate introduced a table purporting to be a statement of the number of employés borne on the civil list of the United States, from 1857 to 1875, inclusive, compiled from the Biennial Register. A very slight glance at this table convinced me that it was very erroneous, that it was not a correct statement, and not correct as compiled from the Biennial Register. In looking to the year 1871, in that table, I found that the number of civil officers reported was 57,605, and for the year 1873, two years later, the number of civil officers reported was 80,637, or an increase of 23,000 in two years. Looking to 1875 I found the number reported was 94,119, an increase of nearly fourteen thousand over the second year previous, or 37,000 in four years. Any man of ordinary capacity would see at once that here is a mistake, and this table has figured in the other House as well as here, and it has been announced over and over again to the country that there are 94,000 civil officers of the United States until that has been almost accepted by everybody throughout the United States. It is a gross error; it is a total mistake without any foundation in fact, without any foundation so far as the Biennial Register is concerned.

The resolution to which I have referred, calling on the heads of the different Departments to furnish the number of civil officers for these identical years, was passed on the 24th of July, and the reports have now all been received, and I have prepared from these reports a table covering these same identical years, being a statement of the number of civil officers in and connected with the Departments from 1859 to 1875, inclusive, as reported by the head of each Department in compliance with Senate resolution of July 24, 1876. I submit this table:

Statement of the total number of civil officers in or connected with the Departments from 1859 to 1875, inclusive, as reported by the head of each Department in compliance with Senate resolution of July 24, 1876.

Departments.	1859.	1861.	1863.	1865.	1867.	1869.	1871.	1873.	1875.	No. of document. First session Forty-fourth Congress.
State	367	398	395	427	495	466	466	422	430	Executive document (Senate) 92.
Treasury	3,778	3,403	4,581	6,333	7,851	8,168	8,630	11,582	12,482	Executive document (Senate) 91.
Interior	1,081	1,463	1,317	1,342	1,501	1,875	2,812	2,475	2,198	Executive document (Senate) 87.
War	339	820	1,427	4,201	3,272	1,514	1,150	1,077	1,489	Executive document (Senate) 86.
Navy	90	94	132	131	132	121	131	159	153	Executive document (Senate) 89.
Justice	5	7	8	8	10	14	229	517	523	Executive document (Senate) 82.
Post-Office	30,817	31,010	32,551	33,646	30,448	33,111	36,668	41,080	44,897	Executive document (Senate) 83.
	36,477	37,195	40,411	46,088	43,709	45,269	50,086	57,312	62,172

I desire to call attention to one or two years. For 1873 the aggregate number of civil officers, from the statements of the heads of all the Departments of the Government, was 57,312 as against 80,000 and more as contained in the table presented by the Senator from North Carolina; and in 1875 the entire number of civil officers was 62,172 instead of 94,000, or about 32,000 less than the number that appears in the table presented by the Senator from North Carolina, and in the same table presented at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. President, this table shows a gradual increase. The increase of postmasters alone averages about three thousand per annum. This table shows an increase in the Treasury Department of about four thousand, and I desire to read from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting his report upon this subject a statement which accounts fully for this increase:

> This statement is compiled from the United States Official Register. The large apparent increase of 1873 over 1871 is accounted for in part by the fact that the names of nine hundred and ninety-nine gaugers and eight hundred and eighty-eight storekeepers of internal revenue (total, eighteen hundred and eighty seven) were published in the Blue Book for 1873 for the first time, but such officers had been in the service in larger numbers since 1865.
>
> The increase of nine hundred in 1875 over 1873 is accounted for by the fact that in the first-named year the names of eight hundred and seventy-seven deputy collectors of internal revenue were published in the Blue Book for the first time, although even a large number of that class of officers had been in the service since 1862, and the establishment by act of March 3, 1875, of the national-bank redemption agency added one hundred and fifty-two employés to the Treasurer's Office and thirty to the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the amount of whose salaries is re-imbursed by the national banks.

That accounts fully for the increase of the number of civil employés in the Treasury Department over and above that of 1871. The increase in the War Department in 1875 over 1873 is nearly four hundred, and that is accounted for fully and more in the letter of the Secretary of War transmitting his answer to this resolution of July 24.

I might go through the other Departments to show the reason for this increase; but the main point I have in view is to present this table, this official table, and I call the attention of the Senate and of the country to it, where they can find this information. This is the official information from all the Departments, and the entire number of civil officers employed by the Government of the United States is only 62,000 as against 94,000, as was reported by the Senator from North Carolina, and as was reported by numerous gentlemen in the other end of the Capitol, and has gone forth to the country as the exact truth.

The table I have presented will enable the country to see what exaggerations are put forth in this year of our Lord 1876.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to print the communication of the Secretary of State.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. H. B. BANNING of Ohio, Mr. R. Q. MILLS of Texas, and Mr. J. M. THORNBURGH of Tennessee managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3184) for the relief of Emerick W. Hansell.

BRIDGE AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill just read is a long one, and altogether too important a bill to be pushed through in the last moments of the session when we have less than a quorum present. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not insist on calling up the bill now. Again, I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, from which the bill came, in his seat; and it is altogether too important a bill to be rushed through at this moment of the session. I hope the Senator will not insist on it. It has not been taken up yet, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been; it has been read for information.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The bill, as the Senate will have observed, is a House bill. It has been carefully considered by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate and reported favorably upon. It has all the usual provisions which for some years past have been inserted in similar bills. The bridge cannot be located except subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. The plan for the construction of the bridge must be submitted to the Secretary of War and approved by him.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw all objection to this bill. It was carefully prepared in accordance with several bills of a similar character, all of which have proved to be effectual to protect the interests of the Government. There is no general law on the subject, and it is necessary to have a special bill for each case.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not object to the bill being taken up at this time. I assure him that the bill is all right. It has all the restrictive provisions in it that have ever been inserted in a similar bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I of course know very little of the merits of the case or of the facts connected with the bill or its object; but I do know that it is an important bill, a long bill, and it ought to be carefully considered before it is passed by the Senate. My object was more especially to call the attention of those who are interested, very few of whom I noticed listening to the reading of it. If those who are particularly interested on the Upper Mississippi are satisfied, and the bill has received the sanction of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce and the other members of that committee, I will not object to it, but I desire to call their attention to it.

Mr. CONKLING. I am very much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to this bill. If I remember it aright, it is a bill which was reported by the Committee on Commerce unanimously, and it is the customary bill in a case where such a bill is asked for and an imperative necessity for it is shown. As we all know the rules of the Senate, it is not in order to discuss its merits on a motion to take up, I suggest that the bill had better be taken up and then we can see what its merits are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. The State which I represent is somewhat interested in this matter. The Sioux City Railroad, which runs to the Missouri and connects with the Union Pacific road ultimately, will cross at this bridge. It is on the Missouri River, not on the Mississippi, as the Senator from West Virginia seemed to suppose. The bill has been considered by the Committee on Commerce, as has been stated by the chairman, and all the safeguards and protections usually included in bills of this character are inserted in this bill, so that the rights of the public are fully protected, and it is a matter of public interest. The bill is correct, and should pass in my judgment.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me add to what the Senator from Minnesota has said that it is a bridge over the Missouri River which as the Senator knows is a boundary river between States. This bridge is to go from one State to another State, so that it does not fall within the police power of the States themselves. It is properly, according to any view that may be taken of the matter, a subject within the domain of congressional action. I see no objection to it that cannot be made to the numerous other bridges that have been erected over the Mississippi, Missouri, and other boundary rivers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDINANCE STORES FOR KANSAS TERRITORY.

Mr. HARVEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which I called up a while ago, and which effort failed because there was no quorum. I now desire to have a vote on taking up the bill (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We had a vote on taking up that bill a short time since and the Senate declined to take it up, as I understood it.

Mr. HARVEY. A large majority of those present voted for taking it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it may be; but I wish to appeal to that large majority that a bill which proposes to relieve a State or anybody else from any legal liability it may be under at this time in the session, when there is no fair time to consider the case in full, is not right. I do not mean by that to impugn at all, as my friend knows, the propriety of this bill. I dare say it may be perfectly correct, although I know nothing about it; but a bill to relieve a State from what must now be supposed to be its obligation to the United States, taken up in the very last moments of the session, is not a good thing to do. If there were any pressing or special emergency——

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator will permit me, I can explain why the bill has not been taken up earlier. It was reported soon after it came from the House by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Military Affairs; but the chairman of that committee has been so much occupied with other measures that whenever he could get the floor he has felt compelled to ask for the consideration of other bills.

Mr. OGLESBY. The bounty bill.

Mr. HARVEY. The bounty bill, House bill No. 58, which is a good bill, one which I think ought to pass; but the trouble has been that he could not get that considered, and has failed to get the floor for the purpose of having this bill considered. I am authorized by him to state that the committee reported it unanimously; that the bill is all right, and that he thinks it ought to pass. I have stated, if the Senator from Vermont will permit me, and I think he was present and heard the statement, as to why the charge was made. These arms were issued to what was called the Kansas territorial militia, being really organizations of men from other States.

Mr. OGLESBY. To put slavery into the Territory.

Mr. HARVEY. The arms were put into the hands of that militia for the purpose of enforcing what were known as the "bogus laws" in the Territory of Kansas, and now the State has been charged with these arms issued to the territorial authorities under such circumstances. I think it a manifest injustice to the State of Kansas, and I hope the Senate will stand by me and remove this unjust charge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot perfectly understand whether it is a manifest injustice to the State of Kansas until we consider the bill; but as the Senator has referred to that, it is rather an extraordinary thing that we should be called upon to do this act of justice to the State of Kansas after nearly twenty years, I do not know but quite twenty years, have elapsed since the event took place to which this matter refers, and after more than ten years have elapsed since the State of Kansas came into the Union; I have forgotten the year of her admission.

Mr. HARVEY. Eighteen hundred and sixty-one, the 29th of January.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Fifteen years have elapsed since the State of Kansas came into the Union. Now to take up, and apparently in warm haste, a matter that seems not to have been acted upon favorably by Congress for fifteen years, it appears to me is not wise in respect of the deliberate disposal of public business. In saying that I am not speaking against this bill. As yet it is not up, and we cannot inquire what its real merits are; but I submit to my friend, who I know desires just as much as I do, and perhaps more, to subserve the public interests, whether it is a good thing to do as a rule to undertake, in the last moments of a session, to take up a matter so old as this, which involves a certain amount of money to be paid by the United States, not in cash, to the State of Kansas, but in property which she will be entitled to receive if we pass this bill, at this stage of the session. Of course I cannot discuss its merits. I do not yet know its merits; but I only say that after fifteen years it does appear to me that just now is not the correct time to undertake to go into the consideration of a bill that involves a very considerable amount of property or money.

Mr. HARVEY. It seems like a strange argument, that justice having been long delayed, it should be still further delayed; and yet it seems somewhat in accordance with the course that my friend, the Senator from Vermont, is apt to take. It is true that this matter occurred some time ago, but it is also true that the State of Kansas and the Congress of the United States have been very much engaged with other business a good portion of the time. Now that the facts have been ascertained and action has been had by the other House, and that the bill has been reported upon favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously, and as the bill provides for the payment of no money at all, but simply for the release of a State from an unjust charge, amounting to eleven thousand four hundred and some odd dollars, which is to be diminished by the surrender of all the arms which have ever come under the charge of the State, and as the bill is eminently just in its provisions, I hope the Senate will consider it and pass it.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope we shall not debate the merits until we get the bill up.

Mr. OGLESBY. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on taking up the bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. If at this moment I shall be debarred from considering the merits of it, what is to become of what the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas have said about the merits?

This is a little bill and it has the smell and flavor of twenty years ago, of the pro-slavery pristine vigor of Kansas territorial times. It is late in the session and a little late in the nineteenth century to consider this bill, but "better late than never." It has passed the House, and if it should pass the Senate now, as it can in two minutes and a half, Kansas will be relieved from a burden charged against her upon the ordnance books of the War Department, from which I think she ought to be relieved. The committee have reported favorably upon it. The honorable Senator from Vermont is very vigilant in watching the Treasury and the public interests, so vigilant sometimes that I have wished he was out of the way when I was trying to get a bill through, and when anybody else is trying to get one through I am always sorry he is not here. That honorable Senator, ever watchful of the public interests, stands now just a little bit in the way. This is a charge against Kansas for Government arms issued to the Territory over twenty years ago. The people of Kansas had nothing to do with it. They were issued to the officers of the Army in the Territory. They were scattered all about and lost, as they almost always are, and Kansas with its depleted grasshopper treasury stands charged with this $11,000. It wants to be released from it and have its accounts settled with the Ordnance Bureau. The bill is not to pay any money out to anybody, not to pay any money in to anybody, but it is to relieve that suffering and virtuous State from this onerous burden of $11,000. It is away back and gone by; the arms have been lost, or stolen, or rusted, or destroyed.

Mr. HARVEY. Or carried away into Missouri.

Mr. OGLESBY. To make Kansas now pay that $11,000, or have it stand charged on the books of the Ordnance Department, is not quite the right thing. The bill has passed the House and it is suffering to pass this body, and as soon as it shall pass here the account will be settled, Kansas will be liberated from border-ruffianism, and stand regenerated and renewed in her brand-new blue-jean clothing, the daughter of freedom and the child of promise. Why it cannot pass I cannot tell. The sum is $11,000. Of what small significance to us and how oppressive it is to the fair daughter of freedom I hope the Senate will take it up and pass it, and that the honorable Senator from Vermont will yield to our solicitude upon this question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose the Chair has enforced the rule, as it is his duty to do, in respect of debating the merits on a motion to take up. I suppose the Chair has held that the oration of my friend from Illinois was within the rule in favor of taking up this bill, although all that he has said has been in advocacy of its merits in spite of the rule; but as in the last moments of a session all rules are to be broken down, all proprieties disregarded, and all safeguards thrown aside, it is perfectly appropriate that he should have made the oration he did on the motion to take up a bill.

I wish, Mr. President, to express my thanks to the Senator from Kansas for the great honor he has done me in imputing to me a disposition to stand in the way of legislation which he considers to be appropriate. I have endeavored, as I think everybody ought to endeavor, to stand in the way of legislation until it shall be understood, and to resist it if I believe it to be wrong. I believe my right in that respect is equal exactly to that of the Senator from Kansas; and that it is my right and privilege, if I act conscientiously, to oppose anything that he proposes in just the same degree and for reasons that may be equally satisfactory to me as those which lead him to demand that a measure shall be taken up now or passed at any time. If the Senator from Kansas imagines that he has any superior privilege in respect of proposing what others may not wish to propose, then I should be glad to have him state it. I am not in the least degree ashamed of the small part I have taken to protect the Treasury and the people of the United States against shams and swindles; not the least. I do not mean by this to impute to the Senator from Kansas that he has ever been connected with a sham or a swindle; I am sure he consciously never would be; but it is a little ungracious, I will suggest to him, and a little out of place, to make the remark that he did touching the small share that I have had in the legislation of this body.

Mr. HARVEY. Will the Senator repeat his recollection of what that remark was?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The RECORD will show (as I am sure my friend from Kansas does not doctor his remarks any more than I do mine) exactly what he said. I think I remember it correctly; but I would not venture to state it.

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator desires, I will repeat my recollection of what I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not desire anything, but I am quite willing that the Senator shall say what he likes.

Mr. HARVEY. I said this: That it seemed a strange argument to use that because justice had been long delayed it should be still further delayed, and that this seemed to be somewhat in accordance with the usual course of the Senator from Vermont concerning matters of this kind. I meant by that that the fact that a matter had not been settled promptly at the time was with him a reason why further delay should be urged. I think he will admit that many times he has used the same line of argument against measures in themselves just, as this measure is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, I shall not admit anything of the kind, because in my opinion it is not true. I do believe, as I think a good many right-minded people believe, that a stale claim is a suspicious claim, and that in order to carry it it should be supported by clear and irrefragable testimony and proofs. That I believe, and I think I state a principle of universal law and of universal justice.

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to the fact that this is a claim by the Government against the State of Kansas. According to that the onus of proof would be upon the Government to show that the State of Kansas ever received these arms. It could be shown, as a matter of history and proof, beyond doubt, that the arms were issued not to the State of Kansas, not to the people of Kansas, but to persons who where there as an organization from States outside of Kansas.

Mr. OGLESBY. It was during Buchanan's administration.

Mr. HARVEY. It was during Buchanan's administration, and the arms were issued to the territorial militia for the purpose of enforcing what were known as the "bogus laws" of 1855. When that militia retired from the State the arms went with it; yet they stand on the books of the Ordnance Department here charged to the State of Kansas. If there is any claim about the matter it is an unjust, an old, and stale claim on the part of the General Government against the State of Kansas, which should be removed at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now if the logic of my friend—if he will allow me so to call him—is not any better than his bill, or if his bill is not any better than his logic, I am sorry for the bill. He says that this falls within the very description of a stale claim on the part of the United States. The case, if it may be stated, is this: Every State and Territory to which under the general laws of the United States arms are distributed is charged with them. In a period of years they can only get according to population, or whatever the rule may be, arms proportioned to their just demands in respect of the other States and Territories. It happens that the State of Kansas appears to have got more arms than down to this time she is entitled to receive.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope the Senator will make the distinction between the Territory and the State, and consider the circumstances under which the issue was made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not on the question of the circumstances; I am on the distinguished Senator's logic and his statement of the law about stale claims and the justice of them. Therefore, I repeat, the State of Kansas appears, as is admitted to be a fact, to have received by herself and by her territorial government before she was formed into a State more arms than down to this time she would on the whole be entitled to. Now she wishes to have that charge wiped out in order that she can get a fresh credit; and I say after she has acquiesced for fifteen years after she became a State in the justness of this charge and has failed to get her arms except by a special appropriation that has passed hitherto for a limited number, it is not just and is not logical to say that the staleness of this demand is on the part of the United States, but it is exactly the reverse. I should be glad to have some Senator inform me if this matter has actually lain dormant without any claim of the State of Kansas to correct it for this period of fifteen years. The Senator can probably inform me whether this has ever been before brought to the attention of Congress.

Mr. HARVEY. The State of Kansas has claimed exemption from this charge, and the answer has been by the Ordnance Department that it would require legislation to relieve the State, the circumstances being such as they are. Of course the records show nothing concerning the peculiarities of the history of the times when the issue was made, but they show through whom the issues were made, and the Department has no authority without legislation to remove that charge. While admitting that the arms were unjustly charged to the State under the circumstances, yet in order to make the records proper and relieve the officers making the issues, having made charge on the books, such legislation should be had as will recognize the existence of the facts under which the issue was made. This bill recites at some length, if the Senator will permit it to be taken up and read, the circumstances.

Mr. OGLESBY. Read it in your speech.

Mr. HARVEY. I will take occasion to read it as a part of my speech.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which of us has the floor just now, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARVEY. Does the Senator object to the reading of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its being read as part of my speech.

Mr. HARVEY. The Senator, then, will not yield the floor to me for the purpose of reading it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I will not. I suppose that will add another to the long list of my iniquities; but I do not prefer to make my speech on the bill until it is taken up. The Senator has failed to answer the question which I put, not to him, but to everybody, whether this claim of the State of Kansas to get $10,000 or $11,000 more in the amount of arms, because that is the substance of it, than as the law now stands she is entitled to, has been hitherto brought to the attention of Congress and relief asked from Congress during fifteen years that she has been a State.

Mr. HARVEY. Will the Senator permit me? He says this is a claim of the State of Kansas for $10,000 or $11,000. It is not anything of the kind; it is simply a request on the part of the State to be relieved from a claim by the General Government which has no foundation in fact and in justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now the Senator again does not answer the question whether the State of Kansas or anybody in her behalf ever brought this matter before to the attention of Congress, and, if so, what action was taken by Congress about it. I assume in the absence of any answer to the question that the State of Kansas never has, through her representatives or otherwise, asked the intervention of Congress upon this subject for the period of fifteen years. Therefore it is manifest to me that this is a claim which there is no special demand, in point of justice or anything else, that it should be hustled through at this particular moment of time, when nobody wishes to give attention to any public business except that of the most pressing exigency. The Senator from Kansas says this is not a claim by the State of Kansas to get anything from the Treasury, but only to be discharged from a liability to the Treasury. Let us see if that be exactly correct. If it were exactly correct it would amount to the same thing, but is it correct? If you erase from the books of the Ordnance Department these items that she asks to have erased from those books, she becomes at once entitled, if I correctly understand the law, to an equivalent amount of arms. If these old arms, as the Senator from Illinois states, amount in point of money to $11,000 or $12,000, whatever the sum may be, that is not material to the principle, then of course it amounts to saying that there shall be forthwith issued to the State of Kansas, because she then becomes entitled to them, as not having received her share, this amount of the public property of the United States; so that it is in substance and effect furnishing to the State of Kansas property of an amount equal to the sum of money we have named.

But that is on the merits, and I should not have referred to it at all but for the circumstance that gentlemen wishing to take this bill up have thought it fit to discuss the merits. As I said before, I have not opposed taking the bill up on the ground that it had no merits. I do not know that it has not merits. I only say that a claim of this character or any other similar character ought not to be taken up at the very end of a session and pressed through when Senators are too weary to give attention to such subjects, unless there is some grave and pressing emergency for it. That is my proposition. I am sorry to have offended the Senator from Kansas in saying what I have. I am sorry to have him say what he has said, in the spirit in which he seemed to say it, that I have endeavored at any time unjustly to obstruct public business. I have endeavored, according to the light I had, to do what I thought to be my duty. I have done what I think my duty now, and the Senate will do what it thinks to be its duty.

Mr. HARVEY. If I can get a vote on taking up the bill I shall have nothing further to say. I very much desire a vote on taking up the bill. I should like to say something further, but I forego it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The question being put, there were on division—ayes 14 noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARVEY. I ask for the yeas and nays. I think there is a quorum present.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not wish to make any remark on the merits of the bill, and if I have done so, of course I have been out of order in doing so. The objection is made, and comes with great force, that it is a late hour in the session, but there never has been a session yet that did not have its latest hour and its last hour.

This bill, like a great many others as I think of merit, has been put back and held back on the Calendar in various ways; and now at the last moment it is asked to be considered. The opportunity was not at hand to consider it before. That is all the answer that can be made to the charge of delay in calling it up. It is late, but still it might as well be considered now as any other bill; and if it be taken up, and I shall be satisfied that it has not merit in it, or if the Senate shall be satisfied, as it can be in ten minutes, that it has not merit in it, it will be disposed of, and that will be the end of it. I I do not see why the Senate should fail to take it up. I do not see why there should be any reluctance about it. If the bill cannot be shown to have merit in it in five minutes' explanation by the Senator from Kansas, let it go; but if it shall be shown when it is taken up to have merit in it, why not as well dispose of this bill as of any other? Why prefer any other bill to this, or why defer this to any other? It happens to be in hand. The Senator from Kansas has called it up. He does not very often intrude himself upon this body. He is not very forward to inject his business or the business of his State upon the deliberations of this body; and because he is a little late, as I am almost all the time with bills that ought to be considered from the Committee on Public Lands of the utmost justice and of the utmost importance, it ought not to be said now——

Mr. HARVEY. Permit me a word of explanation here. I should have called up this bill long since, but hoped that the Senator from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. LOGAN,] would be able to do so.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator has stated that once before. I should be very glad if the Senate would take the bill up on account of the State of Kansas and the Senator, who is quite sincere about the bill. He is quite convinced that it is a just and meritorious bill, and so much so that he has satisfied me that it is, and in five minutes we could dispose of the whole subject or defeat it, one way or the other.

Mr. HOWE. It is late in the session, but it is not the end of the session. We are tired, but still we have got to work, and nobody asks us to consider anything else. Why not, then, this bill? I do not know whether this bill is good for anything or not, and I cannot tell until the Senate allow it to be taken up. Therefore I will vote to take up the bill.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the Senate will take up the bill and accommodate the Senator from Kansas. Certainly he does not intrude on the Senate very often, and he seems to have this matter very much at heart. I can see no objection to spending the short time we have here on that bill as well as any other little bill, and if we do not take it up, we shall take up some other little bill of no more importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Ferry, Gordon, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, and Kernan—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Paddock, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—34.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is any report from the Committee on Military Affairs about this bill, I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration House bill No. 2813, respectfully submit the following report:

During the troubles in the early settlement of the Territory of Kansas, the history of which is well known, the United States furnished to the then governor of the Territory, for the purpose of maintaining the laws, certain ordnance stores, consisting of arms, equipments, and ammunition to the value of $11,425. These ordnance stores were furnished the territorial governor with the understanding that the arms at least would be returned to the United States upon the restoration of law and order in that Territory, and hence no charge was made whatever against the Territory for the same.

Upon the admission of the Territory into the Union there was made a charge against the State of the value of all of the stores furnished the governor of the Territory, and to this time the charge stands against the State's quota.

The theory upon which the charge is made is that the State being the successor of the Territory it ought to be so charged upon the assumption that the State must have come into possession of the arms and stores. In this instance, however, only one hundred and seventy stand of arms of the stores furnished the territorial governor ever came into the possession of the State. These have already been placed by the State authorities at the disposal of the United States.

This bill seeks to relieve the State from charges against it for arms which it never received. This is the only purpose of the bill.

Kansas has an extensive border continually threatened by invasion from the Indians, and fails to secure her proper quota of arms from the fact that this old account stands against it.

The territorial officers are appointed by the President, and it does not seem to be just to charge against the people of a sovereign State the neglect or misconduct of United States officers having custody and control of ordnance stores furnished by the United States to them. The papers on file do not show what became of the stores furnished the Territory save and except the one hundred and seventy stand of arms which the State obtained. It may not be unreasonable, however, to say that in view of the disturbed condition of affairs in the Territory for so long a period, many if not all of the arms have been carried beyond the limits of the State.

The bill seems equitable and the relief asked for proper. The War Department does not feel authorized to give the State the credit to which she is entitled without congressional action. Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a House report or a Senate report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any report from the Senate committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are there any documents from the Secretary of War or the Department of War on the subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There seem to be none.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ascertain, if the Senator from Illinois will inform me, whether there was any authority of law for the delivery of these arms to the governor of the Territory.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am not able to answer satisfactorily about that; but I have no doubt, reasoning by analogy, not by any recollection of the law, that there probably was. The arms were issued by the Government to the Governor of the Territory, whether on his request or not I do not know; but I suppose there was a law for the issue of arms to a territorial governor. The militia act provides for their going to the States, but does not include the Territories. I was thinking about that myself, whether they were legally chargeable against the territorial government. But there is a very grave doubt whether they are legally chargeable against the State government.

Mr. HOWE. There may be great doubt on that point; but I should think before we could determine whether this is a valid claim against the State of Kansas or not it would certainly be proper to ascertain whether the Government had any authority to deliver these arms to the governor of the Territory of Kansas. Unless there was such authority and the law was pursued in making the requisition for these arms and delivering them, the governor could no more make the Territory of Kansas liable for the payment of these arms than he could make it liable by going to a bank and borrowing $1,000,000, to say nothing about whether that liability could be devolved upon the State. That, probably, is determined by the constitution of the State.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator from Wisconsin will please remember in putting this interrogatory to me that this bill does not come from the Committee on Public Lands. We have not given it any investigation there. It comes from the Committee on Military Affairs. So I have not specially had my attention called to it, but have chiefly derived my information from the Senator from Kansas. That is the reason I am not better posted in regard to the law, and a pretty good excuse for me to get out, too.

Mr. HOWE. I understand from the Senator that the bill comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, sir; unanimously reported.

Mr. HOWE. I was under the impression before that it came from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I stated when I opposed taking up this bill that I did it, not because I had any knowledge of its merit or its demerit, but because it was a species of claim that we ought not to take up in the present stage of the session, involving as it does quite a little sum. The question now is, the bill being up, whether it ought to pass. All that we have on the subject of the bill is what is stated in the preamble, of which we know nothing officially, and the report of a committee of another body which has in a strict sense no business here at all. That report is somewhat destitute of facts, as everybody who listened to its reading must have observed. The Senator from Wisconsin has inquired whether there was any authority in the President to issue these arms to the Territory at all; and if not, then of course it would follow that there was no rightful authority to charge them to the State, except so far as it got them, and it is said it only got very few of them. But the act of 1808 and the act of 1855 provide for the issuing of arms to the Territories as well as to the States, the only difference being that in the States they are issued according to the number of their Senators and Representatives in Congress; in the Territories they are issued in such quantities as the President may prescribe. So that these arms went lawfully and in the regular way to the official authorities of that Territory. That reduces the case to the question whether the State, being the successor of the Territory, is justly chargeable with the responsibilities and debts toward the Government—by "debts" I mean debts of this character, which relate to the preservation of the peace and its armament there—that rested upon the Territory. I have never heard it denied. I certainly shall not take your time, because I suppose it to be perfectly useless to oppose the passage of this bill or any other. I suppose nobody ever denied that obligations of this character which legally rested upon the Territory, when it was transformed into a State would legally and justly rest upon the State. The political community is precisely the same; its form and mode of operation are changed, that is all. I have never heard that proposition questioned, and I suppose it will not be questioned now.

That is all I have to say, sir. It is entirely useless to say even that much, I suppose.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will detain the Senate but a moment. Some time toward the close of the war there was a law passed relieving the States from large charges made by the Government against them for arms issued during the war, and the accounts of the States were settled under this liberal law which was passed. It seems to me that some act analogous to that law might be passed with reference to this very case, because the unsettled condition of the Territory before the organization of the State government in Kansas was such as to prevent proper responsibility being kept by any person.

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator will permit me a word, the law he refers to only provided for arms issued during the war.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Certainly; and I was saying that it seemed but just that an act analogous to this law should be passed in this case relieving the State of Kansas; because it is clear to me that there were a great many arms issued during the existence of the territorial government for which the State of Kansas ought not to be accountable. We all remember the unsettled state of affairs on that frontier just after the territorial government was organized, and it seems to me very unjust now to hold the State of Kansas to a strict responsibility and allow that State to be charged with arms which were evidently wasted on the frontier, and at the same time relieve all the States for arms lost in very much the same way during the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

On the passage of the bill a division was called for; which being taken, resulted—ayes 32, noes 7.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 840) for the relief Norman H. Ryan.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution granting the usual per diem allowance to clerks of committees not having a yearly salary for the period of thirty-one days from the 1st day of August, 1876.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others;

A bill (H. R. No. 1931) granting a pension to John J. Partillo, of Gratiot County, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss;

A bill (H. R. No. 2837) granting a pension to Edward F. Eddy;

A bill (H. R. No. 2844) granting a pension to Levi D. Hayward;

A bill (H. R. No. 2846) granting a pension to Lovina Adeline Bowker;

A bill (H. R. No. 2848) granting a pension to F. M. Bruner;

A bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell;

A bill (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain of Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876;

A bill (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (S. No. 788) for the relief of Robert N. Eddy; and

A bill (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania;

An act (S. No. 1042) to provide for the publication of the report of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 24) providing for the postponement of the publication of the Army Regulations.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1040) to allow the late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia his salary hitherto withheld, reported it with amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1046) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to receive the educational material now on exhibition in the centennial exposition; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 699) to confirm the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4108) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;" in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land-office at Colfax, Whitman County, Washington Territory; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4107) to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain of the employés recently permanently discharged from the service of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

REPAVING PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that House bills be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 4108) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;" and it was read at length. It proposes to amend the proviso of section 5 of the act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue, approved July 19, 1876, as to the time of completing the work, so as to read:

Provided, That the said pavement shall be fully completed and ready for use January 15, 1877.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. The only objection I have to that is it places the time too far off.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being a House bill which has just come over, I reserve all points of order upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I had supposed that it might be possible that they would require a fortnight's further time, and I preferred, therefore, that a bill should pass without any fixed time in preference to one fixing even so early a time as the 1st of January. However, I do not regard it as of any great importance, and I shall not object to the bill passing.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the bill will pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

By unanimous consent, the bill was read three times, and passed.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH ASIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia, which was returned from the House of Representatives with amendments.

The first amendment was to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar provisions herein contained.

The next amendment was to change section 3 to section 4.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to concur in the amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

For the reasons stated in the accompanying communication submitted to me by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, I have the honor to return herewith without my approval Senate bill No. 779, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska."

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 15, 1876.

To the Senate of the United States:

Upon further investigation I am convinced that my message of this date withholding my signature from Senate bill No. 779, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska," was premature; and I request, therefore, that the bill may be returned, in order that I may affix my signature to it.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 15, 1876.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have somebody who is older and wiser than I am tell us whether under the Constitution, the President having returned a bill to this body with his veto and the Constitution saying we shall then proceed to vote upon it, we can on the request of the President or anybody else transmit it to him again? The Constitution seems to be perfectly explicit upon that subject, but it may be that there is some way of getting around it that I do not see.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to take up the resolution I offered yesterday to appoint a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message is before the Senate. The President has requested leave to withdraw his message vetoing a certain bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that that message be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope that motion will not prevail. It certainly is an unkind motion for my friend to make. This is a matter of very great interest in a local sense to my State, and I hope he will not insist on his motion. If there is any parliamentary objection to the withdrawal of the bill as suggested by the President, I hope my friend will make it in order that we may pass the bill over the President's veto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not a parliamentary objection, if there be any objection at all. It is one which the Constitution in perfectly plain terms makes for itself. Our duty with a bill that is returned to us is fixed by the Constitution, if it is fixed at all. The Constitution says we shall proceed to do a certain thing with that bill. That is the inquiry that I put to the Senate; and in order that that may be considered, as it is the first instance I remember of this kind, I thought it proper to refer it to an appropriate committee for consideration. If the Senate does not choose to do that, of course it can act either by agreeing to this request of the President or declining to agree to it.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think there is the slightest doubt that the Senator from Vermont is entirely correct. It is a new question, and yet it is one of that class that almost on its presentation carries its answer. The President has no more right to recall a bill after having vetoed it than he has, as is well suggested in this neighborhood, to tear a leaf out of the statute-book and thereby assume thus to repeal the statute that he tears from the book. I think the subject ought to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or the Committee on the Judiciary, and let us settle this matter, for fear that it may be a precedent for what would be an improper practice. Of course the President has no intention of entering upon any improper practice or proceeding, but I think it would be well for us to be careful that we do not innocently fall into a bad precedent.

Mr. PADDOCK. The President having recorded his judgment, after more mature reflection, that this bill should become a law, I move that the bill do become a law, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has moved to refer the bill with the messages to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It does not seem to me that there is any necessity for a reference of this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only moved, if I correctly stated myself, to refer the last message.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; I see no occasion for a reference for the purpose of getting the judgment of a committee upon the question raised by the two messages of the President. When the second message is properly construed it can mean only this: That the President was in error when he wrote and signed the first message. It is a matter of information; that is all. It has no legal value except that. I think that is the effect that the second message has, no legal or constitutional value whatever. Therefore the veto message remains precisely as it existed when it was laid upon the table of the Senate, in its full force and effect. Nevertheless, the second message is information to us that the President after more full consideration entertains the same opinion that was entertained by the House and the Senate when the bill was passed, and I think all we have to do is to pass upon the bill and see whether it can be passed by a two-thirds vote. The second message has no legal value whatsoever. It is merely information to us that the President has come to the conclusion that his first opinion was an erroneous opinion. There is no legal question that need trouble any committee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me that there is no question. I certainly concur with the opinions which have been expressed here. The President has no more power to take back his veto and so make that bill a law or remove that obstruction to its being a law, than one House of Congress has.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I certainly do not think the President can take the veto back.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. So then it is a mere expression of opinion on his part, which may influence us in our vote whether we shall sustain his veto or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will state that my motion is to refer merely the message.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Vermont to move that the messages be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which will leave the bill before the Senate on its passage.

Mr. INGALLS. I feel a very strong interest in the passage of this bill and shall be glad if any course is adopted by which it can become a law; but so far as the action of the President is concerned in his attempt to recall his veto message, I am persuaded it is entirely nugatory and without effect; that he can no more, when he has once performed that act and notice of it has been communicated to the Senate, recall it than he could recall his acts of the session before this or in any preceding year, or, as is suggested by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] than he could recall a bill after it had been signed by him and approved and that fact had been communicated to the Senate. Having discharged his duty he is functus officio, and has no more right to recall that bill from the Senate than he has to perform any other act not confided to him by the Constitution. I therefore agree with the Senator from Massachusetts in believing that the sole duty of the Senate is under the Constitution to say whether they will now pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding; and inasmuch as the President has himself indicated to us that no objections exist to the passage of the bill I trust that action may be taken and that the bill will receive a constitutional majority.

Mr. CONKLING. I agree with the Senator from Kansas except in one remark he makes. He says the President became functus officio. If he means functus officio for one particular purpose, namely, to withdraw the bill itself in any form, or the message which attended the bill itself, I agree with him. But the distinction between that meaning and a broader one is very important, it seems to me. The President by the Constitution has a right at all times to communicate with one House, or the other, or both Houses of Congress. That right is just as continuing as the right of petition which resides by the Constitution in every citizen. Now the President sends a message which informs the Senate that he finds himself unable to approve with his signature a bill, and therefore he returns it without his approval. Manifestly, stopping there, it is the duty of the House receiving that message to proceed to consider whether the bill shall become a law, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Now, how is the question affected by the subsequent message which has been sent here? Proceeding under a power which is not dead, which has not been expended, in respect of which he is not functus officio, but always alive and always summoned to his feet to exercise it whenever he thinks he has any information which ought to be communicated to one House or the other or both, proceeding under that continuing power and duty he sends what is called a message. It is a communication addressed to the Senate to apprise the Senate of the fact that, being better advised touching the qualities of the bill which he vetoed, he has changed his mind and that had he known at the moment when he was called upon to act what he has come to know now, that veto would not have been interposed, but the bill would have been approved. The President exists and subsists at all times to give the Senate such information as that, and he has given it. The two Houses have acted upon the bill. They have approved it. If the veto stood it would require two-thirds to say that notwithstanding the refusal of the President to sign it that act should become a law. The veto does stand, unquestionably, it seems to me, as Senators on both sides have said, in all its technical, formal, and in that sense all its legal effect. It is an act which is the exertion of a power expended when it is exerted; and therefore that message cannot be withdrawn; but the substance of it, the persuasive force and effect of it, can be removed and is removed by a disclaimer on the part of the author by an avowal on his part that upon more full and particular information he is satisfied that the veto message ought not to have been sent and that were it in his power now he would take it back, so that the bill might stand with his signature. That is an invitation to the Senate, it is a notice given to the Senate that they must not rely upon the reasons assigned in the veto message and that they must not so far as they have a right to rely upon the President of the United States touching legislation, depend on him for the overthrow of the bill or the refusal to adopt it. How far the Senate has a right to rely on the President is prescribed in the Constitution. Arithmetically considered, one-sixth part of the power of legislation resides in the President, and is made effective by his veto. Now he says "I want to give notice that in this case I was misled, I was misinformed in regard to this bill, and therefore, although I cannot displace the veto message, and although I cannot technically cancel or annul it, I can but apprise the Senate that the reasons on which I supposed that message could rest are unfounded, and therefore as to me it falls to the ground. The argument is in favor of the bill for reasons which I have now discovered, and not against the bill for reasons which I supposed to exist, but which on fuller information I find are absent."

It seems to me that we ought to proceed to act upon the bill, the more recent communication having no effect except as it impresses the minds of Senators who are to vote with the fact that there is no such objection found by one part of the legislative power as the previous message apprised us had been found.

I can see no purpose in referring this message to any committee to ascertain the question, if it be a question, and I conceive there is no question of substance here and no question of value. If we referred the message to a committee, it would imply that we were not sufficiently advised to take action on the bill; but it might well be said that it would be inconsistent after that for the Senate to proceed in the absence of information which they had directed a committee to acquire and bring in.

It seems to me then that to preserve the consistency of the body and to observe also proper attention and industry in legislation, both Houses having acted upon this bill and passed it and there being no objection assigned to it except that which is displaced and withdrawn, the true way is to proceed, as the Constitution says we shall, and affirm whether in our judgment, despite this messsage—which it seems was in a sense improvident or inadvertent—the act shall become a law, and I think we are as ready to vote on that question as we ever can be after the committee has philosophized on what seems to me to admit of no doubt whatever, namely, whether when the President has sent a veto message he has sent it, and that is the end of it, and whether after it has been delivered and read, it can be withdrawn I conceive there can be no question of that sort and it must be obviously our duty to proceed and act on the bill in form as we would in the case of any other bill to which the executive sanction had been refused.

Mr. MORTON. As this message is proposed to be referred to a committee to which I belong, I may be excused for saying a word. This message can only be regarded in the light of a recommendation to pass the bill over the veto. I think the President has no more right to withdraw a veto than he has to withdraw his signature to a bill after he has signed it. It seems to me the question is not open to argument, and I can see no occasion for referring the message to a committee and asking the opinion of a committee upon it. As has been said, it might leave the inference that there was doubt about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the last message to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? on which the yeas and nays must be taken under the Constitution.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays none; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Sargent, Spencer, West, and Windom—36.

NAYS—0.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Logan, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—35.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the passage of the bill notwithstanding the objections of the President the yeas are 36 and the nays none. Two thirds having voted for the passage of the bill, the same is passed.

Mr. INGALLS. As this is a novel question, I suggest that it would not probably be necessary to transmit to the House the last message of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) to defray the expenses of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JUNIUS T. TURNER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message:

To the Senate of the United States:

For the reasons presented in the accompanying communications, submitted by the Secretary of War, I have the honor to return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill No. 561, entitled "An act for the relief of Major Junius T. Turner."

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 15, 1876.

Mr. SPENCER. Let that go over to the next session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the bill, with the message, be referred to the appropriate committee, the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it not disrespectful to refer it without its being read? I hope no Senator will object to the message being read.

Mr. SARGENT. The message has been read; the accompanying documents have not been.

Mr. DAVIS. Senators in whom I have confidence differ with me, and I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves the reference of the bill and the message to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF JOINT DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) to defray the expenses of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read at length. It appropriates $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of paying the expenses of the joint committee, one-half to be disbursed from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

By unanimous consent the joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now appoint the members of the Senate upon the special committee. The Chair appoints the Senator from Alabama, Mr. SPENCER; the Senator from Minnesota, Mr. WINDOM; and the Senator from Maryland, Mr. WHYTE.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be paid out of the contingent funds of the respective Houses the usual per diem allowance to clerks of committees not having a yearly salary for a period of thirty-one days from the 1st day of August, 1876.

Mr. SARGENT. That is of no value unless made a joint resolution. I move to make it a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moves an amendment to make this a joint resolution. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so modified.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 26) authorizing an allowance to certain clerks of committees was read three times, and passed.

ALABAMA ELECTION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution I offered yesterday for the appointment of a committee to investigate the recent election in Alabama, and on that motion I desire to submit a few remarks.

Warned, Mr. President, by the experience of Mississippi and fully apprised of an existing conspiracy on the part of the southern democracy to overcome the republican majorities in the seceding States, no matter at what cost or hazard or by what process or formula, I was not unprepared to learn that Alabama had been fraudulently carried by the democratic party. But I confess my surprise when the result of the late election in Alabama was heralded throughout the land and so indorsed upon the floor of the Senate as a peaceable, honest, and fair election, the majority not less than forty thousand; this the legitimate result, so said, of change of political sentiment in that State.

I was astonished to hear the report, commonly made and credited, but no less false, that this overwhelming majority was accomplished by the addition of the colored vote, which, as alleged, was polled largely for the democratic nominees, and against its old associates of the republican party, freely and of its own volition; an indorsement by the colored people of the propriety of democratic reform and in vindication of the administration of the democratic governor.

Glaring and flagrant as were the frauds in Alabama at the election of 1874, when Georgia on the one side and Mississippi on the other, by preconcerted arrangement, colonized the State, stuffing the ballot-boxes with illegal votes for the democratic candidates; when disorder, violence, and conspiracy reigned supreme; when counties of admitted republican strength were made to return heavy democratic majorities without respect to the registration or the census of voters and inhabitants; when republicans found themselves powerless to resist the fearful combinations surrounding them, unable to check the open, avowed, and undisguised tide of revolution inaugurated by the secession democracy; when the condition of the State was simply that of anarchy and confusion; yet, nevertheless, the whole sinks into utter insignificance when compared with the recent election of August, 1876.

The election of 1874 was simply a revolution to pave the way for future aggressions upon the honest republican majority of the State of Alabama, as well as a desperate attempt to seize the reins of power, so that a democratic Legislature might enact laws practically disfranchising the colored voters. It was a bold and cunning move upon the political chess-board; and by combining forces with the democrats of the neighboring States of Georgia and Mississippi and by other frauds, conspiracies, and violences, the scheme succeeded, and Alabama passed under control of the secession democracy.

Forthwith the plan was put into execution, by which the State, which since reconstruction had twice cast her electoral vote for the republican candidates, could be transferred to the control of the democracy and her electoral vote secured to the nominees of that party. By the operation of unnecessary and improper changes and alterations of the existing laws respecting elections the recent farce of an election was consummated, by which the hypothetical majority of 40,000 is claimed to have been rolled up for the democratic nominees.

Information comes to me from all parts of the State and from most worthy sources that it was openly avowed and declared, no matter how large the republican vote might be, the democracy intended to carry the State, and that if the votes showed a republican majority it would not be counted. With the machinery of the election in their own hands, with full and perfect understanding what desperate purpose was sought to be accomplished, it is certainly not surprising the democracy should have carried Alabama. But when it is attempted to foot up a so-called "honest majority" of 40,000 upon an alleged free, fair, and peaceable election, the sublimity of democratic assurance and arrogance seems to have been reached. Having overshot the mark, inquiry into the modus operandi by which this anomalous result was accomplished will in the judgment of my constituents and myself develop and discover one of the blackest conspiracies against the constitutional right of free, fair, and impartial exercise of suffrage and atended with peculiar invasions and cruelties.

Whatever may be urged respecting republican government in other States, certain it is the republicans of Alabama have always acquiesced in the will of the majority when fairly and honestly expressed against them. The republican government of Alabama has generally been marked for its ability, integrity, and economy. There never has existed any class legislation, and no discriminations were ever made by the republican Legislatures for or against any citizen, nor were the events of secession and rebellion visited in punishment against any person. None were disfranchised, and the extent of the republican demand was then, and is now, simply that every citizen, no matter of what race or color, shall be permitted to vote as he lists, without impediment or hinderance, and that such vote may count one, no more, no less.

It therefore is clear the democracy of Alabama have no just cause of complaint against the republican administration of the State. There were no issues between the contending parties that could not be peaceably and properly settled at the ballot-box. But nothing less than aggrandizing the entire political power of the State could satisfy them; and well knowing that upon fair and honest count the republicans were in a majority of not less than 10,000, they have utilized the double event of the centennial year and a presidential campaign to parade this farce of an election as the forerunner of what may be expected in November next.

By the operation of their election machinery it is estimated over sixty thousand republican voters were deprived of their suffrages at the recent election. In addition to combining to prevent voters reaching the ballot-boxes, these boxes were subjected to the depleting process. Republican tickets were destroyed and democratic ballots interpolated in lieu. To recount the various and multiform tricks, cheats, and devices resorted to to accomplish this 40,000 majority would prove an almost endless task.

Each day brings me advices from every part of the State, with but the one common plaint of fraud, violence, and terrorism. Reputable citizens write me the harrowing recital of these wrongs, but beg me not to reveal their names, fearful of arousing the vengeance of the guilty parties. Each begs to remain incognito, not because of his irresponsibility, but for dread of assassination or other violence. There appears to exist no appreciable difference between the terrorisms of three or four years since (the heyday of the Ku-Klux) and the present hour. Republicans in the State of Alabama do not and cannot feel secure in their persons and property. The fact that the massacre of innocent and unoffending colored citizens still continues, and yet finds apologists and extenuators on the floors of Congress, goes far toward increasing this feeling of uneasiness, and the democratic triumph in Alabama is very justly looked upon as but another chapter in the ritual of the white-liners of the South.

I feel called upon to make these animadversions because of the trumpetings of this 40,000 democratic majority alleged to have accrued at a fair, unrestricted, and peaceable election. I am authorized to deny that the colored vote was polled for the democratic candidates, and at the same time to assert that such portion of this vote as was permitted to be cast and counted was true and faithful to the republican party in every sense.

I am in possession of satisfactory evidence showing that votes cast by republicans for the republican ticket were counted for their adversaries, either through fraudulent canvass or by changing the ballots after the polls had closed. I am also advised that thousands of republican voters were challenged away from the polls, and mobs and riots were instituted to prevent many from voting.

Telegraphic dispatches to the United States marshal were seized and the operator forbidden to send them; and the mass of information and data showing how thorough and complete was the conspiracy to deprive republicans of their franchise grows daily and hourly into vast proportions.

From every locality in the State come letters from responsible citizens protesting against this election as replete with the grossest frauds and covered with the vilest infamies. Many of these communications emanate from republicans, who, in matters of party discipline, have heretofore differed with me. But they all attest the fact, without dissent, that the late election in Alabama has never been surpassed or even equaled in the extent and character of its frauds, villainies, and terrorisms.

It is a matter of grave importance to the country that such conspiracies should be unearthed and exposed. A remedy should exist for grievances and crimes of like character. If the Constitution guarantees to every law-abiding citizen equal rights and equal application of the laws, why should not the guarantee be made effectual? The unoffending colored citizens, whose lives and rights are held so cheaply by the democracy of the South, vote as intelligently as any other class; and to their credit be it said, they remain true and steadfast to the tenets and dicta of that party through whose efforts and wisdom the bondman has been liberated, and the curse, taint, and reproach of human slavery has been lifted from the land.

Heedless people are prone to satisfy themselves with the reflection that "all this has passed." Of what avail is freedom if it be only supplanted by helotry and vassalage? Of what service is the right of suffrage if it be hindered, delayed, embroiled, and denied? Why should the ballot carry with its exercise personal danger and oppression?

There is no true liberty in a land which enacts liberal laws and yet fails to protect the citizen in their exercise. Every elector should be permitted, not only by law but by predominant public sentiment, to securely place his ballot in the box and have it honestly counted. The democracy in the Southern States, and notably in Alabama, are opposed to the exercise of these rights except by members of their own party. The late election is the result of this autochthonic tyrrany.

Forty thousand democratic majority in a republican State needs explanation. How was it accomplished? Let the country have the facts, and for this purpose I press the passage of the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. The resolution is not up yet.

Mr. CONKLING. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be read for information. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COOPER. I inquire of the Senator from Alabama if he desires to press the resolution?

Mr. SPENCER. If it can be passed without opposition, I should like to have it pass.

Mr. COOPER. It cannot be passed without opposition.

Mr. SPENCER. At this late hour if the other side wish to debate it I shall have to let it go to December, and the committee can be appointed at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator insist on his motion or withdraw it?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Tennessee, I suppose, is disposed to object to the consideration of it.

Mr. NORWOOD. That resolution cannot be passed without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama withdraw his motion?

Mr. SPENCER. I will let it go until December, and give notice that I will then call it up and urge its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama withdraws his motion.

WILLIAM H. HARRISON.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 310) granting a pension to William H. Harrison.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of William H. Harrison, late a private in Company F, Seventy-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA JANE BLUMER.

Mr. INGALLS. The House and Senate have both passed a bill granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer, which was returned by the President with his objections, upon the ground that the deceased husband of the beneficiary of the bill was wrongly described as to the company in which he served. In the bill which passed he was described as a private of Company A, whereas in fact he was a member of Company B, in the Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. The House have repassed a bill correcting that error, and have sent it to the Senate. I move that the bill be now taken up for consideration by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Eliza Jane Blumer, widow of Henry A. Blumer, a private of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES ARGYLE SMITH.

Mr. COOPER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 620) to remove the political disabilities of James Argyle Smith, of Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 736) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank; and

A bill (S. No. 951) removing the political disabilities of Stephen D. Lee, of the State of Mississippi, and others.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of expenditure for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives, pursuant to a concurrent resolution of the two Houses, had appointed as members on the part of the House of the joint select committee to prepare a form of government for the District of Columbia Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, Mr. EPPA HUNTON of Virginia, and Mr. GEORGE WILLARD of Michigan.

COMMISSION ON RELATIVE VALUE OF COIN.

Mr. DAVIS. This morning the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, [Mr. INGALLS,] who is not in his seat now, obtained an understanding that the Senate should go through with the cases reported by the Committee on Pensions which are on the Calendar. I regret that I do not find him in his seat now, but I move to take up the next bill on the Calendar at the point where its consideration was suspended. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 3894) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Custer, widow of George A. Custer.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will allow a measure of general importance to be taken up first. It is merely a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives. I have found no opportunity to ask the Senate to take any action upon it since the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up this resolution; and I will state that the Committee on Finance amended the proposition and put it in a more acceptable form and made it into a bill, but it is so late in the session, and there is so little difference between the two that it is deemed best that we should obtain the action of the Senate upon the original proposition as presented by the House.

I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a commission is hereby authorized and constituted, to consist of three Senators, to be appointed by the Senate; three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker; and experts, not exceeding three in number, to be selected by and associated with them, with authority to determine the time and place of meeting, and to take evidence; and whose duty it shall be to inquire—

First. Into the change which has taken place in the relative value of gold and silver; the causes thereof, whether permanent or otherwise; the effects thereof upon trade, commerce, finance, and productive interests of the country, and upon the standard value in this and foreign countries;

Second. Into the policy of the restoration of the double standard in this country; and, if restored, what the legal relation between the two coins, silver and gold, should be;

Third. Into the policy of continuing legal-tender notes concurrently with the metallic standards, and the effects thereof upon the labor, industries, and wealth of the country; and,

Fourth. Into the best means for providing for facilitating the resumption of specie payments.

And said commission is authorized to employ a stenographer, and shall report on or before the 15th day of January, 1877, with the evidence taken by them, and such recommendations for legislation as they may deem proper.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. When this resolution came from the House and was referred to the Committee on Finance the committee made some small amendments, one particularly where they struck out the word "experts" and inserted the word "assistants," because they were unable to see who could be an expert in this country with regard to the cause of the variance in the relation between gold and silver. They could not understand who could be an expert in the effect that a fall in silver or a rise in gold would have on the commerce of the world, nor could they understand how the duty could be imposed upon that committee of deciding who could be an expert as to the effect of having a legal-tender circulation in this country concurrently with gold and silver. There is scarcely a proposition submitted to the committee for its examination upon which they would be able to find experts in this country. In fact, if the committee should be able to find such experts it would be well for the committee to recommend their immediate election to the Senate and House of Representatives. We struck out the word "experts" and put in the word "assistants," that being more appropriate; but as it is impossible now, on account of the lateness of the hour in the session, to have the amendment adopted by the House, the Senate committee have thought proper to let the resolution pass as it stands with that inappropriate word in it.

Mr. NORWOOD. We have on the table a resolution reported by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. MORRILL. Let this pass as the House has sent it to us; otherwise it may not pass at all.

Mr. NORWOOD. I wanted to move that as a substitute for the resolution, but upon the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont I will not do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the members of the commission on the part of the Senate; and Mr. JONES of Nevada, Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. BOGY were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LITTLE ROCK.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, there is upon your desk a bill of the Senate which has just been returned from the House with an amendment, which fixes the limit to be expended on the public building at Little Rock. I ask that that bill be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of expenditure for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas.

The amendment of the House was in line 8, to strike out the words "and fifty;" so as to read:

Fixing the limit of expenditure authorized for the site and full completion of said building at $200,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. The amendment of the House reduces the amount $50,000. While I would be glad to have the original amount retained, I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

COMMODORES ON RETIRED LIST.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 800) relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It amends section 1460 of the Revised Statutes, to wit: "There may be allowed upon the retired list of the Navy nine rear-admirals by promotion on that list; by adding thereto the following words: "or who, being at the outbreak of the late war of the rebellion citizens of any State which engaged in such rebellion, exhibited marked fidelity to the Union in adhering to the flag of the United States; but this section shall not prevent the Secretary of the Navy from promoting to the grade of rear-admiral on the retired list, in addition to the number herein provided, those commodores who have commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or who have performed other highly meritorious service."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAX ON SPIRITS.

Mr. GORDON. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to appoint a commission of five persons to examine the system and devices employed in the collection of internal-revenue taxes upon distilled spirits and fermented liquors, and report what changes, if any, should be made therein; said commission being directed, to that end, to examine and report upon such systems and devices for that purpose as may be submitted to them; and he is further requested to transmit to the Senate in December next the report of said commission, together with such recommendations as he may think proper to make regarding amendments to the laws relating to the method of collecting said taxes.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It seems to me we have not time to consider such a resolution as that at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to its present consideration?

Mr. BOUTWELL. For the purpose of hearing what is to be said, I shall object.

Mr. GORDON. I only wanted to say that it is a resolution simply directing the Secretary of the Treasury to select five persons without any pay, such as he may choose to select, to examine the devices that may be presented to him for the purpose of preventing fraud in the whisky manufacture, and to report at the next session. There is nothing authoritative in it except merely to get these matters before us at the next session, so that we may see what is best to be done.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I presume there has not been a year when the Secretary of the Treasury has not done this very thing of his own motion. The persons who make inventions come to the Department with them, and they are examined, I presume, as often as once in six months, for the purpose of ascertaining what value there is in them. I do not believe we need to pass a resolution in relation to the subject.

Mr. GORDON. The resolution simply directs him to appoint a commission.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not think it is necessary. I shall have to object to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

EDWARD A. LELAND.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask Senators to yield to me a moment, while I ask the Senate to take up and consider Senate bill No. 691, reported from the Committee on Patents by my colleague, [Mr. KERNAN,] whose printed report I have in my hand. It is a bill to extend a patent, which is not a favorite class of bills in the Senate. In this case, however, the report shows that this man from poverty and sickness was not able to avail himself of his invention, which is an improvement in paint-cans. The patent has never been extended; he has received substantially nothing from it, and the committee thought the facts presented to them in this printed report make it an exceptional case, which, within the rules adopted by the Senate, ought to be favorably considered. I ask to take up the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves the consideration of the bill which he has named.

Mr. CONKLING. I have here the report, which is very brief, and which, if any single Senator doubts the propriety of the bill, I will read or have read. It is a report made by my colleague, who is here and who is also familiar with the case. I think there will be no objection to it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 691) for the relief of Edwin A. Leland. It directs the Commissioner of Patents to grant a rehearing of the application of Edwin A. Leland for the extension of letters-patent granted to him on the 14th of August, 1860, for improvement in paint-cans, and to revive and extend the patent for the further term of seven years from and after the 14th of August, 1874, if, in his judgment, the patentee was the original and first inventor of the invention described in the patent, and the invention is useful, and the patentee has failed, without neglect or fault on his part, to obtain from the use and sale of the invention a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, labor, and expense bestowed upon the same and the introduction thereof into use; and the letters-patent, when so revived and extended, shall have the same effect in law as if they had been originally granted for the term of twenty-one years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) amending the eighth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution. It will not take half a minute. It is merely to correct a clerical error.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) amending the eighth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends section 8 of the act by striking out the words "12th day of July," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "19th day of July."

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to have an explanation of the resolution.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has charge of it. The date referred to should be the 19th of July. The clerks made a mistake in enrolling, and made it the 12th, and this joint resolution has been passed to correct that error.

Mr. SARGENT. I only wish to know that the Senator is sure it is an error.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is all; it is only an error.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDICK MCKEE.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 620) for the relief of Redick McKee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It refers the memorial and claims of Redick McKee, late disbursing agent of the Indian Department in California, (Miscellaneous Document No. 102, printed Febary 25, 1871,) for examination and settlement to the Secretary of the Interior. It authorizes the Secretary, if he shall find the allegations and statements of the claimant verified by the records of the Department, or other satisfactory evidence, to allow him such relief as may be equitable and just, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose the Senate is aware that this is an old matter which has been decided by the Senate a good many times, but as the appropriation is unlimited I suppose there will be no objection to it.

Mr. INGALLS. I suppose it is no more than just that I should state to the Senate that this bill was before the Committee on Indian Affairs and received protracted consideration, and the best that could be done with it was to report it back without any recommendation whatever. It involves the examination of a large number of accounts. It is a claim of very venerable antiquity. It has passed the ordeal of repeated examinations through the Department of the Interior, and now comes to us, as it has always seemed to me, in very questionable guise; but having said this much I discharge my duty and leave the matter to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it a House bill?

Mr. SARGENT. It is a House bill. The Calendar of the Senate states that it was reported back from the Committee on Indian Affairs by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] without amendment. I do not believe that a claim is necessarily suspicious simply when because of accidents which occur here every session it is impossible to have it brought earlier to the attention of Congress in order to be passed. This bill already has passed the House of Representatives, but failed for want of time in the last Congress. A partial settlement of this matter was made some years ago; but the matter involved in this bill has never been settled, and unquestionably is justly due to a good man, who discharged faithfully a service to the the Government under very difficult circumstances. It seems to me it is no more than right that we should refer this matter to a man whom we know to be extremely careful, the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain if anything is due as shown by the records of his Department.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will say in addition to that, that the Committee on Indian Affairs in examining this question found that the Secretary of the Interior acknowledged a portion of the claims as being just which are proposed to be submitted to him by this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it be in order to ask for the reading of the last statute that passed upon this subject making a settlement with this gentleman? If it is, I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill read it to us.

Mr. SARGENT. I have not the statute before me. I can find it, however, after some delay if the Senator desires to hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will simply ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. There is no use to try to stop this sort of thing.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I think I ought to say that this claim, or what I suppose to be this claim, was before the Committee on Claims when I was a member of that committee. My recollection is that there was one allowance made to him by that committee to which I could not assent; but I take it for granted that all the money was paid to him at that time that anybody on that committee thought was due him. The consideration of that committee was several years ago. I do not remember the facts sufficiently to restate them at all.

Mr. SARGENT. I remember the circumstances very well. I was in Congress at that time. I know an extremely hard provision or allowance was paid to this gentleman, and the concluding clause of the statute said it should be payment in full of all claims; but that is by no means conclusive on Congress, as I can show many instances where just such a clause was contained in a bill and nevertheless further allowances were made on further examination. I suppose every Senator, especially every Senator of experience, who hears me knows that is so. I have in my hand a list of some that I could name; but the bill does not make a direct allowance out of the Treasury except that on an examination of the records in the Department it merely authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain what amount may be due to him. My impression is that it will not be more than two or three thousand dollars at the very outside. I trust, as an act of tardy justice to a most excellent man who rendered good service to us, that this examination be allowed to take place.

Mr. INGALLS. It is my understanding that the amount involved is very much larger than that named by the Senator from California. It extends a very long way beyond two or three thousand dollars. I am advised that the beneficiary of the bill has already received every thing to which he could be properly entitled under a fair construction of the statutes and of the contract he had with the Government, and that these matters that now remain unadjusted arose from claims for damages of the most remote and consequential character, such as the difference between currency and gold at the time when he received certain remittances.

Mr. SARGENT. There was no difference between currency and gold at that time.

Mr. INGALLS. And also the loss that he suffered in consequence of being compelled to mortgage his house to raise money to anticipate remittances made to him from the Department of the Interior. He claims, as I understand, that in consequence of the neglect and omission of the Secretary to remit money he was compelled to mortgage his house; that, the times being hard and it being almost impossible to release it, legal proceedings were commenced and the house was sold, as he claims, at a sacrifice. What he now wishes is that the Secretary of the Interior may be directed to inquire whether or not he has any equitable claims upon the Government for that class of losses incurred by him.

Mr. SARGENT. McKee was one of three commissioners of Indian affairs sent in 1850 to California. He was sent with full authority to do certain things. It is very well known that at that time there was a vast crush of emigration to that State, pouring in there suddenly upon the Indian tribes, rudely disturbing them. Tens of thousands of white persons going into territory occupied by the Indians, troubles arose, and the Government sent commissioners to adjust those differences and gave full authority to the commissioners to expend certain money. The Government was to send the money to them for that purpose. McKee went there in perfect good faith to carry out the purposes of the Government, and did succeed in pacifying those difficulties. The remittances of the Government did not come to hand, and since that time he has been trying to get back from the Government that which he spent in good faith when sent upon this mission. It is true that in consequence of the failure of the Government he became bankrupt, lost his house, and became a completely poor man. As I said before, it is a mere tardy act of justice to ascertain the amount which this man was compelled to pay then on the faith of the Government and pay it back to him at this time without interest.

I have no idea the Secretary of the Interior would allow a doubtful item or one that was improper in any respect. As to there being items like differences in gold and currency, there was no difference in those days between gold and currency, and was not until years afterward. The only item the Senator refers to is that which shows the hardship of this matter, the fact that this man's property was sacrificed when honestly performing a duty to the Government. As to the claimant himself, he is a man of most unquestionable integrity, a man universally known as a spotless, most excellent, exemplary man. He has been suffering for years, endeavoring to recover the losses that he at that time suffered in the service of the Government, and I trust the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. HOWE. Does the Senator from California remember what I do not remember, that is, how many examinations this account underwent in the Interior Department before it came into Congress?

Mr. SARGENT. I know the Interior Department never settled this account because, of changes of administration and other circumstances. Partial relief was made by Congress. Congress paid him a certain portion of the money which was due to him; that is to say, he had paid out a certain amount of money, and they drew a line arbitrarily through that amount and paid him part of it. He was then as much entitled to the other part as he was to that part which they gave, and if he is not entitled to the other part he was not entitled to that which was paid to him.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from California says the Interior Department has never settled this account. I suppose he is entirely correct in that; but is it not the fact that the Interior Department has rejected it several times and refused to pay every item of this claim?

Mr. SARGENT. No; I do not know that that is true. The House report which I hold in my hand says—

> That the Interior Department, from which information respecting this matter has been sought, has "stated that it was not prepared, without a full examination of the case, to give an opinion upon the merits of the allowance suggested by the claimant in his memorial, and also that, should the proposed joint resolution meet the approval of Congress, Mr. McKee's claim will receive careful attention at the hands of the Department."

That is the only information I have upon that point. I suppose if the Department had paid the claim it would never have reached Congress, so that prima facie it has been rejected by the Department; but that may have been because there may have been a defect in the appropriation or a defect in the law on the part of the Department to pass upon this class of claims.

Mr. HOWE. My recollection is that this case has been once or twice before the Interior Department by act of Congress, with full power to the Department to allow all that ought to be paid of this claim; and that the Interior Department made allowances, I should think twice, upon this claim when it was referred to them, and finally refused to allow anything more; and that after the Interior Department had refused to go any further application was then made to Congress, and the Committee on Claims had it under consideration; and that that committee made another report in favor of the payment of several thousand dollars, and that that passed the two Houses and he received that amount of money. Whether it has ever been before that committee since that allowance or not, I am not prepared to say. It seems it now comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the committee is not able to say whether he ought or ought not to have any more money.

The facts of the case are very indistinct in my mind. My recollection is that this gentleman was one of three commissioners sent out some twenty-odd years ago to California, twenty-six years ago, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] says, to expend on Indians there with whom we had no treaty relations whatever, and to whom we were under no obligations whatever, a specific sum of money appropriated, and all the duty as I remember that they were charged with was just expending that sum of money. I think the sum was $25,000. I believe there was an additional appropriation made subsequently. Their pay was fixed I think not by an act of Congress, but by some Department of the Government, probably the Interior Department. Somehow or other they contrived not only to spend that amount of money but to bring the Government into debt to themselves, or at least in debt to this one commissioner in an amount of money which we have been paying off by installments, as I have said. One or two of them were paid by special allowances of the Interior Department, one by an act passed on the report of the Committee on Claims, and here is another claim for payment. My own recollection is that I was decidedly opposed to the allowance made by the Committee on Claims the last time. Therefore, unless I see that I was mistaken at that time, I do not see how I can vote for the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the passage of the bill upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Gordon, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Mitchell, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Sargent, West, and Windom—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Howe, Ingalls, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Morrill, Oglesby, and Saulsbury—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Johnston, Logan, Merrimon, Morton, Paddock, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—32.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. HOWE subsequently said: A short time since the bill (H. R. No. 620) for the relief of Redick McKee was defeated. I took some part in that debate, supposing it was a claim which was formerly examined by me when a member of the Committee on Claims. I have been assured since the vote was taken that I was entirely mistaken; that claim never was before that committee. I am not at all certain that I was not mistaken; I therefore ask leave to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. INGALLS. Not to be called up now?

Mr. HOWE. No, it is not the purpose of the Senator from California to call it up at this session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

MRS. JAMES K. POLK.

Mr. KEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,500 to Mrs. James K. Polk, widow of the late President of the United States, in full satisfaction of her claim for property supplied the United States Army in Yalabusha County, Mississippi.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to have the report read, if one accompanies the bill, in order to see what the appropriation is for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted from the Committee on Claims by Mr. COCKRELL, July 5:

> The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:
>
> The bill provides for the payment to Mrs. James K. Polk, the widow of the late President Polk, of the sum of $1,500 for property supplied the United States Army in Yalabusha County, Mississippi.
>
> Your committee find from the evidence that Mrs. Polk was loyal to the Union during the late war, and that she was, in August, 1863, the owner of ten head of good, serviceable mules claimed to be of the value of $2,000, and of two saddles and bridles claimed to be worth $40, and that on or about the 19th day of August, 1863, the cavalry troops of the United States Army, then passing by her plantation in Yalabusha County, Mississippi, took the above property, and the same was used for Army purposes, and that the sum of $1,500, as named in this bill, passed by the House of Representatives, is a moderate and reasonable price for said property.
>
> Your committee find that the loyalty of the claimant, her ownership of the property, the taking of the same by the United States troops for Army uses, and the reasonable value of the same as named in the bill, are sufficiently proved to justify the passage of this bill.
>
> Your committee further find that the commissioners of claims have jurisdiction of this case, and that this claim was presented to said commissioners for allowance, and that, in pursuance of a resolution passed by the House of Representatives in 1874, the commissioners of claims transmitted to the House all the papers and evidence in said case on the 8th day of April, 1874, and that this claim has never been decided by said commissioners and is still pending before them.

If this were an ordinary case, your committee would not hesitate to decline to take any action, and would leave the claimant to pursue her remedy before the commissioners of claims, and your committee now distinctly avow their policy and determination to leave all claimants in cases wherein the Court of Claims or the commissioners of claims have jurisdiction, to pursue their remedies before said tribunals.

As the claimant and her case are, however, exceptional, your committee have concluded, under the peculiar circumstances, to report this bill back to the Senate for its action, assuring the Senate and all claimants that this shall be no precedent for such action in any other case.

Mr. INGALLS. The language of the report is that this is not an ordinary case; that it is exceptional in some manner which is not described. If the claimant was a loyal citizen of the United States and the property was taken in a legal method for the use of the United States forces, and vouchers given, as was usual in such cases, I cannot understand why they were not paid upon presentation, or, if they were delayed, how it happens that the claim has not been successfully prosecuted either before the Court of Claims or before the board of commissioners appointed for the adjustment of such claims. Before I can vote for the bill under these circumstances I should require some further authentication both of the loyalty of the claimant and of the legality of this demand, and some assurance of the peculiarity that makes this not an ordinary case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know what the distinguished Senator from Kansas will require as to the loyalty of the claimant. The question of the loyalty of the claimant was submitted to the Committee on Claims. Five of that committee are republicans in good standing in this body. I reported the case to the committee upon the facts and evidence which were before us, and that report was approved by the committee, as proving the fact of her loyalty, the fact that the property belonged to her, and the further fact that the property was taken while a cavalry command of the United States was passing by her plantation, and that there was no receipt given for it.

Mr. INGALLS. Why not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply because she was not there at the time, and the overseer was not present at the time it was taken. He saw the officers in possession of the property afterward. The cavalry command was making a raid through the country, and needed these mules and the property for transportation for the benefit of the Army, and took them, but did not take time to give any receipt or anything of the kind. The question of her loyalty was raised after the committee reported the bill to the Senate, when I asked for the consideration of it. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] had the kindness to give me the names of parties who would prove that she was disloyal. I wrote to those parties and I brought one of them here into the Senate Chamber and proposed to introduce him to the Senator from Vermont and did take him to the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee. This man was one of the persons who were said to have the information which would show her to be disloyal; but, on the contrary, he proved her loyalty, and we were all abundantly satisfied upon that point. I think the Senator from Kansas will find, if he will look at the reports coming from the Committee on Claims, that I do not propose to pass upon the loyalty of persons simply upon their statement. I recognize the fact that I risked everything I had in the world, that I lost it, and am entitled to no compensation for it; and I recognize the fact that every man, woman, and child in the South who occupied the position that I did have no claims whatever upon this Government for compensation for property taken or destroyed. We are not asking it. I would say to the distinguished Senator that I will confess another thing, and that is that we do not have the most unbounded, heart-rending sympathy for those people who were living among us during the war and claimed to be loyal, and we are just as much disposed to bring the strictest rule adopted by the Senate to bear upon them that the Senator or any other Senator upon this floor desires to bring to bear. If I did not believe that the loyalty of Mrs. Polk, the widow of the late Ex-President Polk, was above suspicion in this matter, I should have reported against the claim with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator why there has been this extraordinary delay in the prosecution of this claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claim was filed before the commissioners of claims and with thirty thousand other claims still pending there and not acted on. I think that there are over thirty thousand claims pending before the commissioners of claims. The Senator will realize at once how impossible it is to pass upon all these claims. I believe it was General Butler, a member of the House of Representatives, who caused this claim to be taken from the commissioners of claims. General Butler, while a member of the last House of Representatives, introduced a resolution requiring the commissioners of claims to send to the House of Representatives the papers in this case, and that was the way it was taken away from them. This claimant being the only living widow of an Ex-President he thought it was an exceptional case. General HURLBUT and other officers there had it brought to the House, and I am told—I did not read the record of the proceedings—they spoke of her loyalty to their own certain knowledge.

Mr. KEY. I will say to my friend from Kansas that General HURLBUT, who, I understand, is a distinguished member of the other House of Congress, was the officer under whose command this property was taken, and he says the claim ought to be paid.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to hear from the Senator from Missouri why this case is not disposed of in the claims commission.

Mr. COCKRELL. I answered that to the Senator from Kansas. There were, I think, over thirty thousand claims pending before the commissioners of claims and it has been simply a matter of physical impossibility for them to pass upon all the claims and this claim has not been reached. It was General Butler who had it brought from the commissioners of claims to the House in order to have it acted upon there and not await the delay, if I am not mistaken. They act upon several thousand claims every year; but they cannot possibly act upon them all.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is there a letter in existence from one of the commissioners questioning the loyalty of Mrs. Polk?

Mr. COCKRELL. A telegram from one of the commissioners to the Senator from Vermont was handed to me by him, and a letter afterward gave the names of Colonel Ferry and General Mitchell as the parties who would show that she was disloyal. The letter was not given to me, but the names were given to me by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator misapprehended me somewhat, for I certainly made no point whatever upon the loyalty of the claimant. Of course Mrs. Polk, the widow of the late President, is well known to this country as a woman of extraordinary dignity and purity of character, and, so far as her loyalty is concerned, I have never heard anything one way or the other; but the language of the report itself is eminently calculated to arouse suspicion. The committee are exceedingly careful to apologize for the report that they have made. They say it is not an ordinary case, and that they are exceedingly anxious that it shall not be made under any circumstances a precedent, and that they would otherwise—

Leave the claimant to pursue her remedy before the commissioners of claims; and your committee now distinctly avow their policy and determination to leave all claimants in cases wherein the Court of Claims or the commissioners of claims have jurisdiction, to pursue their remedies before said tribunals.

As the claimant and her case are, however, exceptional, your committee have concluded, under the peculiar circumstances, to report this bill back to the Senate for its action, assuring the Senate and all claimants that this shall be no precedent for such action in any other case.

If Mrs. Polk is and was a loyal woman, if this property belonged to her, if it was taken in the ordinary methods by the Government of the United States for the prosecution of its military affairs, if this was the value of the property named in this bill, how does this differ from any other case that was before the commissioners of claims?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me a moment, I will say that I was present at the meeting of the Committee on Claims when the case was considered, and according to my recollection the fact that made this case exceptional was this: The Committee on Claims never have recommended the payment of a claim for property which was taken and used for the benefit of the Army unless it were taken by the order of some military officer authorized to make such order. My recollection is that in this case it appeared beyond all question that the property was taken and used by the Army, but it did not appear that it was taken by the order of any military officer. The Senator from Missouri made the report and will recollect more distinctly in regard to that point than I do. But that is my recollection, and that is the reason that this case is exceptional.

Mr. COCKRELL. I undertook to explain to the Senator from Kansas why it was an exceptional case, and instead of that report being criticised I supposed it would be commended by the Senate. The evidence was abundant to prove the facts stated in the report, although no receipt was given, and therefore no direct orders from the officer as the Senator from Wisconsin states; but we proposed to make it an exceptional case because the Committee on Claims do not propose to take cognizance of every claim which is pending in the Court of Claims, before the commissioners of claims, in the Quartermaster's Department, before the Third Auditor, or before the Commissary-General. There are large numbers of claims pending in all these Departments, and these applicants occasionally, about fifty a year I suppose, come to Congress to act upon their claims before those tribunals having jurisdiction have decided their claims, and we make this an exceptional case to that class of claims. We do not intend that this shall be a precedent, held by the Senate, held by claimants, or any man, woman, or child in the land, that we intend to consider or act upon those cases. It is an isolated, exceptional case, the only case in the United States where it is possible for the wife of a late President to make a claim, and that was the ground upon which we made it an exceptional case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The peculiarity that the Committee on Claims apply to this claim in order to stand when other claimants present themselves must be a peculiarity of principle and not of caprice, however generously and friendly that capricious action of the committee may be. I take it everybody will agree to that proposition. It cannot be made an exception on the ground that the committee feel a particular solicitude about this lady on account of the circumstance that her husband was once President of the United States. It must stand upon some principle, I think, in order to take it out of this rule.

Now, Congress has provided a tribunal to investigate all cases of this character, where witnesses can be examined under oath and cross-examined as they give their testimony by counsel appearing and having plenty of time to get at the truth so far as cross-examination and the calling of counter-witnesses can avail to that end. The loyalty of this lady has been questioned, and one of the commissioners of this court felt it to be his duty, seeing this bill up, to send to me—I suppose he sent it to me because he happened to be an acquaintance of mine and knew that I was generally in the Senate—a telegram, followed by a letter, which stated the names of persons who he was informed by responsible authority would testify in the direction of her having sympathized with and assisted the so-called southern confederacy. These gentlemen may have since been applied to by the committee. I do not know.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator will certainly bear me out that I came to him sitting in his seat and offered to introduce to him one of the very men whose names he had sent me in order that he might talk with him himself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, but I am not the court of commissioners of southern claims; I am not the Committee on Claims of the Senate, and I should always beg to be excused from taking up the office as an individual Senator of catechising a witness in the nature of a cross-examination on the floor of this body. I think my constituents would require me to engage in some more general business than that. If this case were before a committee of which I was a member and a man came to the committee-room in the regular way and were put under oath, I should endeavor to the extent of my ability to get at what the truth really was. That is my answer to that.

My point is—if there be any point against appropriations of this character—that there is no ground, whether this lady be loyal or disloyal, of relieving her case from the impartial and public examination of a court where there are two sides to contest before a tribunal of facts of the case—the best method that human ingenuity has yet discovered of getting at the truth, though all methods sometimes fail. It being imputed to this lady that she does not fall within the class of persons who are entitled to relief as the law now stands—how long it may stand so (which depends upon the will of the American people which they will express in November) is another question—but as the law now stands the test of getting compensations and reclamations of this character is that of having been faithful to the cause of the Union during the war. As long as that test remains it ought to be impartially applied. There ought not to be any exceptions to a rule of that character that I can think of, and so far as justice and equality go is it not pretty hard to say that because a person is in high position his case or her case shall be taken out of the tribunal to which all other people are remitted, and receive the special and ex parte consideration of the law-making power? That is the question, and the Senate can answer it on this bill whichever way they think it ought to be answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand there is no question about the fact that the property was taken and used by the troops of the United States.

Mr. KEY. None at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is no dispute that the property was worth the value proposed to be paid by this bill. The only point is whether this lady was loyal.

Mr. RANSOM. There is no reason to doubt her loyalty.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I judged from inquiries put that that was the ground.

Mr. RANSOM. Her loyalty is sufficiently established.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Government has taken the property of any citizen I cannot understand why it should deny the citizen remuneration. If I were to take the property of my friend from Wisconsin, there is no higher duty devolving on me in life than to pay for that property. I can conceive of no higher obligation resting on this Government than to pay for property which it has taken for the use of the Government. I do not think this claim stands in any different light because the property happens to be the property of a lady in high social position. I therefore shall vote for the bill.

Mr. HOWE. The yeas and nays are ordered on this bill. Then the Senate will indulge me in saying a word. I shall vote for the bill, but I want to say in two or three words why. It is undisputed that the property of this lady to the amount of $1,500 has been taken and applied to the use of the United States. The question is whether we shall pay for it. My friend from Vermont says we must not make distinctions here in legislation between the high and low, between one and another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely asked if we should.

Mr. HOWE. Well, he asked the question. I do not think we should make distinctions between the high and the low; but we must and we do make distinctions between one person and another. This lady, I am told, is the widow of one who was once honored with the first magistracy of the nation. I did not help pay that honor to him myself, but he was President of the United States. There is one other lady living, the widow of a President of the United States, and Congress voted to pay her a pension of $3,000 a year, and there was no pretense that we had ever taken a dollar of her property. It was, as I understood it, purely a gratuity voted by the generosity of the nation to the widow of one who had been an illustrious President. Nothing of that sort is asked here. The widow of one who has been President has contributed $1,500 to the necessities of the nation, and the question is whether we will return that money. It is suggested that at one time she was not loyal. If she was ever disloyal, I take it it was only in opinion. I assume in the absence of any testimony to the contrary that she never bore arms against the Government of the United States, and I do not care to scrutinize or criticise or inquire into her opinions or sentiments during that most disastrous collision between the different portions of the people of the United States. If there was before the Senate proof of such flagrant hostility as ruled her out of the regard of the people of the United States, I would take that into consideration. In the absence of any proof, I am not disposed myself to start an inquisition into what might have been her opinions at that time. It is enough for me to know that she was once the cherished wife of a President of the United States, that she is now the widow of that man, that we have had fifteen hundred dollars' worth of her property; and it is too small a sum, I think, for us to higgle about.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to state that the question of the loyalty of Mrs. Polk was very carefully and fully investigated by the Committee on Claims, as we do investigate it in the case of every claim in which it is proper to investigate it, and the committee unanimously were entirely satisfied that the question of her loyalty was completely established. The committee had no doubt whatever in regard to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted—yeas 37, nays 2; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, and Spencer—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell and Edmunds—2.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, McDonald, Merrimon, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright—32.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Oliver H. Irons, late sergeant, Company D, Twenty-third Michigan Volunteers; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of the expenditure for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 699) to confirm the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi;

A bill (S. No. 736) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank;

A bill (S. No. 840) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan;

A bill (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia;

A bill (S. No. 951) removing the political disabilities of Stephen D. Lee, of the State of Mississippi, and others;

A bill (H. R. No. 310) granting a pension to William H. Harrison;

A bill (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer;

A bill (H. R. No. 4108) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;"

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) to defray the expenses of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia.

EDUCATIONAL REPORT.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent, without previous notice, to introduce a bill to provide for printing additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education, and ask for its present consideration.

Mr. KERNAN. I must object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I hope the Senator from New York will not object. It is to provide for printing extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education. Every person wants it.

Mr. KERNAN. I want to pass a bill, but if I shall not lose my place I shall not object.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 1047) to provide for printing additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education. It provides that 20,000 additional copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Education for 1875 be printed in addition to the copies already ordered, 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 15,000 copies for the use of the House, and that the reports pass through the mails free of postage, subject only to the restrictions at present applied to the reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture; and $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the execution of the work.

Mr. CONKLING. I want to inquire, retaining my right to object, how much it will cost to print 20,000 copies of this book?

Mr. PATTERSON. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. CONKLING. Will that cover binding?

Mr. PATTERSON. It will cover all. There is no use ordering printing unless we make an appropriation to pay for it. Everybody wants this, and now there is a chance to get it.

Mr. DAVIS. My recollection is that a few weeks ago, under a resolution offered by myself, there was an additional number of the report of the Commissioner of Education order to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON. That was for the use of the Commissioner, but there are none provided for the use of the Senate and the House.

Mr. DAVIS. My recollection is not the same as that of the Senator from South Carolina, because my object was to get some for distribution. I so stated at the time and I think you will find now that on one of the appropriation bills probably, but if not on that on some other bill, there was a certain number ordered. It occurs to me that it was five thousand to be divided in proper proportions between the Senate and the House. I am certain, however, that there was a number order for distribution; I think this unnecessary.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from West Virginia is correct so far as regards the number of copies ordered for the use of the Commissioner of Education, but those for the use of the Senate and House were stricken out.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does this not go to the Committee on Printing under the rules?

Mr. CONKLING. It does under one objection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. I had unanimous consent to introduce the bill. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. But it can only be read once on one day except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KERNAN. It leads to debate. I desire to ask the Senate to take up a House bill which is proper to be acted on to relieve some parties.

Mr. PATTERSON. What becomes of my bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over.

HEIRS OF WILLIAM STEVENS.

Mr. KERNAN. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 719) for the relief of the heirs of William Stevens. I have the carefully prepared report of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHRISTIANCY,] who will state, if any gentleman desires to make any objection, the facts of the case.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The preamble recites that William Stevens made settlement and pre-emption on a certain tract of land, and prior to its survey was driven off by Indians; returned, and died on the land before perfecting his claim thereto under the then existing laws. The bill therefore authorizes his heirs to enter at the United States land office at Sioux Falls, Dakota Territory, the southeast quarter of section No. 16, in township No. 101, in range 49, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre therefor.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to say that the bill had the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Private Land Claims, of whom the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is one. That is sufficient I hope.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT RECORDER OF DEEDS.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 752.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 752) authorizing the recorder of the District of Columbia to appoint an assistant, with certain powers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the District of Columbia propose to amend the bill by striking out in line 13 the words:

The recorder shall be allowed by the District for all record-books, dockets, and furniture necessary for his office.

And inserting:

Provided, That no additional expense shall be incurred by the District for said deputy, and no other fees shall be allowed than are now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER PHILLIPS.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 828.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 828) for the relief of Peter Phillips was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Peter Phillips, of Illinois, the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry from October 14, 1863, to March 9, 1874, less the pay of a sergeant of cavalry, which was received by him for that time.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the bill by striking out "1874" and inserting "1864."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3012) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator where that railroad starts from and what the intention of it is? In other words, to explain the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. It is a railroad that is now being rapidly brought to completion, being built to run from some point in Southern Maryland to the city of Washington. They desire to form a connection with both the Baltimore and Potomac and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroads at the Anacostia River, about a mile from the Capitol. It is something that everybody wants. There can be no objection to it. It brings no additional track within the city.

Mr. MORRILL. Before we allow any other railroad to come in here, I think we ought to act upon both the bills that have already been introduced by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds requiring the depots that are now occupied by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to be removed from their present places. If I thought this was a suitable time to take up the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad bill which repeals the authority they now have to go across the public grounds and Sixth street, I would do it; but I hardly think we can consider any railroad bill at this late hour of the session.

Mr. SPENCER. This is not really a railroad bill; it is a road ready to be brought in.

Mr. LOGAN. It will take up time. Let us go on with bills to which there will be no objection. I ask leave to take up a private bill.

Mr. SPENCER. This does not go through any public reservation.

Mr. LOGAN. I have had no opportunity to call up bills from the Military Committee.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I shall object to the bill of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. LOGAN. Objection being made to that, I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 1237.

BENJAMIN F. REYNOLDS.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Benjamin F. Reynolds, late captain of Company K, Forty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, of a sum equal to the pay and emoluments of a captain of infantry, from the 1st day of March, 1864, to the 22d day of May, 1864.

The Committee on Military Affairs propose to amend the bill by striking out in line 9 the word "1st" and inserting "29th," and striking out "March" and inserting "April."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SARAH F. ALBERTSON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of House bill No. 1503 for the relief of Sarah F. Albertson, of Booneville, Missouri. I will make an explanation. She is the widow of a member of Congress from Indiana. There are $160 due to him for his mileage undrawn, as shown by the record of the House of Representatives, and this bill simply allows her that amount.

There being no objection the bill (H. R. No. 1503) for the relief of Sarah F. Albertson, of Booneville, Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Sarah F. Albertson, of Booneville, Missouri, the widow of Nathaniel Albertson, deceased, the sum of $160, in full compensation of mileage due him as a member of the Thirty-first Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. GALL.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to take up House bill No. 262.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment, to strike out after the word "sixty-three," in line 13, the following words:

And the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of infantry from February 20, 1864, to January 25, 1865.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of War and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be authorized and directed to recognize the military services of John W. Gall, deceased, late of the One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, as an officer of said regiment; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the legal representatives of the said John W. Gall, deceased, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from March 9, 1863, to November 1, 1863, deducting therefrom the amount of pay received by the said John W. Gall, deceased, as a private soldier or non-commissioned officer of said regiment for the period above named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. LLOYD.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 784.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 784) for the relief of Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims reported the bill, with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out in line 6, after the word "of," "$9,753.32," and in lieu thereof to insert "$6,713.33;" and in the same line, after the word "cents," to strike out "with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid;" and in line 13, after the word "July," to strike out "eleventh" and insert "thirteenth;" and in line 14, after the word "to," strike out the words "June 5" and insert "April 27;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay to Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased, the sum of $6,713.33 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be in full for the personal services of the said William A. Lloyd, rendered in pursuance of a contract made with Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, and extending from July 13, 1861, to April 27, 1865.

Mr. DAVIS. I notice that the bill calls for interest, which is very unusual. That may be stricken out in the amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is stricken out by the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I supposed so. I should be glad to hear the bill explained.

Mr. SPENCER. It is all right.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that.

Mr. SPENCER. It comes from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I can explain it in a few words. The intestate, Lloyd, in 1861 entered into a contract with President Lincoln by which he agreed to go into the insurgent States, obtain plans of fortifications and such other information as might be useful to the Federal Government, and report the same from time to time to the President. In consideration of these services the President agreed to pay him the sum of $200 per month. Lloyd went into the Confederate States and remained there, performing his part of the agreement, until the close of hostilities. When he returned to Washington President Lincoln was dead; the matter was referred to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War finally paid him the amount of his disbursements. Lloyd had been arrested as a spy, I think in Charleston, thrown into prison, and was put to considerable expense in defending himself. The matter, as I stated, was referred to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War paid his expenses, but did not pay the compensation that the President agreed he should receive. The Committee on Claims after a careful consideration of the matter find that the intestate did enter into this contract with President Lincoln, that he did perform his part of the contract faithfully, that he was paid certain amounts of disbursements; but after examining the contract it appeared that there was no provision in it that he should be paid his expenses. So the committee recommended that he be paid $200 a month only; they deducted the amount already paid from the total amount, reducing the amount now due to him, as the committee find, to about $6,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Was the report unanimous or was there a division in the committee?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The report was unanimous.

Mr. DAVIS. Then probably it is not the case I have in my mind. I have a case in my mind that was before the Committee on Claims when I was a member, that the committeee was divided upon. I thought probably this was the same case.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The report in this case was made by the chairman and was unanimous.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECORDING OF CONVEYANCES.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3740) providing for the recording of deeds, mortgages, and other conveyances affecting real estate in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONKLING. While the Secretary is looking for that bill I beg to say that there ought to be a short executive session, which when the bill is passed I will endeavor to get the Senate to order.

Mr. DAVIS. It is evident there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me.

Mr. DAVIS. This is an important bill. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. SPENCER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. DAVIS. Wait until I am done. I do not know anything of this bill or of any of the other bills that Senators wish to pass who call them up. I do not call in question the correctness of any of them, but it is not right for us to proceed to do business without a quorum present. I think we had better take a recess or have an executive session, one of the two.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope this bill will be read, and I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I object to that bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. This is an important bill, and the most unobjectionable that has been brought up here for some time.

Mr. SPENCER. It is entirely unobjectionable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will not be taken up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. CONKLING. Inasmuch as there are hundreds of bills here, I can never get an executive session unless I move it. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Nebraska, but after he has proceeded I hope I shall be allowed to submit a motion for an executive session without seeming to interfere with him.

ALBERT TOWLE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move to take up a little bill reported by the Senator from New Jersey, Senate bill No. 705.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 705) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $365 to reimburse Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska, for revenue-stamps stolen from his office at that place on the night of October 25, 1869.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to know where this bill comes from.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. From the Committee on Finance. I examined it carefully and there is a written report which has been printed.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

JOHN AMMAHAIE, OR AMMAHE.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1075) directing the Second Auditor to settle the pay and bounty account of John Ammahaie, or Ammahe.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Second Auditor of the Treasury to settle the claim for pay and bounty of John Ammahe, or Ammahaie, of Companies E and H of the Forty-third New York Volunteers, and to issue a certificate for such amount as appears to be due, any charge of desertion upon any rolls of the regiment to the contrary notwithstanding.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Oliver H. Irons, late sergeant Company D, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteers, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. I object to the consideration of bills coming immediately from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

JOHN GOWERS.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to so correct the record of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, as to remove the charge of desertion now standing against his name.

Mr. SPENCER. There is a printed report upon which the bill passed the House. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BANNING, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, March 17:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration House bill No. 1581, submit the following report:

John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers, enlisted at Auburn, New York, and served faithfully until he was captured, with his regiment, at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, September 14, 1862. He, with others, seems to have held the idea that, being paroled, they had a right to go to their homes and remain until exchanged. Gowers went to his home, at Montezuma, New York, and remained there until he was arrested. It appears from the evidence that his wife was very ill, being near her confinement; that he did not attempt to go beyond his home, and returned willingly to his regiment; was there tried by an illegal court, and sentenced to pay expense of arrest, to wear what was called by the sentence of the court the wooden overcoat, and to be confined in the guard-house. He served out his sentence, and afterward did good service until he was captured, in 1864, and died at Andersonville prison. The evidence also shows that his wife was confined, and gave birth to a child, two days after his arrest. The committee think the case one of peculiar hardship, and one in which great injustice has been done to the heirs of the soldier; who did good service and had no intention of deserting, and would, therefore, recommend that the bill be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. BARRETT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 648) for the relief of Andrew J. Barrett.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Andrew J. Barrett $154, in payment of draft No. 3609 on the United States depository at Richmond, Virginia, drawn by Peter A. Keller, the disbursing agent, upon W. M. Harrison, the officer in charge of the United States depository at that place, in favor of Barrett, the draft bearing date January 28, 1861, and being for the first payment for taking the eighth census.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO SOUTHERN SOLDIERS IN FEDERAL SERVICE.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. WINDOM. The military bill will be here very soon.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the motion, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 36) amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have, since its termination, enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the law prohibiting the payment of any money on account of pensions to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person who in any manner engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States, shall not be construed to apply to such persons as afterward voluntarily enlisted in the Army of the United States, and who, while in such service, incurred disability from a wound or injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. DAVIS. I should be glad if the Senator who has charge of the bill will explain it.

Mr. INGALLS. There are certain classes of men who would be entitled to pensions under the general laws, but who are barred by the construction of the statute which prohibits the payment of any pensions to any men or the survivors of them who ever served in the rebel army. Some men were forced or conscripted into the service of the Confederate States. There were some who enlisted in that service and subsequently repented. There are quite a number of instances where those men after having left the confederate service voluntarily enlisted in the Union Army and there received disabilities from wounds or disease for which they are unable to be pensioned in consequence of the construction placed upon the law by the Commissioner of Pensions. This is an equitable measure, and upon the mere statement I think will commend itself to the consideration of every lover of his country.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Although this bill is reported from the Committee on Pensions, I observe that it is a Senate bill and cannot possibly pass the House at this session of Congress. It is a matter of such general importance in its character that it seems to me it should be postponed until the next session, so that the matter may be fairly and properly considered. I do not know that I should have any objection to the bill, but we are on the eve of adjournment, within an hour perhaps the session of Congress will close, and there is no possibility whatever of the bill becoming a law now. Therefore I think it would be advisable to permit this matter to go over until the next session.

Mr. INGALLS. If the bill is right in principle, now is the best time to pass it. It is true it cannot pass the House at this session, but if it passes the Senate it will be one step further in its stage toward final accomplishment. I therefore hope the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw his objection and allow us to relieve the Calendar and at the same time to do a perfectly just act.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill may be right in principle, but we have not an opportunity at this time of considering it. For myself, I am not prepared to say whether I deem it right or not. As I remarked, we are just on the eve of an adjournment, perhaps within an hour the Senate will adjourn, and I do not think that this body is in a condition to act upon the bill. I therefore move to postpone the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Will not one objection prevent action?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to postpone the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves to postpone the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

REPAYMENT OF TONNAGE TAX.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 994, to which I think there will be no objection. If there is I will not press it. While the Secretary is looking for it I will state what it is. It is a bill to allow the Secretary of the proper Department, the Treasury, to refund to a Norwegian vessel certain moneys of which, in violation of treaty stipulations, she was divested as tonnage dues. Here is in my hand a report made by my colleague from the Committee on Finance, to whom the bill was referred. The bill was also before the Committee on Foreign Relations. There is also a letter from the Secretary of State, I believe one from the Attorney-General, recommending that this be done, the act being an inadvertence, one of injustice, and the report, which is very brief, stating, if Senators care to hear it, all there is in regard to the matter. I think nobody will object to it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I can say in addition that I examined the bill and the statutes and read the communications, and I am satisfied the bill is right.

Mr. CONKLING. I think there is no objection to it on any hand.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 944) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so far as to allow repayment by the Secretary of the Treasury of the tonnage tax where it has been exacted in contravention of treaty provisions.

The bill was reported from the Committee of Finance with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "twelve," to strike out "hundred," so as to read "section three thousand twelve and a half of said statute."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. To guard against any possible danger in this bill, unless the Senator from New Jersey or some other Senator acquainted with it sees objection to it, I move to amend it by adding at its conclusion these words:

Provided, That the said payment took place during five years preceding the passage of this act or shall hereafter occur.

My motive for that merely is to close the door against the possibility of its going back to an indefinite past and under it stale claims being revived for moneys that may have been paid long ago.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me the amendment is a very proper one; but I think it would be better to say three years than five.

Mr. CONKLING. These dues were paid and received between July 1871 and 1873. It had better be six years than five, that being a familiar date in the statute of limitation, and it will cover this case. Let the Secretary report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That said payment took place during six years preceding the passage of this act or shall hereafter occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

SUPPRESSION OF INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to present a conference report on the bill for suppressing Indian hostilities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments, and agree to the bill amended as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, empowered to increase the number of enlisted men to one hundred for each company of such regiments of cavalry as may be employed in existing Indian hostilities and as in his opinion may require the same: Provided, That not more than twenty-five hundred enlisted men shall thus be added at any one time to the 25,000 authorized by the act approved July 24, 1876, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877: And provided further, That on the cessation of existing Indian hostilities the number of enlisted men in the Army shall be reduced to the number now established by law: And provided, That the reduction shall not be made from the cavalry force of the Army; and the following sums are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for recruiting and maintaining the same: Recruiting twenty-five hundred cavalrymen, $50,000; pay per annum, $390,000; subsistence, $200,400; clothing, $206,000; regular supplies, $216,000; purchase of horses, $337,500; transportation, (wagons, &c.,) $84,800; transportation by rail, &c., $150,000; in all, $1,634,700."

Amend the title so as to read as follows:

"An act to increase the calvary force of the United States to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities."

And the House agree to the same.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
P. W. HITCHCOCK,
S. B. MAXEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. B. BANNING,
R. Q. MILLS,
J. M. THORNBURGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. WINDOM. I now move to take up the adjournment resolution from the table.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday next, August 14, 1876, at four o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend the resolution by fixing the time of adjournment at twenty minutes past seven o'clock to-day.

Several SENATORS. Seven o'clock.

Other SENATORS. Seven and a half.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill just passed has to be enrolled and signed, and there are other bills.

Mr. WINDOM. I will name half past seven to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves an amendment changing the time to seven and a half o'clock. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the time fixed and insert:

Tuesday, the 15th instant, at half past seven o'clock, p. m.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President and inform him that unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress are ready to close their session by an adjournment without day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WINDOM and Mr. MCCREERY were appointed.

Mr. WINDOM, (at six o'clock and forty-eight minutes p. m.) Now, I move a recess until ten minutes past seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until ten minutes after seven o'clock, at which time it was again called to order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 800) relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 4106) to increase the cavalry force of the United States to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) amending the eighth section of an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

R. J. HENDERSON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report. The bill is not taken up yet, is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet taken up. The question is on proceeding to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope there will be no objection to it. It is a House bill and has been considered by the Committee on Claims very thoroughly, and unanimously reported back to the Senate. The report is not very long. If the Senator desires to hear the report it can be read.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Only a few thousand dollars.

Mr. CONKLING. For what?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state this fact, that the claimant has only lately removed to Missouri, and there can be no question as to his loyalty. He was a citizen of Iowa all through the war.

Mr. MORRILL. There is Senate bill No. 840 which I should like to get up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us try the bill of the Senator from Missouri first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Missouri.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 17.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is less than half a quorum. I am sure my friend will give it up. He can see that it is less than half a quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask the Senate to consider House bill No. 2952.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course I cannot consent for any other business to be done without a quorum here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The lack of a quorum has not been disclosed.

Mr. COCKRELL. If my bill cannot be taken up on account of the lack of a quorum, I do not think anything else should be done.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope my friend will not interfere with me. I did not interfere with him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mine is a very just bill.

Mr. MCDONALD. I will ask the Senate to take up——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two such cases pending, one from Missouri and one from New Jersey.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mine is up first. I call for the yeas and nays, in order to test the presence of a quorum in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say there was no quorum. I only suggested to my friend that the vote on taking up the bill could not be carried because there was less than half a quorum in favor of taking it up.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was not a full vote. There may have been only 3 against it while there were 17 for it. Under the circumstances if any bill is to be considered the bill I move ought to be considered. I do not know the gentleman named in the bill. He has moved from Iowa down to Missouri. He is represented as being one of the best citizens of Iowa, and I am told they have very good citizens there.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator speaks correctly about our State, and about this man in particular. He is a very excellent young man, and he was a soldier in the Army on the Federal side.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is my bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks the consideration of the bill which he has named.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have a division taken on my bill. I should like to see how many there are against it. There were 17 for it and I should like to have another division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again on a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought not to pass at this time of night.

The question being again put, there were on a division ayes 23.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are dividing, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No Senator rises in the negative.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no quorum voting, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays. We can do nothing without the yeas and nays.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 620) to remove the political disabilities of James Argyle Smith, of Mississippi.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved, That a committee of three members of the House of Representatives be appointed to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn, if he has no further communication to make.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution for the final adjournment of the present session of Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 719) for the relief of the heirs of William Stevens; and

A bill (S. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee.

R. J. HENDERSON.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to take up the bill for the relief of the collector of the fourth district of Georgia.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a question now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on proceeding to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Morrill, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, West, and Windom—36.

NAYS—0.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conover, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Ingalls, Johnston, Kernan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—35.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, of Newton County, Missouri. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to R. J. Henderson $7,253.90, in full compensation for all balances due Henderson growing out of a contract made in 1865 with Captain William Mills, post-quartermaster at Nashville, Tennessee, at the time, to cut and deliver three thousand cords of wood at the Cumberland River for the use of the Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether the bill would be in a a better situation if it passes now and is enrolled than it would be on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. It would be a great deal better.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it explained. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that the Secretary could read the report in the few minutes left of the session.

Mr. WEST. Commence it, any way.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will ask that a copy of the report be furnished to the Senator from Vermont so that he can read it in vacation, and the bill will be ready to be acted upon next session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had appointed Mr. R. L. GIBSON of Louisiana, Mr. R. P. BLAND of Missouri, and Mr. GEORGE WILLARD of Michigan, members of the commission on the part of the House to inquire into the change in the relative value of gold and silver and the causes thereof, the policy of restoring the double standard, and of continuing greenbacks concurrently with the metallic standards.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 788) for the relief of Robert N. Eddy;

An act (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named;

An act (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia;

An act (S. No. 699) to confirm the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi;

An act (S. No. 840) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan;

An act (S. No. 736) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank;

An act (S. No. 951) removing the political disabilities of Stephen D. Lee, of the State of Mississippi, and others; and

An act (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of expenditure for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. MCCREERY. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this body are due to Hon. T. W. FERRY for the dignity, justice, and impartiality with which he has presided over the deliberations of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had appointed Mr. WILLIAM A. PIPER of California, Mr. EDWIN R. MEADE of New York, and Mr. JAMES WILSON of Iowa members on the part of the House on the joint select committee of the two Houses to investigate the immigration of Chinese to this country.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives having proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States, to reconsider the bill entitled "A bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri tribes of Indians, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska," returned to the Senate by the President of the United States with his objections and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives with the message of the President returning the bill, it was Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINDOM. The committee appointed to wait upon the President and inform him that unless he has further communication to make the Senate is ready to adjourn without day, have performed that duty, and report that the President said he had no further communication to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before declaring the order of adjournment, permit me, Senators, to express my obligations for the trust confided and for the courtesy extended to me throughout eight months and over arduous session now drawing to a close.

For your generous support through an impeachment trial and during the first regular session's experience as your presiding officer, accept my hearty thanks.

This session is substantially closed; while associated with other historical interests, it will especially be notable as embracing the Union of two centuries in the life of the Republic. National permanence is no guarantee against personal change.

We are about to part, not without the suggestive reflection that in the first month of the new century and next to this in which we separate, our number was broken by the death of one whose short senatorial career had won the attachment of many and the respect of all, and by the departure of another whose longer career had qualified him for the merited place of executive adviser which he now honors.

Senators, in returning to your several States to greet their approval of your distinguished services, may Heaven's kindly care attend and return you all with added strength to renew your labors next December.

To the officers of the Senate, whose valued aid has enabled me to hold your confidence, I tender sincere acknowledgments.

Finally, wishing you all a safe return to your respective homes, I now pronounce the first regular session of the Senate of the Forty-fourth Congress adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 15, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

JOURNAL OF YESTERDAY.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the reading of the Journal. I understand it is not ready, and of course no blame can be attached to the clerks on that account; for it was a matter of mental and physical impossibility to have the Journal of yesterday's protracted session prepared in time for the session of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that owing to the length of the session of yesterday and the time at which the House adjourned it was impossible to have the Journal prepared.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to add that there were but few subjects of legislation during yesterday's session, so that the dispensing with the reading of the Journal becomes a matter of less importance.

There was no objection, and the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to introduce three or four matters that require prompt attention, to which I think there will be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had rejected the joint resolution (H. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; two-thirds of the Senate not agreeing to pass the same.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President of the United States to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

EXPENSES OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876, with amendments by the Senate, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments.

I do not propose to make a statement now in regard to the disagreement upon this bill between the House and the Senate, because I think, or at least I hope, that it may be made satisfactory both to the House and to the Senate. I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and upon that I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. RANDALL'S motion was agreed to, and the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. In connection with this subject, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some statements in regard to the appropriations made for the District of Columbia during the year 1875–'76, and also for the current year.

There was no objection.

The statements are as follows:

District of Columbia appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30 1875.

Legislative act of June 20, 1874:

For salaries of governor, members of board of public works, members of board of health, president and members of council, $27,000.

Sundry civil act of June 23, 1874:

To be expended by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, $1,300,000—

First. Payment of interest on the funded debt, &c., due July 1, 1874;

Secondly. Payment of officers, employés, &c., of the District;

Thirdly. For any indebtedness for which the securities of the District are pledged and the remainder for the current expenses of the District: Provided further, That $75,000 be retained from payment to contractors to secure payment to workingmen;

For Select Committee to Investigate the Affairs of the District of Columbia, $10,000;

For the payment of teachers in the public schools, $97,740 50, to be re-imbursed by a special tax levied;

Reform School, $31,772.29;

Site for a new engine-house, $18,000; and

Anacostia bridge, $146,000.

Total, $1,631,312.79.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1876.

For repairs and preservation of the court-house building in the city of Washington, and for tiling the basement floors of the same, $3,000: Provided, That hereafter the building shall be under the supervision and control of the Attorney-General.

For completion of the jail in the District of Columbia, in accordance with the plans and specifications therefor, $140,057.93.

For fencing and inclosures around said jail, $9,900.

For heating apparatus, $29,900, by advertisement, to the lowest responsible bidder: Provided, That it does not interfere with existing contracts.

For kitchen utensils, wash-room apparatus, and driving-engine, $5,691.

To pay on behalf of the United States, as a portion of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, to be expended by the commissioners of said District, $1,060,000, only to be drawn as needed for immediate use; and $300,000 of this sum shall be available from the passage of this act; no salaries to be changed from the standard fixed under act of June 20, 1874.

To pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds issued under the act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," $185,000; and the salary of the commissioner of the sinking-fund, acting as treasurer thereof, shall be $1,000 per annum.

To defray the expenses of conducting the sanitary service of the District of Columbia, $26,117.50: Provided, That the commissioners of the District shall pay concurrently for such service to the board of health a like amount out of the treasury of the District of Columbia, which they are hereby authorized and required to do.

For the payment of the salaries of the inspector of gas and meters, and assistant inspector, for the District of Columbia, $3,000.

REFORM SCHOOL OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

For the superintendent, $1,500; two assistant superintendents, at $750 each; matron, $600; two teachers, at $600 each; for medicines and physician's fees, $500: gardener, $720; superintendent of workshops, $600; laborer, $144; seamstress, laundress, and servants, $540; and for fuel, clothing, and incidentals, $2,696; making, in all, the sum of $10,000.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

For salaries and other necessary expenses of the Metropolitan police for the District of Columbia, $305,270: Provided, That a further sum amounting to $102,635 shall concurrently be paid to defray the expenses of the said Metropolitan police force out of the treasury of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the duties devolved and the authority conferred upon the board of Metropolitan police by law for police purposes in said district shall extend to and include all public squares or places; and said board are hereby authorized and required to make appropriate rules and regulations in relation thereto.

Interest on 3.65 bonds due February 1, 1875, under act of February 1, 1875, $182,500.

Fire department District of Columbia, $25,000. (See legislative act of March 3, 1875.)

The proportionate appropriations for District government by present Congress foot up as follows:

To be advanced for Pennsylvania avenue pavement, (about $170,000 being direct appropriation,) estimated by computation	$260,000
(This is the cost aside of assessments on private property, which will be nearly $60,000 more.)
Advanced for August interest on 3 65 bonds, about	260,000
Appropriated for Metropolitan police	150,000
Appropriated for fire-department	25,000
Appropriated ($109,500) for charities, &c	90,000
Appropriated ($32,340) for board of health	17,000
Appropriated for Aqueduct	18,000
Appropriated for (under Insane Asylum) one-half of support of 259 indigent insane of District of Columbia, at $4.25 per week	28,620
Appropriated for parks for public use, salaries, and incidentals
Appropriated for transportation and support of convicts	8,000
Appropriated for warden of jail, judges of courts, inspector of gas	24,000
Total	880,620

JOINT COMMITTEE ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named. I desire that the House shall pass this Senate bill just as it is. And I may state that I have a resolution to offer to avoid a difficulty on the same subject as regards the House.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the disbursing officer of the Senate shall advance such parts of the sum provided for the expenses of the Joint Special Committee on Chinese Immigration and ordered to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate as the chairman of said committee shall in writing direct for the purposes aforesaid. And the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, as soon as may be, make a detailed statement of the expenditures thereof, with proper vouchers, which, when so made, shall be received by said disbursing officer and returned with his accounts to the proper accounting officer of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill only applies to the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate for this purpose. It seems to me an unnecessary complication to pass another bill on the same subject to pay the expenses of the members of the committee on the part of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am to offer a resolution directing a payment for this purpose from the contingent fund of the House in accordance with our practice. Under the practice of the Senate the officer in charge of the contingent fund there cannot, without passing an act authorizing him, advance the money, $3,500, necessary to enable the Senate portion of the joint committee to go to California.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does seem to me that the rule ought to be the same as to the disbursement of this fund in regard to both Houses. It is a very simple matter, I admit, but I think it should be arranged in the same way for both Houses.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will state to him that in the Senate a law is required for advancing any portion of the contingent fund of the Senate for such a purpose as this.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be again reported. It seems to me that a slight amendment of this bill would answer the purpose of the gentleman from Pennsylvania much better than the passage of a resolution.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania can see that the expenditure of the money appropriated to defray the expenses of this committee on the part of the House ought to be made by law, and not by a simple resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; we have already provided for its payment out of the contingent fund of the House, and $3,500 has been added to that contingent fund for the purpose of paying it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate certainly can expend their own contingent fund.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say to the gentleman that this bill came from the chairman of this committee on the part of the Senate, and he says that there is no way in which they can get the money except by the passage of a law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then this is a very exceptional case, for I never heard of any difficulty of the Senate controlling its own contingent fund before. I think this is an appropriation of money rather than an advance.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill itself states that this money is to come out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate has never before sent a bill here to permit them to expend their contingent fund. I shall not object, but I think it is without precedent.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not advised whether there has or has not been one sent, but I do not suppose that any Senator would state that it was proper and send a bill to the House for this purpose unless he was satisfied that the difficulty existed.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund to the chairman on the part of the House when appointed of the Joint Select Committee to Investigate Chinese Immigration the sum of $3,500, and the receipt of the said chairman shall be a proper voucher for the Clerk in the settlement of his accounts with the Treasury Department.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HAWAIIAN TREATY—ALLEGED CORRUPTION.

Mr. MORRISON. Some time ago the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed to make investigation into certain newspaper allegations as to the use of money to secure the passage of the bill to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty. The committee summoned and took the testimony of all persons who had given currency to the allegations and whose testimony was entitled to any credence. The committee is not present to make a formal report; in fact there is nothing to report on. There is nothing in the evidence to justify any allegation of the kind made, and I therefore move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

There was no objection, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

PAY OF CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LORD. On behalf of the clerks of committees I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask its adoption.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the respective Houses the usual per diem allowance to the clerks of committees not having a yearly salary for the period of thirty days from the time of the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no such usage, but I suppose the object of the gentleman is to have the resolution referred.

Mr. LORD. No, sir; I ask that it be adopted at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a matter that should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. LORD. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee of Accounts, and that they be instructed to report as soon as practicable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LORD's motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT ROBERT N. EDDY.

Mr. LORD. I ask that the House pass the bill (S. No. 788) for the relief of Lieutenant Robert N. Eddy. I will state that he received a lieutenant's commission, which he lost, and is entitled to two years' pay as a lieutenant, and I ask for the passage of the bill now because he is very sick. I ask the Clerk to read the report, which is very brief.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have no objection to this bill after a measure of great public moment shall have been disposed of; I refer to the bill pending between the two Houses in regard to the increase of the military force of the Government. If the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is present, I hope that that bill will be taken up and the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to object to this bill for the present only.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

INCREASE OF FORCE FOR SUPPRESSION OF INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities, with the Senate amendments thereto, for the purpose of moving non-concurrence in the amendments and requesting a committee of conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the amendments be read.

The Clerk read the amendments, the first of which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That the President be, and he is hereby, empowered to increase the number of enlisted men to one hundred for each company of such regiments of cavalry as in his opinion may require the same; Provided, That not more than twenty-five hundred enlisted men shall thus be added at any one time to the 25,000 authorized by the act approved July 24, 1876, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877; and the following sums are hereby appropriated for recruiting and maintaining the same: Recruiting twenty-five hundred cavalrymen, $50,000; pay per annum, $390,000; subsistence, $200,400; clothing, $206,000; regular supplies, $216,000; purchase of horses, $337,500; transportation wagons, &c., $84,800; transportation by rail, &c., $150,000; making in all, $1,634,700.

The second was to amend the title so as to read:

An act to increase the cavalry force of the United States to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. BANNING. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I understand it, this Senate amendment calls for a smaller number of men than the bill of the House; smaller by twenty-five hundred.

Mr. BANNING. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I also understand that there is this further difference: one bill calls for volunteer soldiers, the other for temporary enlistments in the regular Army for six months.

Mr. MORRISON. Not temporary, but permanent enlistments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman if in his own experience, in view of what he and I know of the troubles between the two kinds of troops, it would not be better to have them all regular troops? Although there may be details which should be referred to a conference committee and I have no objection to the reference, it seems to me that on the whole the Senate proposition is the better one. It provides for a smaller number of troops and consolidates them in the regular service in such a way as to avoid the serious troubles we have hitherto had in connection with the two kind of armies, the regular and volunteer forces.

Mr. BANNING. I think I can answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Is not a motion to concur in order?

Mr. BANNING. I think I can explain this matter. The message of the President asking for these troops contained two propositions, the one for a volunteer force of five thousand, the other for twenty-five hundred additional to the regular Army. I suppose that at the time the message was sent here the President was not aware that Congress had already passed a bill authorizing the regular cavalry companies to be filled up to one hundred men each. In this bill the President will obtain what he asked in his second proposition, and if these troops are needed at all they are needed to go immediately against the Indians. It is doubtful if we could get twenty-five hundred regulars enlisted in six months; they would have to be recruited much faster than they have been heretofore. The Senate bill provides that these men shall be three-years men, the House bill provides that they shall be only six-months men and be immediately available for service.

I call the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the motion should be to concur; and, if that motion is voted down, then the motion to non-concur could be submitted to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment be again read; I think there is no limit as to the time for which these men are to be enlisted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand my colleage [Mr. BANNING] to say that there is a limit.

Mr. BANNING. A limit only as to the twenty-five-hundred proposition.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. It seems to me that the Senate amendments ought to be concurred in. The casualties of our Army, including expiration of term of service, amount to twenty-five hundred men per annum. There need be no provision to muster out these men at the expiration of hostilities or within less than one year. Without mustering out a single man the Army will be reduced in one year in its effective force down to the number required by law. By not providing for mustering out you decrease the expense of enlisting twenty-five hundred men, which expense is $100 per man for enlisting them and sending them to their posts. You will save to the Government $250,000 by leaving out that provision.

Then again the difference between the pay of these volunteer troops which the House bill provides for and the pay of the enlisted men only as provided for by the Senate amendment is the pay of the officers of five or six regiments of volunteers. By the Senate bill no officer is enlisted, mustered in, or paid. You have now officers, better officers than you will obtain by volunteers, men who are informed of their duties and who are already commanding the companies which are not full.

The Senate bill proposed to fill up the companies we now have, to put new men alongside of old men; and any man who has had any experience in the late war knows that that is the best way to make effective troops of new men. If in order, I desire to move that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

Mr. BANNING. I have not yielded for that purpose. I move the previous question.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Is not my motion in order as a prior motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] yields for it. The sense of the House must be taken on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BANNING. Let me say a word in answer to one proposition of the gentleman, so that members may all understand this matter. It is very doubtful whether these troops will be needed at all. We all hope that they will not be. It is General Sherman's opinion that either column of our present force is able to wipe out Sitting Bull and all the Indians now fighting against the United States. But he expressed the opinion that perhaps it would be best in abundance of caution to give these additional men; and therefore we have seen fit to do so. I do not believe they will ever be used; I hope it will never be necessary to use them. As I have already stated, the proposition of the Senate bill to increase the cavalry companies to one hundred is already the law, having been enacted by this Congress. The Army appropriation bill provides an amendment to that effect, having been adopted on motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] that the cavalry regiments may be recruited to one hundred men in each company, and be kept at that number. Therefore under the existing law the President of the United States can to-day, without further legislation by Congress, fill up the cavalry companies to one hundred men each.

If we need men for the Indian war, we need them immediately; and the way to get them immediately, the way to get them into the field to fight the Indians, is to get them in the form of volunteer companies and volunteer regiments, without waiting the slow process of filling up our Army with regular soldiers. We do not need them in that way. We have now 25,000 troops, enough to whip all the Indians; and if the cavalry regiments were filled up as now authorized by law we need have no difficulty in overcoming any Indian force that may be arrayed against the authority of the United States. If we need men, we need them in fifteen, twenty, thirty, or forty days. This Congress is ready and willing to re-enforce our Army to break up that Indian war, to protect our frontier, to defend our settlers. To do this, we propose to give quickly the five thousand men that the President asks for. In order that they may be furnished quickly, they must be furnished in the way we now propose. I hope, therefore, that the House will stand by the bill as it has already passed.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question: Does not the Senate provide for a permanent increase of twenty-five hundred in our regular Army?

Mr. BANNING. It does not do so directly; but it does provide that the men who may be now taken into the Army may be retained there. Hence it will be the harder to get men. Men will not enlist promptly when they know that they may be required to stay in the Army for a year. Either these men or old soldiers may be mustered out to reduce the force of the Army to 25,000. Hence I say the proposition in this respect also is a useless and unreasonable one. Under it we cannot expect to get troops quickly; and if we do not need them quickly, we do not need them at all.

Mr. MILLS. Besides, under our bill we shall get the best troops.

Mr. BANNING. Yes, sir; we get the best troops in that way. We can now get volunteers upon the frontier who understand the Indian character and Indian warfare far better than men who might be picked up in the cities, who know nothing whatever of the Indian character and mode of warfare, who will have everything to learn in that respect after they enter the service. I now call for a vote.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment. This is an important matter and involves the expenditure of a good deal of money.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask that the amendments of the Senate be again read.

The amendments were again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question is put on these amendments I wish to ask to what extent under existing laws the President has the power to increase the cavalry force of the Army. If the President should exercise the power already conferred upon him in that respect, what would be the aggregate increase of the cavalry? I would like also to know whether this power to increase the cavalry force would not exist even after these five thousand volunteers were added?

Mr. BANNING. I will answer the gentleman's question; and I hope to be understood. Under the law as it now exists, as we have enacted it at this session of Congress, the President has the power to increase the cavalry regiments of the United States to 12,000 men. He might increase that force 14,000 by stopping recruiting for the infantry and filling up the cavalry. We have already authorized him to make the cavalry companies one hundred strong. He can do this without any additional legislation whatever.

Mr. MILLS. And he is directed to do it under the law.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] allow me a question on this subject?

Mr. BANNING. Certainly.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Has the law on this subject been changed at this session? Has not the President heretofore had the power under the law to transfer enlisted men to whatever companies he pleased, or to send recruits to whatever regiments he desired?

Mr. BANNING. Before our legislation of this session he could not increase the force, because the number in each company was limited to seventy-eight. But we have now changed the law so that it may be done. We gave him that authority at this session of Congress. He never had it before, but he has it now under the authority of Congress.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CONGER. Before the gentleman from Ohio yields the floor, I should like to know whether the military authorities have given any expression of their wish in regard to the manner of this increase one way or the other.

Mr. BANNING. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan. The chief man of the Army, the head of the Army, General Grant sent his message saying we could do it either way. We thought it probable we could do it best for the purpose for which it is at present designed in the manner in which the House committee on Military Affairs has recommended it should be done. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. BANNING. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was non-concurred in; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I ask that there be a conference between the two Houses on the disagreeing votes on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

ROBERT N. EDDY.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I had the floor at the time the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] submitted the motion to non-concur in the Senate amendment. That matter having been disposed of, I now move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table a bill (S. No. 788) for the relief of Robert N. Eddy, in order that it may be put on its passage at this time. I need not repeat the remarks I made at the time, and will only ask the Clerk to read the Senate bill and the report accompanying it. It passed the Senate unanimously.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs that the Paymaster-General of the United States Army pay to Robert N. Eddy, late second lieutenant Company K, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment New York State Volunteer Infantry, the full pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant from the 31st day of December, 1862, to the 28th day of August, 1863, deducting therefrom all pay he may have received from the Government as first sergeant for that period.

Mr. LORD. I now ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The applicant desires difference in pay from the 31st December, 1862, to the 28th August, 1863, between the pay of a sergeant and that of a second lieutenant.

Prior to the first date Eddy was a sergeant in the regiment and company named; was appointed a second lieutenant at that time; a second lieutenant's vacancy then existed in the company. Eddy performed the duty assigned him; failed to get his commission because of the loss of the vessel upon which it was, and was prevented from being sworn in as second lieutenant until the last day named, i. e., August 28, 1863.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. LORD. I desire to say in addition to that unanimous report on the part of the Senate committee the bill was passed by the Senate unanimously, and that the young man referred to is sick, and if he is to get the money at all in payment of his just claim he needs it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to taking the bill from the Speaker's table and putting it on its passage at this time?

There was no objection.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AFFIDAVITS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report in favor of concurrence in the Senate amendment to the House bill in reference to affidavits in United States courts. It will take but a moment, and it is a matter of great importance. Concurrence in the Senate amendment is recommended unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman from New York is occupying the floor to the exclusion of other members who have an equal right to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot help it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. But the Chair ought to give the rest of us a chance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What bill is it the gentleman from New York referred to?

Mr. LORD. It is the House bill relating to affidavits, returned from the Senate with an amendment in which concurrence is recommended.

Mr. PAGE. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. YOUNG. I rise to make a privileged report, and I think I had unanimous consent. It will take but a moment. It simply requires notaries public to take affidavits.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports in the morning hour.

ENGINEER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. YOUNG. I rise for the purpose of submitting a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman has a privileged report he will submit it.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to present at this time the report of the committee appointed some time since to investigate certain charges against the engineer of the House. I was chairman of the subcommittee appointed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to conduct that investigation. In the last twenty-four hours I have been able to prepare the report. The gentlemen on that subcommittee with me are at present out of the city, and therefore I was not able to get them to sign the report.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a minority report in this case?

Mr. YOUNG. There is no minority report.

Mr. CONGER. Is this a privileged report under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] to state that it is a privileged report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CONGER. I am informed that it is a report of an investigation. I understand there is no minority report, and therefore I make no objection.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of the proceedings of the House, some remarks in regard to the common schools of the States. [See Appendix.]

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks as a part of the proceedings of the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed some remarks in the RECORD as a part of the proceedings of the House. [See Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary.

ENGINEER OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds presented by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SIR: The subcommittee to which was referred House resolution directing an inquiry as to the moral character of George C. Ellison, engineer of the House of Representatives, and also as to his fitness and professional qualifications to discharge the duties of that position beg leave respectfully to report:

That very soon after our appointment we met together as a committee and entered upon the discharge of the duties assigned us.

The first witness we caused to come before us was Hon. J. D. WHITE, of Kentucky, who offered the resolution of inquiry. We informed this gentleman that the most rigid and impartial investigation would be made of the matters referred to the committee, and requested him not only to disclose all the facts within his knowledge, but to give us the names of any and all witnesses whom he desired to have summoned.

In his own examination he testified that he had no personal knowledge whatever touching the integrity of Mr. Ellison, or of his qualifications to discharge the duties of engineer, and that all the information he had of any kind upon the subject was derived from the gossip of the Capitol and one or two paragraphs which had appeared in a Washington newspaper, reflecting upon Mr. Ellison and the influences which it was alleged were brought to bear in securing from Hon. George M. Adams, Clerk of the House of Representatives, his appointment as engineer.

At the instance of Mr. WHITE and of the committee's own motion a number of other witnesses were brought before us and gave their testimony, among whom was Captain W. W. W. Wood, Chief of the Bureau of Steam-Engineering in the Navy Department. This gentleman is evidently an educated and accomplished officer, and has long been in the employ of the Government.

In his testimony he said substantially that some time after the meeting of the present Congress he was requested by Hon. George M. Adams to examine a number of applicants for the position of engineer of the House, among whom was Mr. Ellison, and that after a rigid examination he proved himself by far the best educated engineer of any that presented themselves for examination, and that he was eminently fitted in every way to discharge efficiently the duties of the position he holds. At the request of some of the committee he went with Mr. Ellison into the engine-room and subjected him to a thorough practical examination, and upon his return before us stated that he had caused him to put the engines at work and explain each and every part of the machinery connected with them, and that the result of this last examination confirmed the opinion of Mr. Ellison's competency which he had formed from the first one, satisfying him beyond doubt that no better or more accomplished engineer could have been selected by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. G. A. Ryan, a practical engineer of high standing and long experience, also testified in the clearest and most unequivocal terms to the competency and fitness of Mr. Ellison for the position of engineer. The high standing of these witnesses in their profession and their unqualified indorsement of the engineer had great weight with the committee in arriving at a conclusion upon this branch of the investigation.

There were a number of other witnesses brought before the committee, (at the instance of Hon. J. D. WHITE and others,) and examined in reference to the moral character of Mr. Ellison; but no one of them knew of any fact reflecting in the slightest degree upon his integrity or fitness for official position, except what was derived from mere rumors, which could be traced to no reliable source, and conjectures which were wholly unfounded.

The testimony is so voluminous, and, for the most part, so trifling and irrelevant, that the committee does not deem it proper or necessary to incur the expense of printing it; they therefore recommend that it be laid upon the table.

We think it just to Mr. Ellison to say that he invited the fullest and most thorough investigation of the entire matter, and that not a single one of the witnesses who testified was summoned by him or at his instance.

Giving due weight to all the evidence in the case, the committee are of the opinion, and so report, that he is both professionally and morally fitted for the proper, faithful, and efficient discharge of all the duties of the office which he holds.

And the committee would further report that no evidence whatever was adduced before them to show that the Clerk of the House was actuated by any improper influence in appointing Mr. Ellison or any of his subordinates to office.

Respectfully submitted.

CASEY YOUNG.
Chairman Subcommittee.

Hon. W. S. HOLMAN,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. YOUNG. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. WHITE. Is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE?]

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly, if the gentleman desires to say anything on this subject.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized on a question of privilege so that I can have the floor without dispute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On what question of privilege does the gentleman desire to be recognized?

Mr. WHITE. A question relating to matters affecting my own personal integrity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot take the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] off the floor at this time for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE. Then I will confine myself to this subject and will leave the other matter to another time.

Mr. YOUNG. I am quite willing to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. He is referred to incidentally in the report, but not in any offensive sense, and I have no objection to his being heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. YOUNG. So far as I am concerned I will yield him as much time as he desires. But gentlemen all around me object to extending too long the time to be occupied on this report. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. WHITE. I had the honor, if I may call it such, of introducing the resolution which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in regard to the employé of this House who occupies the position of engineer. I do not know that it is necessary to have all the testimony taken before the committee printed. I do not know all there is in the testimony; but I know enough to know, Mr. Speaker, that the men who did testify, and whose testimony should have the most weight with this House, testified to the fact that the engineer of this House, at the time of his appointment, was utterly incompetent.

Mr. YOUNG. What witness testified to that fact?

Mr. WHITE. McGlensey, a man that was appointed assistant engineer of this House, a black-mailer, you may say; who was known to the Clerk to be a black-mailer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot allow an officer of the House to be referred to in such terms.

Mr. WHITE. I think, sir, I am stating facts.

Mr. YOUNG. There is not the slightest evidence upon all that record to sustain what the gentleman from Kentucky is now stating.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say again—and perhaps I did not say what I intended to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not desire the gentleman to repeat what he said, because he distinctly understood what the gentleman said. The Chair has stated that the gentleman was not in order, and hopes he will proceed in order. Certainly he will not be permitted by the Chair to refer in terms such as he has used to an officer of the House, particularly an officer who has no opportunity to reply. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. WHITE. I will speak in regard to myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no objection to that.

Mr. WHITE. I was called before the committee to tell what I knew in regard to the incompetency of Mr. Ellison, the engineer of this House. As I had no acquaintance with Mr. Ellison I was compelled to say I knew nothing further of the charges than I had been told, and also, what every member knew, that this Hall had been poorly ventilated up to that time. At the request of the chairman of the committee I furnished a list of witnesses whom I desired to be called. Among them was Hawkins Taylor, who said to me that he had had a conversation with the Clerk of the House, in which he told the Clerk that this man McGlensey, whose letter was published at the time I preferred charges against the engineer of the House, that this man McGlensey was a black-mailer. Subsequently it appears McGlensey was appointed the assistant engineer of this House. McGlensey was called by the chairman of the committee to give testimony in regard to the qualification of Ellison; and McGlensey testified, having been in the employ of this House in the engineer department for a number of years, that as a practical engineer, not a theoretical engineer like Mr. Wood, to whom he refers, but as a practical engineer, he could say Ellison was unfit for the position. When asked to specify and give reasons, the man was so illiterate that he could not do it; but he could say in most positive terms that he did not believe Ellison was a competent man. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] makes no secret of the matter that he recommended Ellison to the Clerk; that subsequently he went with Mr. Ellison to the engine and that Ellison displayed such total ignorance as to the difference between a high-pressure and a low-pressure engine that he went to the Clerk and withdrew his indorsement of him.

It appears that subsequent to this Mr. Ellison was examined by a competitive board, and if the questions put by that board were read before the House they would show to this House and to the country that it was a theoretical examination on scientific questions that no man could learn except out of books and which a practical engineer who had laid aside books for a number of years could not be expected to answer; such questions as a man would be expected to answer if he had been crammed. It appears from the testimony that Mr. George A. Ryan, a lobbyist, well known, and who testified to the ability of Mr. Ellison, crammed that man Ellison. He said before the committee that he had lent books and talked with him about machinery.

Now I do not desire to detain the House, but the gentleman asked me this question: What man testified that Ellison was incompetent? In the first place, I say Mr. HEWITT, of New York. He does not make any secret of saying that he believed that Ellison passed such a splendid examination before the board that he believes there was collusion between him and the examiner, Mr. Wood. I say further that McGlensey, a practical engineer, testified that Ellison was incompetent and that another employé down there, whose name has escaped me and who had been a practical engineer for years, also stated that he was incompetent, and I say further that every man upon this floor who knows how much ill health has been occasioned here by the poor ventilation of this Hall can only believe that he is an incompetent engineer. I have no more to say.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. YOUNG. I did not expect when I submitted this report to the House that it would lead to any controversy or discussion whatever. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] had examined the testimony upon which the report is based so closely as I have I am quite sure he would have urged no objection to its adoption, and he certainly would not have couched his argument in the harsh language which he has seen proper to use toward some of the parties referred to. He is totally mistaken as to the testimony of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] who is in his seat and can correct me if I do not state it truly. That gentleman testified before the committee that he had some knowledge of Mr. Ellison as an engineer while he resided in New York City, and that he had recommended him to the Clerk of the House as a proper person to fill the position of engineer; that afterward, in conversation with Mr. Ellison in reference to the different kinds of engines, he came to the conclusion that he was not so well qualified to perform the duties of an engineer as he had supposed, and that thereupon he went to the Clerk and suggested that he should have Mr. Ellison undergo a competitive examination before appointing him. He further testified that he was afterward informed that Mr. Ellison had gone before a board of competent engineers, who subjected him to a thorough examination and reported that he was entirely fitted to discharge the duties of engineer of the House of Representatives, being better qualified for the position than any other applicant for the appointment, and that when he learned these facts he concluded he was mistaken and renewed his recommendation. At the head of this board of engineers was Captain W. W. Wood, who is a gentleman of high standing so far as I have been able to learn, notwithstanding he has been denounced as a lobbyist and black-mailer by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] misunderstood me. My language was, if he was the scoundrel he was certified to be——

Mr. YOUNG. Very well. I accept the correction. But Mr. HEWITT, the witness to whom you appeal, had more confidence, it would seem, in the integrity of Captain Wood than you have, for he testified that when that gentleman had examined Mr. Ellison and pronounced him a competent engineer, he changed his own opinion upon the subject and renewed his recommendation of him to the Clerk. Now Captain Wood was himself one of the most important witnesses examined; he is a thoroughly educated engineer, standing as high, perhaps, in that profession as any man in the United States, and has for many years past been at the head of one of the most important Bureaus of the Government, that of Chief of Steam-Engineers in the Navy Department, and so far as the committee was able to judge of him by his conduct and deportment before them he evinced the qualities of a well-bred, well-educated gentleman, and presented every appearance of an honest and upright man. He testified that shortly after the opening of the present Congress he was requested by Hon. George M. Adams, the Clerk, to examine a number of persons who were applying for appointment to the position of engineer of the House of Representatives, and that accordingly he did examine Mr. Ellison and several other applicants, the result of which was that, after a close and rigid examination upon all the theory of steam-engineering, he and the other gentlemen composing the board were unanimously of the opinion that Mr. Ellison was by far the best qualified of any who presented themselves.

Mr. J. A. Ryan, another professional engineer of high attainments and much experience, and also for a long time an engineer in the United States Navy, was brought before the committee and testified that he had had many conversations with Mr. Ellison upon the subject of steam-engineering and had subjected him to many practical tests; from all of which he arrived at the conclusion that he possessed a thorough knowledge of the profession, had evidently studied it thoroughly both in theory and practice, and that he possessed the very highest qualifications for the position which he holds. But this witness does not find much favor in the eyes of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE;] for I supposed it was to him that he intended to apply the epithet of "lobbyist" and "black-mailer."

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman, I know, does not mean to misrepresent me. I referred to McGlensey as a black-mailer and to Ryan as a "lobbyist."

Mr. YOUNG. There was no testimony whatever before the committee that Mr. Ryan is anything but a gentleman and an honest man. This is the first time I ever heard it intimated that he was a lobbyist. If he is he must be a poor one, for I have never seen him in this House, or about it, except when he was in attendance upon the committee, and then he was sent for.

Mr. WHITE. I have.

Mr. YOUNG. Then if you knew him to be a "lobbyist," or anything else discreditable to him, you ought to have stated it in your own testimony before the committee. You had an opportunity to have done so. The gentleman from Kentucky says that McGlensey, one of the witnesses who testified to Mr. Ellison's incompetency, is a "black-mailer," and I think in all probability that may be true, and I also think it is true that the gentleman from Kentucky derived, directly and indirectly, most, if not all, of the information upon which his resolution was based; from this same "black-mailer," (as he calls him,) McGlensey, for it was clearly shown that most of the rumors touching the moral character and professional capacity of Mr. Ellison had their origin with him; but if his testimony is worth anything at all, I presume it is as competent to prove one fact as another, and he testified in most unequivocal terms that he had no knowledge whatever of any improper influences being brought to bear upon the Clerk to appoint Ellison to office, and that none of a questionable character secured his own appointment. I am inclined to think myself, giving expression to my own opinion, that the Clerk probably made a mistake, but doubtless an honest one, in appointing McGlensey, and performed a proper official duty when he discharged him.

I am just this moment informed by the Clerk that he discharged McGlensey soon after the developments made by his testimony before the committee, and for the reason that the statements which he made upon that occasion satisfied him that he was not a proper man to hold any official position, and that if he had known these facts before he appointed him he would not have done so. And I say that in my judgment he was amply warranted in his conclusions and in the act of discharging him by the facts which were disclosed in this investigation. If I had occupied his position, with a knowledge of these facts, he should not have held his place one single hour after they were known to me.

In reference to other witnesses, I cannot now call to mind a single one who said one word against the integrity or competency of Mr. Ellison whose testimony was not prompted by some unfriendly feeling toward him. Several of the witnesses who testified against Ellison confessed that they were applicants for his position and were disappointed in not obtaining it. Many of them were former employés in the engineer department of the House and had been discharged after Ellison's appointment. Every witness of this character testified that they had never said one word to the Clerk touching the character and competency of the engineer, and that they never made any public declaration of their opinions upon this subject until after his appointment.

I say upon my own personal responsibility, whether it is sanctioned by the other members of the committee or not, that in my judgment there was never an investigation set on foot with so little foundation to support it as this one. There are not two dozen words in all that mass of testimony which I have just laid upon the Clerk's desk that would have had a feather's weight, or ought even to have been heard in the trial of the guiltiest felon. It would not have been listened to for a single moment in any court of justice where the commonest laws and rules of evidence are observed. It is irrelevant, incompetent, trifling, and totally unreliable. I venture to say that an examination of the evidence in this case will satisfy the in veterate enemy Mr. Ellison has in this House that he has been perfectly vindicated and stands justly acquitted of every imputation of any character contained in the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

I now yield for a few moments to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. As long ago as two months prior to the assembling of this Congress, I received a note from a gentleman in Brooklyn, well known to me, asking me to exert my influence for the appointment of Mr. Ellison as chief engineer for the House of Representatives. I made no promise. Soon after the assembling of Congress Mr. Ellison came to my house with recommendations from several persons well known to me to be men of the highest respectability, and having had large practical experience of his ability they recommended him without the least reserve, unqualifiedly, as in every respect a most competent engineer. Under the influence of such recommendations I wrote a note to the Clerk of the House telling him that I had no political motive in the matter; that I was not in the habit of recommending anybody unqualifiedly for any place; but that in this case the gentlemen who had recommended Mr. Ellison to me had had practical knowledge of his capabilities, and I felt justified in recommending him unqualifiedly for the place.

Now, I should not presume to match my judgment against that of Mr. HEWITT. His scientific knowledge is far different from my experience in such matters. But I venture to say that if Mr. HEWITT will carefully examine the testimony here, the recommendations upon which I based my note to the Clerk of the House, recommending Mr. Ellison, he would be convinced that, whatever he might know about high and low pressure engines, he knew enough to perform the duties of his position successfully and that he had character enough to perform them faithfully. I believe that the charges made against him are not founded upon fact, and that he deserves the confidence and employment of the House.

Mr. WHITE. I wish the Clerk to read the twenty questions that Mr. Wood, the examiner in this case, testified he put to the candidates for this position in this competitive examination. If the Clerk can turn to them I would thank him to read them.

And while he is looking up that part of the testimony, I desire to say in addition to what I have said in regard to the testimony of McGlensey, who the chairman of this committee believes to be a black-mailer, and whom I now believe to be a black-mailer, but about whom at the time I knew nothing except his letter published in the papers—I desire to say that he is an engineer of practical experience, if his testimony is worth anything, and he testified that Ellison was not a competent engineer. I desire to say that Mr. Sherman, who was an old employé of this House, testified that Ellison was incompetent.

I do not desire to occupy the attention of this House upon this subject any further than simply to repeat what I have said, and to ask any person on this floor who knows to the contrary to state otherwise. If I have misstated anything that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has said—I have not read his testimony before the committee—I desire to have it corrected.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman be good enough to state in my presence what I said to him, for I have not read his testimony?

Mr. WHITE. As nearly as I can recollect, I stated that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] had recommended Mr. Ellison's appointment to the post he now occupies as engineer of this House; that subsequently the gentleman from New York went, in company with the engineer, to the engine and asked him such questions as he thought would exhibit the amount of information that Ellison had in regard to the difference between a high-pressure and a low-pressure engine; and that Ellison displayed such ignorance that the gentleman went to the Clerk, I might say in disgust, and withdrew his recommendation.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Now will the gentleman allow me to correct what he has said?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. After I had signed the recommendation of Mr. Ellison to the Clerk, the latter requested me to go with Mr. Ellison to the heating and ventilating apparatus in order to decide whether he understood the subject. I went with him. When we came to the engine, I asked him one or two questions; and his answers were such as to suggest a doubt in my mind whether he comprehended properly the nature of the steam-engine. But I did not arrive at the conclusion that he did not understand it. On the contrary, the circumstances only raised a doubt in my mind; and it occurred to me that the post of engineer of this House was so important that no man ought to be appointed to it without being subjected to the examination of competent experts. Thereupon I returned to the Clerk and, without withdrawing my recommendation, said to him, "You owe it to yourself and to the members of the House to make sure that this man is qualified for the position; and I recommend that he be subjected to a competitive examination." Thereupon the Clerk thanked me for the suggestion, saying that it was a good one, and that he would adopt it. Afterward I understand that Mr. Ellison was subjected to such an examination by Mr. Wood and two other engineers, and that they reported that he was by all means better qualified than any other applicant for the office.

These are the exact facts. I formed no conclusion in my own mind as to whether Mr. Ellison was qualified or not; but I say frankly to this House that I had grave doubts which led to the recommendation made by me, which was carried into effect, and in doing which it seems to me the Clerk performed his full and entire duty.

Mr. WHITE. Now, Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat I wish to put to him another question. I am much obliged to him for correcting me; for I did not intend to misrepresent him; I am glad he has called attention to the apparent misrepresentation of what he said to me.

I stated further that the gentleman from New York made no secret of his belief that the engineer had, I believe, entered into collusion with Mr. Wood or with the examining board; that by this means he had stood the best examination of any man he ever saw, or words to that effect, the gentleman from New York saying, I think, that he had never yet understood how it was done. I wish the gentleman would state what he said. Of course I will accept his statement.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly I will state the conversation. If I remember correctly, it took place in an omnibus while it was jolting along. Such conversations are apt to be rather free in their character and not very precise in the words used. I did say that, after the language used by Mr. Ellison to me when I asked him about the engine, I thought it extraordinary that he had passed, as Mr. Wood said or rather as the gentleman from Kentucky said to me, the best examination that any man had ever passed. I do not suppose that Mr. Wood ever made that statement. I do not believe that Mr. Ellison could pass the best examination that any man ever passed.

Mr. WHITE. I meant the best of those before the board.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Of those before the board. The gentleman certainly said that; and I simply said, "If that be so, then it is an extraordinary commentary upon the applicant," (or something to that effect,) because it is quite certain that either Mr. Ellison or I misunderstood the meaning of the terms "high and low pressure" and "single or double acting" as connected with an engine. But it is quite possible that one man may use a practical term in one sense and another man may use it in another. Hence I did not consider it conclusive against the qualifications of Mr. Ellison that he had used the terms "high" and "low pressure" in a sense in which I had not been in the habit of using them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] has expired.

Mr. YOUNG. I am unwilling to continue this discussion longer, and I would not do so only I desire to make a few remarks in further reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE,] who puts language in my mouth the paternity of which I utterly disclaim. I am not accustomed in public discussions upon this floor or elsewhere to use the somewhat inelegant phrases of "black-mailer," "scoundrel," &c. I did not pronounce Mr. McGlensey to be a "black-mailer." I said that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] had declared that he was one, and that in all probability the charge might be true. I did not pretend to state it upon any information of my own or to give it as my opinion, except as based upon the declaration of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. WHITE. I call for the reading of the record where the gentleman says "I think it is correct."

Mr. YOUNG. Well, perhaps I may have used that word, but it was based upon your own statement. I am willing to admit the gentleman's own testimony that McGlensey is a "black-mailer," but I admit it upon the gentleman's own responsibility, not upon mine.

Now in reference to Captain Wood. I never heard before that a committee of this House had at any time investigated him and pronounced him to be a "scoundrel." If such is the fact, that it has been developed that he is a "scoundrel," I want to know from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] how it is that a republican administration has kept him in office all this time? I do not propose to charge that a republican administration would keep any scoundrels in office, though I believe there have been some intimations to that effect coming from different quarters; but the gentleman is a competent witness upon that subject and I shall not attempt to impeach him.

If an investigation has disclosed the fact which he states, and it has been published to the world that Captain Wood is a scoundrel and has held an important and responsible position under the Government for a period of fifteen years, then certainly, as it occurs to me, somebody is to blame that he has not lost his official head long before now. So far as I was able to judge, I saw nothing in the deportment of Mr. Wood, nothing in his conduct during the whole investigation which did not speak the gentleman and an honest man. The testimony will make a volume of considerable size, and the printing of it would involve a cost greater than any public good that could result from its publication. There is nothing in the evidence of any witness whose testimony is set out in all that large record which could be relied upon to establish a single one of the charges preferred against Mr. Ellison.

I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. YOUNG moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VENTILATION OF THE HALL.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask now to be permitted to report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a resolution of much more importance than any that has been presented to the House this morning. I hope there will be no objection to its being considered now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the sum of $8,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House, to be expended under the direction of Edward Clark, architect of the Capitol, for the purpose of perfecting the system of ventilating the Hall of the House of Representatives now in progress under the direction of Professor Henry and a board of scientific officers who are acting with him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust some explanation will be made of the necessity for the adoption of this resolution by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. YOUNG. I will make the explanation demanded by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] It is simply this: Early in the session, some time during the winter when there was so much complaint about the impure atmosphere of the Hall and the serious illness of a great many members which was attributed to that cause, a resolution was introduced instructing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to institute an investigation to ascertain, if possible, the cause of the imperfect ventilation of this wing of the Capitol and report some method of improving it. This resolution was subsequently referred to a subcommittee, of which I had the honor to be named as chairman, with similar instructions. The committee, composed besides myself of the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] and the honorable gentleman from Maine [Mr. PLAISTED] immediately entered upon an examination of the architecture of the building, the probable sources of the foul air which entered the Hall, and the supposed defects in its arrangements for healthful ventilation. During our investigation of these matters we were waited upon by a large number of gentlemen coming from various sections of the country, who claimed to have much experience and to be deeply learned in the science of ventilation, and who proposed to undertake the work of perfecting our system of ventilation for considerations ranging from twenty-five to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Many of these gentlemen submitted to us in writing various plans and theories for the accomplishment of the object sought, but their ideas were so divergent, their plans so different, and their theories involving so much of profound but obscure learning, the committee was unable to determine which one should be selected and adopted. In this dilemma we deemed it wisest and safest to ask the assistance of other officers of the Government more competent to pass upon this important question than we were. We accordingly requested that eminent savant, Professor Joseph Henry, of the Smithsonian Institute, to select a board of scientific Government officers to take charge of the matter and advise the committee as to the proper method of securing the objects which they were charged to accomplish. That gentleman consented to act in the matter, as requested by the committee, and selected as members of such board Lieutenant-Colonel Casey, of the Army Engineer Corps; Professor Billings, of the Medical Department; Mr. Franc Schurmans, assistant supervising architect of the Treasury Department; and Hon. Edward Clark, architect of the Capitol. The board thus organized, with Professor Henry as its president, immediately set about the work they had been requested to and agreed to undertake.

Soon afterward the board, through its president, Professor Henry, addressed a written communication to the committee, suggesting some immediate changes in the existing means of ventilation, and in order to make these changes an appropriation of $4,000 was asked, and made by Congress out of the contingent fund of the House, under a resolution which I introduced for that purpose. These changes, so far as was necessary and practicable, were made at once, and every member of the House has been surprised and gratified at the great relief which they have afforded from the dangerous troubles to which we were before subjected.

The improvements in the ventilation of the House thus made, however, are but partial and will only serve during warm weather. In order to continue them, so as to furnish us with adequate protection against the dangers of inhaling foul and impure air during the coming winter session, an additional appropriation will be necessary. I hold in my hand a communication from Professor Henry, in which he estimates that the sum of $8,000 will be necessary to continue the work until the next session of Congress. Unless this is made the $4,000 already expended will be a total loss and absolutely thrown away. As this resolution has for its purpose the protection of the health and even life of every member and employé of this House, I trust there will be no opposition from either side to its passage. I now call the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. YOUNG moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMERICK W. HANSELL.

Mr. TARBOX. I ask unanimous consent of the House to take up for consideration at this time the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell, and to move that they be concurred in. It is for the relief of a disabled man, who suffered from injuries received in defending the late Secretary of State from the attack of an assassin. It seems to be a bill of peculiar merit. It has passed the House already, and comes back from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. PAGE. I do not object, but I should like to make the motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done at this time.

Mr. PAGE. Is the House in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has not yet begun, but that is the regular order.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Emerick W. Hansell, of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, on account of injuries received by said Emerick W. Hansell while in attendance upon the late William H. Seward, formerly Secretary of State, on the occasion of the attempted assassination of said Seward.

Also amend the title so as to read:

An act for the relief of Emerick W. Hansell.

Mr. TARBOX. Just a single word of explanation.

Mr. GARFIELD. If this is to pass without debate I will not object, but I want the morning hour.

Mr. TARBOX. If no gentleman desires an explanation, I do not wish to occupy any of the time of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say a single word. I do not object to this, but I think the amendments made by the Senate are very wise and prudent amendments. Although this is an entire gratuity, it is one of those gratuities, perhaps, which are proper for the Government to give. The original bill which passed the House, and for which the Senate has sent us a substitute, was in my judgment an exceedingly objectionable measure, and its passage through both branches of Congress would have set a precedent for which I believe there is no example in our past history. At least I am not aware of it. It is a bill granting a pension to a person entirely in private life. Our custom has been, except in the case of the Federal judiciary—unhappily the beginning of the civil-pension list in this Government—to confine pensions to those who served the Government in times of war, to the Army and Navy.

This bill passed the House. I am not aware how it passed the House. Certainly attention was not particularly called to it; and for one I am exceedingly glad that this substitute was adopted by the Senate instead of passing the original bill, which would have established a precedent that could have been referred to in the future as an argument in favor of establishing a civil-pension list in our Government; which in our republican Government it seems to me would be a most fatal mistake.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. TARBOX moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Two messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary, who informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1089) granting a pension to Thomas J. Fox, late a private of Company C, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2271) to increase the pension of Mrs. Hannah W. Sumner, widow of Major-General Edwin V. Sumner;

An act (H. R. No. 3359) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 3209) to authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to receive lands in payment of judgments to eastern band of Cherokee Indians;

An act (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 3678) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Lydia to that of Sylph;

An act (H. R. No. 1713) for the relief of Berthold Loewenthal, of Chicago, Illinois;

An act (H. R. No. 3374) for the relief of Harry E. Eastman, late lieutenant-colonel Second Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry Volunteers; and

An act (H. R. No. 3849) for the relief of James W. Harvey and James Livesey, of the firm of Harvey & Livesey, of Wisconsin.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-Second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1931) granting a pension to John J. Partillo, of Gratiot County, Michigan;

A bill (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss;

A bill (H. R. No. 2837) granting a pension to Edward F. Eddy;

A bill (H. R. No. 2844) granting a pension to Levi D. Hayward;

A bill (H. R. No. 2846) granting a pension to Lovina Adeline Bowker;

A bill (H. R. No. 2848) granting a pension to F. M. Bruner; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain of Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 1588) granting an additional pension to Jefferson Bowers, of Madison County, Illinois.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 210) granting a pension to Austin R. Mills;

A bill (S. No. 750) granting a pension to T. B. Murdock;

A bill (S. No. 792) granting a pension to Peter Harder; and

A bill (S. No. 980) granting a pension to Irena Garrett.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the executive communications now on the Speaker's table may be laid before the House.

CAPTAIN EDWARD S. MEYER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

For the reasons stated in the accompanying communications submitted to me by the Secretary of War, I have the honor to return herewith without my approval House bill No. 36, entitled "An act to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army."

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 14, 1876.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., August 4, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to return House bill 36, to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army, and beg to invite your attention to the inclosed report of the Adjutant-General of this date, stating objections to the approval of the bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

To the PRESIDENT.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
August 4, 1876.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

Edward S. Meyer served as a private in the Fourth Ohio Volunteers (three months) from May 4, 1861, to August 18, 1861. He again enlisted as private Nineteenth Ohio Volunteers, September 10, 1861; was promoted first lieutenant November 1, 1861; and resigned September 27, 1862. He was commissioned captain One hundred and seventh Ohio Volunteers November 11, 1862; was wounded at Chancellorsville, Virginia, May 2, 1863; and discharged for physical disability January

1, 1865. He was again mustered into service February 8, 1865, as major Fifth United States Veteran Volunteers, (Hancock's Corps,) and mustered out March 20, 1866. Was brevetted lieutenant-colonel, colonel, and brigadier-general of volunteers March 13, 1865.

He was appointed captain Thirty-fifth United States Infantry July 28, 1866; became unassigned August 12, 1869; assigned to Nineteenth Infantry August 5, 1870, and transferred to Ninth Cavalry January 1, 1871. Retired August 24, 1872.

July 8, 1869, Captain Meyer applied for retirement on account of wounds received at Chancellorsville May 2, 1863, by which he was incapacitated for active service. No action was then had on the request, pending action by Congress reducing the Army.

October 6, 1869, he asked to be placed on waiting orders, being unfit for duty, and no possibility of improvement without going north. He was accordingly relieved from duty and ordered home to await orders.

December 18, 1869, he called on the Secretary of War and asked to be assigned to duty.

January 4, 1870, he again applied to be assigned to duty with some regiment on the frontier, stating that his wound had healed, &c., and asking to withdraw his previous request for retirement. This was accompanied by a similar request from his father, Mr. S. Meyer, of Ohio.

July 20, 1870, he applied the third time to withdraw application for retirement and to be assigned to duty. On January 1, 1871, in accordance with his repeated requests to be assigned to duty, he was assigned to the Ninth Cavalry, serving in Texas. He joined the regiment, and on March 4, 1872, he renewed his former request to be ordered before a retiring board, stating that he found his injuries would not allow him to remain on duty on the frontier; that his disability was constantly increasing, &c. The medical director of the department approved the request, and added that Captain Meyer's wounds certainly unfitted him for service on the frontier.

April 13, 1872, Senator SHERMAN joined in requesting retirement of Captain Meyer. He was ordered before the retiring board and on August 20, 1872, was examined.

The board found Captain Meyer "incapacitated for active service, and that said incapacity results from a gun-shot wound received in his lower jaw at the battle of Chancellorsville, Virginia, May 3, 1863," (when captain One hundred and seventh Ohio Volunteers.) He was retired in accordance with the finding.

March 21 and December 6, 1873, Captain Meyer asked restoration to active service and re-appointment as a captain of cavalry, which application was disapproved by the General of the Army.

Pending the action on the bill before Congress, no reports were called for as to the official facts of record in the War Department, and no evidence has been filed in this Office showing that he has sufficiently recovered.

The absence of such evidence and the fact that after one assignment to active duty he has failed to be sufficiently recovered are submitted as objections why the bill should not be approved.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

An act to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to restore to the active list of the Army the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer, of the Ninth Regiment of Cavalry, who was retired on the 24th day of August, 1872, for reason of physical disability, resulting from wounds received at the battle of Chancellorsville, from which he has since sufficiently recovered to return to active duty, and to assign him to any vacancy in his grade now existing, or which may hereafter occur, in any of the cavalry regiments in the Army: Provided, That the time that he has been on the retired list not to be counted in his service in giving promotion.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAVING OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return House bill No. 4085 without my approval. The repeal of the clause in the original bill for paving Pennsylvania avenue fixing the time for the completion of the work by December 1, 1876, is objectionable in this, that it fixes no date when the work is to be completed.

Experience shows that where contractors have unlimited time to complete any given work they consult their own convenience and not the public good. Should Congress deem it proper to amend the present bill in such manner as to fix the date for the completion of the work to be done by any date between December 1 and the close of my official term, it will receive my approval.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 15, 1876.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the message will be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Unless some gentleman upon the Committee for the District of Columbia asks the reference of the message, I think it might be acted on now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is before the House for its action.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was intending to make a motion to refer the message to the Committee for the District of Columbia, but I doubt if there is a quorum of that committee here. At the suggestion of my colleague on the committee from Massachusetts, [Mr. CRAPO,] I will move its reference to the Committee for the District of Columbia, with leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The latter part of the motion is not necessary; it being a vetoed bill, the gentleman would have that right under the Constitution.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In announcing as I do that I have attached my signature of official approval to the "Act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," it is my duty to call attention to a provision in the act directing that notice be sent to certain of the diplomatic and consular officers of the Government "to close their offices."

In the literal sense of this direction it would be an invasion of the constitutional prerogatives and duty of the Executive.

By the Constitution the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls," &c.

It is within the power of Congress to grant or withhold appropriation of money for the payment of salaries and expenses of the foreign representatives of the Government.

In the early days of the Government a sum in gross was appropriated, leaving it to the Executive to determine the grade of the officers and the countries to which they should be sent.

Latterly, for very many years, specific sums have been appropriated for designated missions or employments, and, as a rule, the omission by Congress to make an appropriation for any specific port has heretofore been accepted as an indication of a wish on the part of Congress which the executive branch of the Government respected and complied with.

In calling attention to the passage which I have indicated, I assume that the intention of the provision is only to exercise the constitutional prerogative of Congress over the expenditures of the Government and to fix a time at which the compensation of certain diplomatic and consular officers shall cease; and not to invade the constitutional rights of the Executive, which I should be compelled to resist; and my present object is not to discuss or dispute the wisdom of failing to appropriate for several offices, but to guard against the construction that might possibly be placed on the language used as implying a right in the legislative branch to direct the closing or discontinuing of any of the diplomatic or consular offices of the Government.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, August 14, 1876.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the message of the President of course requires no action upon the part of the House, and it is not necessary at all that it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Foreign Affairs; indeed, the only motion, I presume, that is proper is that the message be laid upon the table and printed.

I do not propose to discuss the question presented by the message, but I desire to say this: That no communication has ever been received by this House which so fully indicates the importance in our form of Government that the power of appropriating money should be under the control of the immediate representatives of the people than the message which has been just read. If it were true that under the treaty-making power the President of the United States and the Senate might without limit create foreign ministers, and that on the strength of such acts on their part it would be the imperative duty of the House to make the appropriations for those offices, it would create almost illimitable sources of expense imposed upon the Treasury of the Government. It is fortunate that the message has been received. It will furnish to the country a further indication of the value of the ground assumed in this House during the present session of Congress that money bills must originate in the House composed of the most immediate representatives of the people; that they are in a greater degree responsible for the expenditures of the Federal Government and the draughts on the Federal Treasury.

Mr. KASSON. The President does not say that this House has not the power to refuse to appropriate the money.

Mr. HOLMAN. He does not say that. I am very glad that at least on one point the President concurs in the universal sentiment of the country, that while this power of making treaties exists in the President and the Senate, yet still the power to appropriate money is under control of Congress, notwithstanding the terms of the treaties which may be agreed upon by the President and the Senate.

Mr. KASSON. The President does not speak of the treaty-making power but the constitutional power vested in the Executive, and which does not depend upon the treaty-making power.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does depend upon the power vested in the President, but it does not infer because a treaty is made it is the duty of the representatives of the people to appropriate money to carry out that treaty.

Mr. KASSON. That question does not rise at all. The gentleman will remember one instance which illustrates this matter. President Johnson appointed Mr. Harvey minister to Portugal; Congress refused to appropriate money for him and continued to refuse until the incoming of President Grant's administration, and then Congress, recognizing that President Johnson had exercised the constitutional power, finally voted to Mr. Harvey what pay they thought proper to vote him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say that it is scarcely necessary upon this message to discuss the power of Congress to abolish the office of minister created by law; it is hardly necessary to discuss that subject. Yet the question is rather presented by this message.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will pardon me, but the office of minister is not one created by law, it is one established by the Constitution; that is the ground which the President takes.

Mr. HOLMAN. The office of minister to a foreign government is the result of legislation by Congress; the authority to appoint a minister to a foreign power is derived from law.

Mr. KASSON. From the Constitution.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is derived from law under the Constitution. The gentleman is not careful in his use of terms.

Mr. KASSON. I think I am.

Mr. HOLMAN. The President exercises that constitutional power under the law.

Mr. KASSON. I think if the gentleman will examine the clause of the constitution referred to by the President he will see that it contains a general power to appoint ministers to foreign countries, and the law simply appropriates money for the payment of such as Congress approves, and refuses it to such as Congress does not approve.

Mr. HOLMAN. The uniform practice of the Government from its foundation, or at least from a few years after its foundation, to determine by law what ministers should be appointed and to what courts they should be accredited, shows very conclusively that the creation of these officers is a matter of law, and not the result of any power conferred by the Constitution upon the President of the United States. But that question is not presented in this message in such a form as to require discussion, although I myself hold that the legislative power is the basis upon which all foreign ministerial offices rest, and that Congress has the right directly to abolish any such office. I will submit the usual motion that this message be laid upon the table and printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I trust the gentleman will not press his motion in the form in which he has submitted it. I think I have never known a proposition to lay upon the table and print a message of the President. I believe that would be construed at all times as a discourtesy to the President. So far as I remember it has always been the uniform practice to refer the message of the President to some committee and order it to be printed. Although in this case no action is probably required, yet the reference of the message is what is manifestly the proper thing to be done, its reference to some committee and its printing. I am sure the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not desire to put the House in a position of discourtesy toward the Executive.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course not. But the gentleman must certainly agree with me that inasmuch as this message does not by any possibility require any action, the proper motion is to lay it upon the table and print it; that has been done repeatedly. Yet in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman I will move that the message be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have just referred two messages of the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. They required action.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before the question is put upon the motion to refer and print, I desire to say a word. The President is clearly right, there can be no question about it, that the Congress, composed of the two Houses, has no power to order the withdrawal of any foreign minister, or the closing up of any foreign office. That is entirely beyond our power. The Constitution confers exclusively upon the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the right to send embassadors and to appoint such foreign ministers and agents as he may see proper, limited only of course by the amount of money that the Congress, this House included, shall vote for that purpose. Now for the House of Representatives to undertake to say that the President shall order any given mission closed up is for us to assume a power which we do not possess. We may clearly say, if we please, that of all the money we appropriate no part of it shall be used for a given mission.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yet we have done it within the gentleman's own experience at least twice.

Mr. GARFIELD. We did it in the case of Mr. Harvey, which has been referred to.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I mean the abolition of the office. We did it in the consolidation of the missions to the Central American states.

Mr. GARFIELD. Whenever Congress appropriates for a specific purpose only a certain sum of money, if the President and the Senate concur, it can be called nothing else than a mere suggestion of the House of Representatives which the President and the Senate see fit to adopt. But for us to assume that under the Constitution the House of Representatives has any right to close up foreign relations already established——

Mr. HOLMAN. The House alone?

Mr. GARFIELD. The House and the Senate together. I mean to say that the House is not a party to enter into the exercise of any such power. There is no foreign minister who holds his office in accordance with any statute of the United States. It is true that our appropriation bills appropriate money for those offices; but the gentleman in searching through all the Statutes at Large will fail to find any provision creating a mission by regular terms of law. Our ministers are not created by statute; they are created under the Constitution by the discretion of the President with the confirmation of the Senate. In this respect the message of the Senate is perfectly right.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is not Congress bound as a matter of duty to make an appropriation to pay all the diplomatic officers appointed by the President, just as much as we are bound to provide for the payment of the judges of the Supreme Court?

Mr. GARFIELD. Congress can limit the amount that shall be paid to any particular officer; but it cannot prevent the President from sending an embassador to whatever place he may choose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to imply that, when under the law and the constitutional power of the President a foreign minister has been appointed, Congress is bound to make an appropriation to pay the salary in the same sense that it is bound to make appropriations for the judiciary establishment of the Government?

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is this difference: The salary of a judge of the Supreme Court is fixed by law, and under the Constitution it cannot be diminished. There is therefore a constitutional duty resting upon Congress to make the appropriation to pay the salary of a judge as fixed by law. It is the duty of Congress to make a reasonable compensation to every minister appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. And although Congress may exercise a discretion in fixing the amount of compensation for a minister, in which respect the power of Congress is different as to a minister from what it is as to a judge of the Supreme Court, yet Congress is morally bound as a political duty under the Constitution to provide a reasonable compensation for a minister as much as for any officer of the Government. That is the view which I take of the question. Congress has the power to refuse all compensation; but this would be so unjust that it would be a violation of duty to so refuse.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I understand the gentleman to take this ground: That if the President, under the treaty-making power, with the assent of the Senate, accredits a minister to a foreign government, it is the duty of Congress to make an appropriation of money to pay his salary?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir; undoubtedly.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that an unlimited power to reach the Treasury by the creation of foreign ministers is thus created?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Congress can determine the amount of compensation. That is in the discretion of Congress. All powers are liable to abuse. If Congress could appoint ministers or create the office of minister the number might be made unnecessarily great. The abuse of the appointing power by the President is subject to restraint by impeachment and by a refusal on the part of Congress to pay salaries to ministers who might be unnecessarily appointed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But we must appropriate money for the purpose?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir; as a political duty we are bound to appropriate a reasonable compensation for ministers appointed by the President in the reasonable exercise of his power to appoint.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, sir, I hold that that is not good law. The office of minister rests on law.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It rests on the Constitution; that is the highest law. It is the law under which the President can appoint ministers without the authority of an act of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. On law based upon the Constitution.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman hold that any one foreign mission has been created by statute?

Mr. HOLMAN. Necessarily by statute.

Mr. GARFIELD. Where?

Mr. HOLMAN. By statutes, not only authorizing the accrediting of ministers, but providing for their salaries.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman point us to one such case?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman's idea has but a single feature of sanction in our history; and that is the earlier practice of appropriating a sum of money to be placed under the control of the President and authorizing him to use it for the diplomatic service. At that early period it was sometimes important to send a minister to one government and unimportant to send one to another. Hence the President was deemed a proper authority to determine in what manner the money should be employed. Besides, at that time the office of minister was not a permanent office as we have now made it by law. It was a temporary position—the position of minister plenipotentiary—a minister with special power for the occasion; not a formal office, as we have now created it, but an office merely for a given purpose, for which a given sum of money was placed under the control of the Government.

There it would seem to be an indication of the absence of power to create the office, but it is only incidental. It grew out of peculiar condition of the times. It grew out of the fact the ministers were not permanent officers, but appointed for particular occasions. For the last seventy-five or eighty years these offices have existed, if at all, by virtue of the law and under appropriations made for their salaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the service of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. MAXEY as managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced that the Senate receded from their amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 5962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, Whitman County, Washington Territory; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4107) to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain employés permanently discharged from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

VOLUNTEER FORCE.

Mr. BANNING. I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the message which has just been presented in reference to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the service of volunteers to aid in suppressing the Indian hostilities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be taken up.

Mr. BANNING. The bill has been returned from the Senate, that body further insisting on its amendment disagreed to by the House and asking for a conference. I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement and agree to the conference asked on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. BANNING, Mr. MILLS, and Mr. THORNBURGH.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I enter my protest against some of the doctrines announced on the other side of the House. In these closing hours of the session I do not propose to go into a discussion of the constitutional questions raised by the President of the United States in the last two days.

On yesterday, the President of the United States, who is empowered by the Constitution and has imposed upon him by the Constitution the duty to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, sent a message to this House in which he says:

> I cannot give my sanction on these—
>
> Appropriations for works of purely private or local nature—
>
> and will take care that during my term of office no public money shall be expended upon them.

He closed his message by saying:

> Under no circumstances will I allow the expenditure upon works not clearly national.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is a different subject from the one now up.

Mr. TUCKER. I know it is; but I will bring the two subjects together. On yesterday then, sir, the President, whose duty the Constitution makes it to take care that the laws are faithfully executed in the United States, said that during his term of office he will take care that certain money appropriated by law by this bill shall not be expended; in other words, that when the Constitution requires of him that he shall take care the laws shall be faithfully executed, he will take care the laws shall not be executed.

Now, sir, the functions of the President in reference to laws passed by the two Houses of Congress are two-fold. First, as part of the legislative department, by the exercise of his veto power, he may prevent a bill passed by both Houses of Congress from becoming a law. When he signs the bill, when he approves the bill, it becomes a law, and his legislative functions in reference to it cease. His only function remaining in respect to such law then is executive, and the Constitution provides as Executive he shall take care that the law is faithfully executed. But the President, instead of vetoing it, returned it to this House with this proviso: "Although I did not veto it, as a branch of the legislative department I will take care as Executive to defeat it by my absolute veto as Executive." This seems to me the most extraordinary position ever taken by a President of the United States.

I understand the gentleman from Ohio to hold the doctrine or state the doctrine that, under the Constitution of the United States, the President and the Senate have the power to create as many offices of embassadors and ministers as they pleased, and that there was a moral responsibility upon this House to appropriate money for the payment of their salaries. Now, sir, I must protest against that doctrine. It has no foundation in the Constitution itself. The Constitution, article 2, section 2, provides:

> The President * * * shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur.

I beg the House to remark that this clause reads:

> He shall have power.

It proceeds to say:

> And he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

Now, sir, there is nothing in the Constitution which gives to the President and the Senate the power of the creation of these offices. The sole power is that he shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint embassadors, &c. If the argument of the gentleman from Ohio be correct, then the President has a like right to establish and create the offices of judges of the Supreme Court, because the case of judges stands precisely in the same way as that of embassadors and other public ministers. The clause reads:

> Shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States.

And yet it has never been pretended that the President and the Senate, because they have the right together to appoint a judge of the Supreme Court, have any right to create the office of judge of the Supreme Court, or to create a Supreme Court.

The question is, where is the creative power? What the Constitution provides for is the executive power of nominating and appointing to the office previously created. I do not know what the practice of the Government has been. The gentleman from Ohio says there never has been any act of Congress creating these embassadorial offices. That may be; but they are created by the appropriation bill, as I understand, appropriating certain money for the payment of embassadors appointed to this point or that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appointments of embassadors to Greece, Hayti, and Liberia were all pure acts of legislation creating the offices. I readily call to mind at least those three cases which were not the result of any treaty. And the consolidation of certain nations in Central America but a few years ago was followed by a provision of law accrediting to all those governments a minister to reside at a particular point, which was the creation of a ministerial office on the one hand and the abolition of three ministerial offices on the other. So that we have instances both of the creation by law of the offices directly without the intervention of the treaty-making power and the abolition of the offices.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me a moment. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is correct in stating that recently, that within perhaps the last twenty years in two or three instances there was a statutory arrangement, as for instance the arrangement which created the minister to Hayti, where Congress has taken that course; but that is not only an exception, but one so far removed from the ordinary practice of the Government as not only not to make the rule but to confirm the rule the other way. I refer the gentleman to the Revised Statutes, title 18, page 293, where he will find, under the head of "Diplomatic and Consular Officers," that all of the great diplomatic officers abroad have only this sort of authority:

> Embassadors, envoys extraordinary, and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, agents, and secretaries, and second secretaries of legation, shall be entitled to salaries as hereinafter provided.

It will be seen that the statute assumes the existence of embassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, &c., but does not create the office.

There is not in any case a line or word creating the office, or anything, except in one or two instances, referring to any attempt to make it at all obligatory on the President to recall them or send them. The President is under no obligation, except as the Constitution places it on his conscience to do it, to send ministers to France, England, or any of the kingdoms, while he might drop all of them or recall all of them. It is a matter within his discretion and that of the Senate. The practice of the Government for eighty years, in times of strict construction and also in times of latitudinarian construction, has established the principle referred to. And certainly if there is any gentleman here who ought to stand upon tradition and the old ways, it is the distinguished gentleman from Virginia. From the start our fathers regarded the matter of sending embassadors abroad as lying within the discretion of the President and the Senate, and the House were to determine the amount to be paid to them.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is another fact to which I desire to call the attention of the gentleman. The Constitution distinguishes between officers created by the Constitution itself and those created by law. Now let me read:

> He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law: but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Now, it is the "other officers," not embassadors and ministers, whose offices are to be "established by law." But there is manifestly another class of officers created by the Constitution, "embassadors and other public ministers." As to these the Constitution is explicit that the President "shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint" them. The President is authorized to appoint those officers whose offices are established by the Constitution as well as those which are established by law, except in cases where Congress vests the appointment of officers whose offices are established by law in the heads of the Departments.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a point of order. It is a good parliamentary principle that there should be one at a time speaking, and I would like to hear the gentleman from Virginia finish his speech, and then I shall be glad to hear the other gentlemen.

Mr. TUCKER. I am willing to hear the gentlemen on the other side if they do interrupt the tide of my observations, because I would like to meet any difficulty presented as I go along. The astute lawyers of Ohio who have presented their views to me do not at all change my conclusions on the point I am discussing. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] called my attention to the words in the clause of the Constitution just quoted, "and which shall be provided for by law," as applying only to the other officers whose appointments are not authorized by the Constitution, and claims that all other officers than those are officers created by the Constitution. I understand that to be his argument. It must be, or he will pardon me for saying that there is nothing in it, because neither embassadors, other public ministers, consuls, nor judges of the Supreme Court are within the words, "which shall be established by law." If any one of them are within the words all are, as he is bound to maintain if he holds that any are. Now if you will show me that article in the Constitution which has "created the office of judge of the Supreme Court" I will give up the point.

Mr. LAWRENCE. They are; Congress may limit the number of judges. But the office of judge of the Supreme Court is created by the Constitution. Congress has no discretion to refuse to organize a supreme court. Congress cannot create the office of judge, but may limit the number.

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir; Congress must create the number.

Mr. LAWRENCE. No, sir. Congress must organize the court. This is to be done by virtue of legislative power, as in England. But foreign ministers cannot be organized as a court is. The office is necessarily distinct. In England the king appointed ministers; here the President does the same. I do not say whether Congress may regulate the duties of ministers, but Congress cannot create the office. Congress cannot abolish all ministers, and hence has no power to create, for the power to create carries with it a power to destroy.

Mr. TUCKER. Congress must determine the number, not limit it. This is, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] said a while ago, that there is no power in Congress to close up any mission. No, sir; the power of Congress is to open missions. There is a power in Congress not only to limit, but to fix the number of judges. The power of Congress is to create the offices of judges in such number as it may prescribe. There is nothing about what the number shall be or who shall constitute the Supreme Court. The third article of the first section of the Constitution reads:

> The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Then the gentleman may ask how Congress gets the power to say anything about the number of the judges of the Supreme Court. Unquestionably the President cannot appoint judges of the Supreme Court until the number of judges is established by law; that is, until the offices of judges are established by law.

Now let me say to the gentleman that I am not arguing merely for the sake of argument; but that there is one clause in the Constitution which settles this whole matter. I have had occasion to quote it before. It is the last clause of the eighth section of the first article; that all-comprehensive clause upon which there has been so much discussion.

Mr. BANKS. What is the page?

Mr. TUCKER. It is on page 13. Take the words in the beginning of the section and affixing them to the last of the clauses, it reads:

> Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof.

Now it is under that language that wherever there is any power vested in the departments of the Government of the United States, or in the Government of the United States itself, the efficiency of its power cannot fully obtain until Congress has given it vital force. Now, the power vested in the President to nominate, and with the concurrence of the Senate to appoint, judges to the Supreme Court comes within this all-embracing and comprehensive provision; and this power vested in him cannot be efficient until vital force is infused into it by the Congress of the United States. Until Congress has by a direct act or by an indirect act, such as an act of appropriation, authorized an embassador to England, for instance, the President has no right to nominate and appoint a minister to England.

I beg gentlemen to understand that I make no factious opposition upon this matter. I believe gentlemen will at least accord to me sincerity in my devotion to the Constitution. I believe that not only the liberties, but the hopes, the prosperity, and the progress of the people of this country depend upon a strict adherence to the provisions of that instrument. Break it down, and although the Union may not be dissolved, because it may be a union held together by bands of iron, yet it will rot down under the corrupting influence of an extension of power to this Government which will be most destructive in its character. I believe in the necessity of holding the different departments of the Government strictly within the allotted limits of their powers.

Mr. GARFIELD. Our own department among the rest.

Mr. TUCKER. Our own among the rest unquestionably. I have already during this session maintained the proposition that the treaty-making power, which is in the forefront of the clauses relating to the Executive, which I have cited from the Constitution, does not authorize any money to be paid under a treaty unless Congress shall agree to pay it. Congress, including this House, must by appropriations give efficacy to the treaty-making power so as to abstract any money from the Treasury. That is one case in which the two powers must be made to concur and both to have force by giving to this House as a part of the Legislature the power to concur or non-concur in so much of the treaty as requires the appropriation of money.

And so it is in reference to this appointing power. This House and the Senate must determine how far foreign embassadors are necessary, how far consuls are necessery, how many judges of the Supreme Court are necessary, how many judges of inferior courts are necessary, what inferior courts are proper and necessary. That is within the scope of the law-making power. That which is within the scope of the executive power is the appointment of parties to fill the offices so created by law. I do not intend to go into this discussion any further, except——

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman concede that the President could decline to appoint embassadors without so violating the law as to render himself impeachable?

Mr. TUCKER. As I said, and that is the reason I referred to the action of the President's message of yesterday, if this Congress passes a law that there shall be appointed an embassador to England, that there shall be such an office, the duty of the President under the Constitution and under his oath to support the Constitution requires him, in taking care that the laws be executed, to appoint such embassador, and he would be guilty of official delinquency if he does not appoint.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman answers by putting a hypothetical case. I put the direct proposition to him: Suppose the President withdraws our minister to England to-morrow and declines to appoint another, and that declination continues. As the law now stands, would he have committed an impeachable offense? Of course I know he would commit an impeachable offense should he refuse to appoint judges of the Supreme Court and thus destroy that court.

Mr. TUCKER. I say that if the President of the United States should, as he says in his message he sent to us yesterday he proposes to do, willfully determine virtually to abolish an office created by law by refusing to exercise his appointing power to fill that office, he would be guilty of an impeachable offense.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is still answering me by putting a hypothetical case.

Mr. TUCKER. No, I am answering your case. Mr. Schenck was not recalled, although he was in the city of Washington and knew that this House was going to condemn his course; and then he at last resigned. I do not mean there must be no interval between General Schenck's resignation and his successor's appointment, but it must not be made indefinite in order to destroy an office established by law.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken; General Schenck resigned before he came to Washington.

Mr. TUCKER. I understood that Mr. Schenck was drawing his pay up to the very week that the committee of the House made their report against him.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. General Schenck stated before the Committee on Foreign Affairs when he was here that he regarded himself as at that time minister to England; that his resignation was to take effect upon the appointment of his successor. He drew his pay up to the time his successor was appointed.

Mr. TUCKER. He resigned to take effect from the appointment of his successor, and drew his pay up to that time.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is it competent for Congress to provide by law that there shall be no embassadors appointed at all? If so, then Congress has power to nullify an express declaration of the Constitution, which says that the President shall appoint embassadors, and if Congress cannot say by law that no embassadors shall be appointed is not the power to appoint derived from the Constitution independently of any action of Congress, without any law of Congress at all?

Mr. TUCKER. I understand that a short time ago, perhaps a decade or more ago, the office of embassador to the kingdom of Italy was established by law; it never had existed prior to that time. The President appointed no embassador to that kingdom until after that law passed. I do not care whether the legislative effect is given by recognition in an appropriation bill or by express legislation. What I mean to say is that the power to create an office is in Congress, the President being a part of the legislative power so far as his veto is concerned. If by his veto he does not interfere, then he is functus officio as to the legislative power, and all that remains to him is the executive power of nominating and appointing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all I meant to do was simply to protest against our conceding in this House the extraordinary claim of a "prerogative," (for that is a favorite word of the President in this message)—a "prerogative" on the part of the Executive either to pocket a bill which makes an improper appropriation as he considers and never to execute the law or to exercise the power which he claims to-day in this message in reference to our consular and diplomatic establishments.

Mr. LAWRENCE. My friend has not answered my question whether Congress can provide by law that there shall be no embassador appointed.

Mr. TUCKER. I think it can.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hold that Congress cannot so provide, and that the duty to appoint exists by force of the Constitution. The Constitution says the President shall, with the consent of the Senate, appoint embassadors. That is a law higher than any act of Congress. Congress cannot take away that power given by the Constitution. And this proves that Congress cannot by law say there shall be no embassadors.

Mr. TUCKER. Do I understand the gentleman to deny that Congress may pass a law providing that the office of minister to the kingdom of Italy, for instance, shall be abolished? Cannot Congress pass such a law?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think not. The office is not created by law. I mean to assert that the President has power, by virtue of the Constitution, and without any act of Congress, to send a minister to Italy, and Congress cannot, by law, say he shall not do so, because the Constitution says he may. He is the judge where and to what nations ministers shall be sent.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the President has the right to send ministers to as many kingdoms on the face of the earth as he pleases, and may decline to send ministers wherever he does not choose to do so? And this, whether Congress creates or abolishes them? Does the Executive create them; and must Congress, however averse to it, pay the expenses of a mission which the Executive chooses to establish?

Mr. LAWRENCE. This power to appoint embassadors and other public ministers is in the same section of the Constitution which gives the power to make treaties. In construing one clause we may consider the other. The maxim applies, noscitur a sociis. Would the gentleman undertake to argue that Congress can take away from the President the power to make treaties?

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman will remark that the power on the part of the President to make treaties by and with the consent of two-thirds of the Senate is a self-effective power, except where it requires an appropriation from the Treasury, and then it is inoperative until vitalized by legislative act.

Mr. LAWRENCE. So is the power to appoint embassadors, subject only to the consent of the Senate. A minister is an agency of executive power. He is not a legislative officer.

Mr. TUCKER. The power to nominate and appoint an embassador where no embassadorial office exists is not self-operative. It requires legislative action as the co-efficient force needed to vitalize it into efficient operation. It is similar to the case of the power to appoint judges. The President has no power to appoint a judge unless some law previously passed creates the office.

The gentleman says a minister is an agent of the Executive. That is true. But not for the reason the gentleman gives. The fact that the Executive appoints him does not make him an agency of executive power, else a judge would be an executive agency.

Having entered my protest against the principle put forth here today, I now leave the argument to other gentlemen.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to say a word on this matter. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] to the fact that his strong point, the provision of the Constitution that Congress shall have power to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers conferred, does not apply to this case at all. That provision relates to the "foregoing powers."

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman will excuse me. I listened to his remarks with infinite delight, and did not interrupt him. That provision relates to the "foregoing powers," and those are the powers conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, nothing else. Now, the provisions in regard to embassadors are subsequent powers, and the authority conferred by the article cited is limited to the execution of the powers conferred. Congress shall make all necessary and proper laws for giving effect to the powers conferred by the Constitution. It does not increase nor diminish those powers. It is intended to give them effect, to make them operative, to prevent the failure of constitutional powers for the want of authority to enforce them. The fact is, when the Constitution was formed there were certain recognized principles in regard to the intercourse between independent nations. The appointment of an embassador, or minister, or consul is not the act of one government alone; it is the act of two governments—one to appoint and the other to receive the minister or embassador. The concurrence of these two powers is necessary to constitute an embassador, minister, or consul.

In international law and in the intercourse between nations an embassador is a representative of the executive department of the government. In empires or monarchies he is a personal representative of the sovereign. In a republic he is a representative of the executive department, acting under constitutional authority. The difference between embassadors appointed in this way and those referred to in our legislative acts is exactly this: An embassador or a minister is an officer appointed by executive authority of one government to attend near the court of another for the purpose of presenting or urging the consideration of specific subjects which are necessary to be considered with reference to the mutual interests of both governments. The appointment of embassadors and ministers originated in that manner and for such purposes; and this is the power given to the President by the Constitution. He has the right, if necessary, to communicate with any foreign power upon any specific subject of sufficient importance to justify such an appointment. Under the Constitution he has the right, with the concurrence of the Senate, to send upon such mission an embassador or a minister, whether or not the statute law may have authorized it; and if the Congress of the United States should by law declare in positive terms that there should be no minister or no embassador to such government, yet nevertheless the President would have the right to appoint an embassador or minister for the purpose of bringing to the consideration of the two governments a subject of instant and absolute importance. This power exists by virtue of the Constitution. It is a prerogative of the President and the Senate, and no power exists in other Departments of the Government to take it away.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It cannot be cut off by law.

Mr. BANKS. Now, sir, the legislation of Congress on this subject within its constitutional powers may be necessary and proper. For example, it is a question whether there shall be permanent diplomatic officers created styled embassadors or ministers to continue for an indefinite period of time. The authority of Congress might be required for that purpose, and that seems to have been the object of all statutes enacted with reference to permanent diplomatic representatives at foreign courts. It is doubtless true that the Constitution does not give the President power to appoint permanent officers of that kind. He may not be able to say there shall be an embassador to the court of St. James for the four or eight years of his term, but he can properly appoint embassadors, ministers, or consuls under the Constitution for the consideration of specific or general subjects of immediate international importance to the governments respectively. So Congress may very properly pass laws, as they did in 1854, regulating the salaries, privileges, and perquisites of this class of officers. All such acts are within the purview and power of Congress under the Constitution, and the President would naturally and necessarily conform to such provisions in making appointments under such laws; but wherever there is in his judgment a necessity for such action he can unquestionably appoint embassadors or ministers for the purpose of considering a particular subject important to the two countries, in the absence of any such regulations or statutes. He has that right under the Constitution, and Congress cannot take it from him. I suppose that is all that is intended by this message. Congress has decided, for example, that there shall be no American minister at Athens. The President wants us to understand, and it is proper we should understand, that while there need be no permanent representative of the United States at Athens, and although we have concurred in this law and the President may have approved it, yet if hereafter there should arise necessity for such a representation of this Government at the court of Greece, the President will have the power under the Constitution to appoint embassadors, ministers, or consuls for that purpose.

It is well this question should be presented to us and that the President should give us information as to the effect of his official assent to this act. It does us no harm and I think it will do the people no harm to understand the ground upon which this question rests. It is the old question which has been discussed by Congress and the Executive Departments under every administration since the foundation of the Government.

Mr. TUCKER. A single word in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts and I will conclude. The gentleman has very remarkably omitted to read the most important part of the clause to which I referred.

Mr. BANKS. Read it.

Mr. TUCKER. "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." Of course that refers to powers vested in Congress; but the gentleman omits to read the following words, which are quite important, and relate to those succeeding powers:

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof.

Now, wherever the power of any other Department, or any officer of the United States, or the general power vested in the Government of the United States by that general name is not self-operative and self-efficient, there they require the co-efficient power of the legislative branch of the Government in order to make that power go into effect. And, sir, here is a power which of itself is null. Why? Because the President has power to appoint embassadors and judges. Now that is conceded. It must be conceded, it has to be conceded, that he cannot appoint the judges until they are created by law, because he does not know where to appoint them. Then the same argument applies to embassadors. He cannot appoint embassadors, because he does not know where to appoint them or for what place they are intended. There is to be a law-making power to create the office as well as an executive power to fill it by appointing an officer to discharge its duties.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says an embassador is appointed by both governments. I apprehend he is in error about that. No more than it does require the consent of the judge in the acceptance of the office to which he is appointed in order to his filling it. The appointment is made by the President and the Senate. The acceptance is by the party himself. If we appoint an embassador to Greece, it is for Greece to say whether she will receive our embassador. That does not make him less our embassador because she does not receive him.

Mr. BANKS. He is not an embassador to Greece.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, he is an embassador to Greece, like a servant I send to your house. He is my servant, sent to your house, but you may shut the doors on him.

Mr. BANKS. But he is not the servant of my house.

Mr. TUCKER. He is the servant to your house, but not of your house. I have nothing further to say on this subject. I only wanted to enter my protest against the peculiar views advanced by the other side as well as by the President.

The message was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

USUAL PER DIEM TO CLERKS.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am directed by the Committee of Accounts to report the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the respective Houses the usual per diem allowance to clerks of committees not having a yearly salary, for the period of thirty-one days from the 1st day of August, 1876.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Maryland who reports this resolution tell us how much it will cost? I would like to hear it read again.

The resolution was again read.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ROBERTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 788) for the relief of Robert N. Eddy;

An act (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named;

An act (H. R. No. 1931) granting a pension to John J. Partillo, of Gratiot County, Michigan;

An act (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss;

An act (H. R. No. 3184) for the relief of Emerick W. Hansell;

An act (H. R. No. 2846) granting a pension to Lovina Adeline Bowker;

An act (H. R. No. 2844) granting a pension to Levi B. Hayward;

An act (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain of Company C, First Regiment Maryland Cavalry Volunteers; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No.——) authorizing the appointment of a joint select committee to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa.

NORMAN H. RYAN.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 840) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Norman H. Ryan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $736, in full for services as storekeeper of the bonded warehouse of E. W. Dutcher, at Amboy, Illinois, from the 18th day of April, 1868, to the 15th day of October, 1868.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. LUTTRELL. It is not necessary that time should be occupied in reading the report. There is no objection to the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLARD. I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee for the District of Columbia on a vetoed bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. During the last hours of the session it is very desirable to know what is transpiring; and it is impossible to do so unless there is some order in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that if there is disorder in the Hall it is the fault of the members themselves, because there is nobody else in the Hall. The Chair hopes that members will resume their seats

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Will the gentleman from Michigan indulge me for one moment? I have been desiring for some time to get the attention of the Chair. The bill that is now in the hands of the Clerk has reference to the bones of our sailors lying in Mobile Harbor in the sunken monitor Tecumseh. The Senate has amended that bill. It would be an outrage on the part of this House to adjourn and permit that to lie on the table. It simply needs the concurrence of the House to prevent one of the grossest outrages being perpetrated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the bill called up by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let it be read.

THE MONITOR TECUMSEH.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving words and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to return and tender to the party claiming to have purchased the United States monitor Tecumseh the sum of $50, with interest at 6 per cent. added from August 7, 1873, to the day of the tender; said sum of $50 being the sum paid by James E. Slaughter on what purported to be the sale of said monitor, then lying in Mobile Bay.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, directed to assume the control and protection of said monitor, and he is authorized to dispose of the same to the party who paid said money or his assigns on just terms, providing in such disposition for the removal from said monitor and the proper burial of the remains of the persons carried down when she sank, such removal from the said monitor and burial to be under the protection and supervision of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others;

A bill (H. R. No. 2837) granting a pension to Edward F. Eddy;

A bill (H. R. No. 2848) granting a pension to H. M. Bruner; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876.

THE PAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. WILLARD. I rise to a question of privilege. I report back from the Committee for the District of Columbia the bill (H. R. No. 4085) with the President's veto and a bill in lieu thereof, the passage of which I ask.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state that this is not a privileged question. The gentleman has a right to report back the original bill, so that the House may vote upon passing it over the veto of the President, and the question will be, Will the House upon reconsideration pass it?

Mr. WILLARD. Then I ask unanimous consent to report a bill to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue."

The bill was (H. R. 4108) read. It provides that that part of section 5 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," approved July 14, 1876, which reads as follows:

Provided, That said pavement shall be fully completed and ready for use December 1, 1876, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

Provided, That the said pavement shall be fully completed and ready for use January 15, 1877.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will state the effect of this recommendation, so that we may understand it.

Mr. WILLARD. House bill No. 4085 was a bill to take off the limit imposed by the act for the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue in regard to time. There was a proviso in the bill for the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue providing that the pavement should be completed by the 1st day of December next. The commission which was appointed by Congress unanimously reported to Congress a recommendation to take off the limitation, and the bill to which I refer was in accordance with that recommendation. It passed the Senate, but was vetoed by the President for the reasons which he has stated in his veto message. Upon consultation we have thought it best to introduce another bill which obviates these objections. It is understood, furthermore, that the contractors will be able in all probability to complete the pavement in the time named in the bill we have introduced, which is the 15th of January next. But if the weather should be such between this time and that as to render this impossible, Congress will be in session on the first Monday in December and, the limitation can be further extended by Congress at its next session and for that reasons the committee unanimously agreed to introduce this bill. It makes no change in the bill whatever except in regard to time.

There was no objection to the consideration of the bill; which accordingly received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. WILLARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN AMERICA AND ASIA.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia.

The bill was read, as follows:

That Celso Cæsar Moreno, Alvinza Hayward, John F. Miller, Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, James C. Flood, William Irwin, James McM. Shafter, O. H. La Grange, Isaac Friedlander, William Alvord, Eugene L. Sullivan, John P. Jackson, Andrew J. Bryant, John B. Felton, Lewis Sloss, Philip A. Roach, Nathaniel W. Spaulding, William Norris, Frank M. Pixley, and J. Craig, of the State of California; Henry Failing and Julius Friedman, of the State of Oregon; Henry O'Reilly, G. G. Gariboldi, and William Barnet Phillips, of the State of New York; Dudley S. Gregory, of the State of New Jersey, shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph or submarine cable or cables on the Pacific coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and Asiatic coasts by telegraph lines, wires, or submarine cables: Provided, That said company shall begin to lay said cable or cables within three years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That any telegraph line or cable laid by said company shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit: The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines or cable or cables that may, by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever; secondly, citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of the most favored nations; thirdly, the transmission of dispatches shall be made in the following order; first, dispatches of state, under such regulations as may be agreed upon by the governments interested; secondly, dispatches on telegraphic service; and, thirdly, private dispatches; fourthly, the lines of any such cables shall be kept open to the public for the daily transmission of market and commercial reports and intelligence, and all messages, dispatches, and communications shall be forwarded in the order in which they are received, except as hereinbefore provided; fifthly, before extending and establishing any such line or lines or cable or cables in or over any waters, reefs, islands, shores, and lands within the jurisdiction of the United States, a written acceptance of the terms and conditions imposed by this act shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State by the said company.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before unanimous consent is given for the consideration of this bill, I desire the Clerk to again read the first condition contained in the second section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That any telegraph line or cable laid by said company shall be subject to the following conditions, stipulations, and reservations, to wit: The Government of the United States shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy the same or similar privileges with regard to the control and use of such line or lines or cable or cables that may, by law, agreement, or otherwise, be exercised and enjoyed by any foreign government whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the condition to which I wish to call attention of gentlemen before unanimous consent is given for the consideration of this bill. And I wish still to reserve my right to object until I can receive some explanation of the bill. I do not find in this bill—I thought perhaps it might be contained in this first condition in the second section—any provision authorizing the Congress of the United States to permit the landing of any other cable upon the Pacific coast.

Mr. LANE. That is not necessary.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let it be amended in that respect if the gentleman has any objection of that kind.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know but what this bill confers an exclusive right.

Mr. LANE. How can it be an exclusive right? It only gives the right to this company.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to call attention to the fact that the power to alter, amend, or repeal is a very limited power where vested rights have accrued. It cannot be exercised with reference to rights which have already accrued.

Mr. LUTTRELL. We will accept the amendment.

Mr. LANE. It is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. PAGE. This bill was very carefully drawn by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is so important a question, that it should not be acted upon under the impulse of the moment.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Move your amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It perhaps would be as well to add these words to the second section:

But nothing in this act shall prevent the United States from authorizing the landing of other cables on the Pacific coast.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will please reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. WIGGINTON. The gentlemen whose names are connected with this measure are among the most enterprising on our coast. They are not monopolists, and do not ask a monopoly in this or any other matter. We have no objection to the proposed amendment and will readily accept it. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is now preparing the amendment.

TOLLS ON UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CROUNSE. On the 22d of May last a copy of the opinion of the judge of the circuit court of the United States for the State of Iowa in the case of The United States ex rel. Hall et al. vs. The Union Pacific Railroad, upon the subject of the tolls charged by that road, was presented to the House by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCDILL,] and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed. I entered a motion to reconsider the vote of reference and printing, and now withdraw the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to submit what I think is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order during the pendency of the bill now before the House. While the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is reducing to writing the amendment which he desires to offer, the Chair will entertain propositions and requests that will consume no time.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill to remove political disabilities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain that proposition.

Mr. RICE. Will the Chair entertain a proposition for a correction of the Journal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. RICE. On the 31st of July the Secretary of the Treasury sent a communication to this House——

PACIFIC TELEGRAPH.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have here the amendment which I desire to offer. It is to add to section 2 the following:

But nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges to those herein contained.

Upon reflection I think it likely that this amendment would come in better at the end of the first section. I ask that the section be read.

The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

That Celso Cæsar Moreno, Alvinza Hayward, John F. Miller, &c., shall have the right to construct, lay, land, and maintain a line or lines of telegraph or submarine cable or cables on the Pacific coast of the United States of America, to connect the American and Asiatic coasts by telegraph lines, wires, or submarine cables: Provided, That said company shall begin to lay said cable or cables within three years from the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I perceive that my amendment will not come in properly as a proviso to either the first or the second section. I will therefore ask that it be received as an additional section, to come in before the repealing section of the bill.

Mr. COX. I desire to say one word upon this subject. For several years bills of a character similar to this have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. At one time I was upon a subcommittee to examine this subject. The Committee on Foreign Affairs reported a general bill, for we desired competition. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] seems to look in that direction, to give thorough and complete competition in this business of telegraphing on the Pacific coast. Although I would prefer the bill which I reported two years ago, yet in view of the fact that this enterprise is almost indispensable to the Pacific coast, and as no subsidy is required, I think perhaps the best thing this House can do is to pass this bill with the amendment which has been suggested.

No objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move as an additional section, to come in as section 3 of the bill, the following:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to limit the United States in granting to other persons or companies similar privileges to those herein granted.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARINE HOSPITAL, NATCHEZ, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 699, to confirm the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, and that it be put upon its passage at this time.

The bill was read. It declares in the preamble that the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, Mississippi, are not required for the service of the United States; that the building has been for many years in process of dilapidation and decay; and that the building and grounds have been offered for sale at different times by auction under and in pursuance of law.

The bill therefore directs the Secretary of the Treasury to confirm to the highest bidder the sale made under his direction and in pursuance of law, February 15, 1876; it being satisfactorily shown to him that the building is to be reconstructed and devoted, under responsible auspices, to purposes of instruction for the benefit of the colored people of the United States.

There being no objection, the bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LYNCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land office at Colfax, Whitman County, Washington Territory; and

An act (H. R. No. 4107) to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain of the employés recently permanently discharged from the service of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

BILLS APPROVED.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., one of his secretaries, announced the approval of bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 2017) for the relief of Lizzie Irons, sister of Lieutenant Joseph F. Irons, late of the First United States Artillery;

An act (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877;

An act (H. R. No. 612) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, signed on the 30th day of January, 1875;

An act (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Lloyd C. Babcock; and

An act (H. R. No. 3856) for the relief of William H. French, jr., United States Army, late Indian agent at Crow Creek, Dakota.

HON. J. PROCTOR KNOTT—TELEGRAM FROM JOSIAH CALDWELL.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to make a privileged report. I report back report No. 801, which was recommitted to the Judiciary Committee. It is in relation to the resolution of the House concerning a telegram received by Hon. J. PROCTOR KNOTT, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, from one Josiah Caldwell, and concludes with a recommendation that the further consideration of the resolution on this subject be indefinitely postponed. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD,] one of my colleagues on the committee, has requested me to have read a paper from him.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HURD says: The other day I said I had given my word of honor to the gentleman from Maine that there should be no discussion as to this resolution. I then believed that there would be none; but in justice to the chairman of the committee I desire to say that I had no authority from him to make such statement, and that I never informed him of the fact that I had made such statement. While I believed that no discussion was to occur, I am satisfied that the chairman of the committee did not so understand it.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire whether this report is accompanied by a minority report.

Mr. HUNTON. I have conferred with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] who will present the views of the minority. It was agreed by the committee unanimously that the majority report should be presented, that the minority should submit their views, and that upon the two reports the previous question should be called and the matter settled without debate.

The conclusions reported by the majority of the committee are as follows:

Your committee, therefore, would report: 1. That the telegram received by the chairman from Mr. Caldwell was not evidence, and could not have been received as such without a violation of the rule before that time established by the committee. 2. That withholding it was not a suppression of an instrument of evidence. 3. And that the whole subject as to procuring the attendance of Mr. Caldwell to testify had been referred to the chairman of the committee, and that all communications with or from Caldwell in reference to such subject were in the hands of the chairman, to be used according to his discretion in accomplishing the object of the committee, and that no just complaint can be made of any use of such communications providing the discretion were fairly and reasonably exercised.

Your committee would further report that they are satisfied, from all the circumstances, that the chairman in withholding the dispatch from the committee acted in good faith, and without any purpose to injure any person involved in the investigation; and would recommend that the further consideration of the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MCCRARY. I am directed by the minority of the committee to submit their views in writing. I ask that they be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, composed of the four republican members, dissent from the report of the majority, for the following reasons:

1. We insist that no report upon this subject should be made or acted upon at this time, in the last hours of the session, when there is no time or opportunity for debate.

2. We insist that the matter now reported upon has never been investigated. Not a witness has been sworn; not a word of testimony has been taken. The report is based wholly upon the alleged presumption that the chairman of the committee acted in good faith and without malice. Prior to the late speech of the chairman of the committee on the floor of the House upon this subject, the minority of the committee were willing to, and did, unite with the majority in adopting this presumption. Since the utterance of that speech we are unable to do so, and we now insist that the subject shall be investigated; that the accuser as well as the accused shall be heard; that witnesses on both sides be examined, and that the matter be determined as any other disputed question of fact. The charge made was that Mr. KNOTT had kept from the committee, and from the knowledge of the public, a telegram addressed to him as chairman, and which exonerated Mr. Blaine, and with a purpose to injure him. This of course could not be directly proved and could only be inferred from circumstances. The committee, when the report was originally made to the House, thought that, if all the circumstances alleged against Mr. KNOTT were proved, his character was sufficient to rebut the inference of malice sought to be drawn from them and therefore deemed it needless to inquire whether they were proved. That presumption, in our judgment, has been overthrown by Mr. KNOTT's speech, and this makes it necessary to determine the fact as to his motive upon evidence, and not upon the presumption aforesaid.

3. We further insist that the testimony in the investigation, in the course of which this question arose, should be printed and laid before the House before any action is taken, especially in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee in his late speech saw fit to comment upon that testimony at length as affording proof of his good faith, while the contrary is claimed by others. If that testimony was, as claimed by the chairman, a proper subject of comment as having a bearing upon the subject-matter of the report, then it should be printed, so that others as well as the chairman and members of the subcommittee who took the testimony may know what it contains and may be at liberty to comment upon it. No testimony having been taken upon the question as to the chairman's motive in not making known the fact of the receipt of the telegram, he has cited and relies upon the testimony taken under other branches of the investigation, and not yet printed, and not yet before the House. The chairman cannot fairly ask the House to decide upon this report until that testimony, the only testimony relied upon, is printed and brought within the reach of members.

For these reasons we submit that the report ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HUNTON. I move the previous question upon adopting the report of the committee.

Mr. MCCRARY. I ask tellers upon the adoption of the report. I shall not call for the yeas and nays, and shall make no question in regard to the absence of a quorum. But I desire a record of the number of votes on each side.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCCRARY and Mr. HUNTON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 39.

So the report was adopted.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM BATTERSBY.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Private Calendar for consideration at this time a bill (H. R. No. 1151) for the relief of William Battersby. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill, which was read, provides that upon satisfactory proof being made to the Court of Claims in the case of William Battersby, No. 2700 in said court, that the claimant is entitled to further relief, the said court is thereby authorized to give such additional judgment as shall be consonant with equity and justice; provided that such additional judgment shall not include any claim not embraced in the original petition filed in said cause.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the name is familiar to me and I believe the southern claims commission has reported on this.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The gentleman is mistaken. It has never reported on this.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then it has reported on something in reference to the same party.

Mr. CAULFIELD. But that does not apply to this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I must object.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMISSION.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit a joint resolution in reference to the commission to prepare a form of government for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the resolution be read.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) which was read, provides that for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the concurrent resolution appointing a select committee of three members of the Senate and three members of the House of Representatives to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, one-half to be disbursed from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half to be disbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. The law provides for the appointment of a commission to recommend to Congress at its next session a suitable form of government for this District. This commission is to sit during the recess of Congress, and it is necessary, therefore, to provide proper clerical force and other incidental expenses. This is a reasonable sum, and I fear it may be too low.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me make a suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL. I will listen to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. I fixed the amount to suit him.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection as to the amount. The gentleman does not consider the manner of drawing the money or accounting for its expenditure; but I do not object.

Mr. RANDALL. If you will suggest anything to improve the resolution I will accept it.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as the three members of the House on the commission under the law to frame a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia Mr. CLYMER, Mr. HUNTON, and Mr. WILLARD.

CORRECTION OF ENROLLMENT.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the following joint resolution for the purpose of correcting an error in the enrollment of a bill.

The Clerk read the joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the date in section 8 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, referring to the passage of the resolution authorizing a survey of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad, should be the 19th of July, 1876, instead of the 12th of July as copied by the enrolling clerk.

The joint resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY M. J. FRANK.

Mr. RICE. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 736) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank, and that it be put on its passage at the present time.

There was no objection.

The bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary M. J. Frank, widow of Paul Frank, late colonel Fifty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, to take effect from the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEPHEN D. LEE AND OTHERS.

Mr. LAMAR. I move, by unanimous consent, to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 951) removing the political disabilities of Stephen D. Lee, of the State of Mississippi, and others; and that it be put on its passage at the present time.

There was no objection.

The bill, which was read, provides that all the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States on Stephen D. Lee, of the State of Mississippi; C. M. Wilcox, of the State of Maryland; John G. Walker, of the State of Texas, be, and the same are thereby, removed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

OLIVER H. IRONS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to move that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2469) granting a pension to Oliver H. Irons, late sergeant Company D, Twenty-third Michigan Volunteers, and that the same be put upon its passage. This is a bill to give a pension to a poor blind soldier who has no other means of subsistence.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was brought before the House for consideration.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Oliver H. Irons, late a sergeant in Company D, Twenty-third Regiment of Michigan Volunteers, and pay him a pension, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Clerk to read the report which accompanies the bill. It is very brief.

The Clerk read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as follows:

Oliver H. Irons was in good bodily health when, on the 27th of July, 1862, he enlisted in the United States service in Company D, Twenty-third Michigan Volunteers. During his term of service he was once in hospital on account of pneumonia, and once on account of typhoid fever, from both of which he recovered; but in 1865, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, he was attacked, while in service, with chronic diarrhea, under which he was still suffering at the time of his discharge. The testimony of two physicians who attended him during three years from the time of his discharge shows that the diarrhea continued until it affected the optic nerve, and soon after it ceased; that the affection of the optic nerve, in their opinion, was the result of the chronic diarrhea; that in consequence thereof he has become totally blind, and one of his eyes has been entirely cut out; that the uncontradicted evidence clearly traces the loss of his sight to the service. Your committee would therefore report favorably on the bill submitted, and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 4108) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;" and

An act (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory.

COIN IN THE TREASURY.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of privilege. The Secretary of the Treasury made a short communication in reference to the coin in the Treasury in reply to a House resolution. The RECORD shows it was ordered to be printed. The Journal does not show that. It was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. We have the paper, and by order of the House it should have been printed. I ask that the Journal be corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 125) providing for the sale of desert lands in Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, Colorado, with amendments.

The bill and amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. EDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Who is to determine what are desert lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. I must say that the interests involved here are so very considerable, and the amount of lands allowed for entries so largely above the amount ordinarily allowed, that without being very carefully guarded that would not be a very safe measure. I think on public grounds it should lie over.

Mr. LANE. I think the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection if he will hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The Government will not survey these lands. They are desert.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 840) for the relief of Norman H. Ryan.

PAY OF COMMITTEE-CLERKS.

Mr. FORT. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee of Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pay of the clerk of the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Texas Frontier Troubles be, and hereby is, increased $2 per day from the 16th day of May, 1876, to the 8th day of August, 1876, both days inclusive; this resolution to be considered as a substitute for the resolution passed on the 14th day of August to pay to Albert Ordway $2 per day during the said time.

Mr. FORT. This is simply to correct an error.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that a report from the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir.

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

BUILDING AT LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of expenditure for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act of Congress approved June 7, 1872, entitled "An act to provide for a building for the use of the Federal courts, post-office, internal-revenue, and other civil offices in the city of Little Rock, Arkansas," be, and hereby is, amended by fixing the limit of expenditure authorized for the site and full completion of said building at $250,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not object to this if the gentleman will agree to amend the bill by striking out $50,000 and making the limit $200,000.

Mr. WILSHIRE. I will accept that amendment.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now offer the amendment which I stated a moment ago.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSHIRE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. LORD. Will it be in order to move to suspend that by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done. The call rests with the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the pending business is the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, reported from that committee by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.] The gentleman from Missouri has demanded the previous question, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House take a recess for half an hour.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL'S motion, there were—ayes 107, noes 33.

Mr. LORD called for tellers.

On the question of ordering tellers, there were ayes 15; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were not ordered, and the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House took a recess for half an hour.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House resumed its session at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.

CATHERINE H. GALLAGHER.

Mr. RICE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4109) granting an increase of pension to Catherine H. Gallagher, widow of Captain John Gallagher, late of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JULIA WATKINS.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4110) granting a pension to Julia Watkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GUSTINE DORRIS.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4111) granting a pension to Gustine Dorris, mother of August Dorris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

Mr. LORD. I ask to have passed a bill restoring a section of the Revised Statutes in regard to notaries public. It is important to the whole profession in the United States that it should be passed now. It is a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and it passed the Senate unanimously. It is the bill (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States with the Senate amendments thereto.

The Clerk read the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senate, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That notaries public of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to take depositions and do all other acts in relation to taking testimony to be used in the courts of the United States, take acknowledgments and affidavits, in the same manner and with the same effect as commissioners of the United States circuit court may now lawfully take or do.

Mr. LORD. The bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and its passage is much needed, as under the present law parties frequently have to go forty miles to make depositions.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman that the bill which he has sent up is a printed bill, and it is necessary that we should act upon the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the House should pass this bill it would have to go back to the Senate as an original bill.

Mr. LORD. I think the engrossed bill has been lost, but this is the same bill word for word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes that this is a printed bill. If the engrossed bill had been passed by the Senate with amendments it must be upon the Speaker's table somewhere.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has it passed the Senate at all?

Mr. LORD. It passed the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does not appear to be on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McCRARY. The original engrossed bill was mislaid, I think, by a member of the committee [Mr. HURD] who is not now in his seat, and I suppose that all the House can now do is to pass this bill and send it to the Senate.

Mr. GARFIELD. By unanimous consent we can recognize this as the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the request for unanimous consent, but otherwise he could not consent to recognize this bill as the original.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he make the motion. I do not know enough about the bill to be responsible for it.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent that this may be substituted for and treated as the engrossed bill.

There was no objection, and the question was put upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate, and they were concurred in.

AMENDMENT TO THE LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asks unanimous consent at this time to lay before the House a resolution which was passed by this body as a concurrent resolution, and which was evidently intended to be a joint resolution.

The Clerk will read the title of the proposed joint resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution amending the eighth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any other change made in the resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is not.

No objection was made, and the joint resolution received its several readings, and was passed.

PAY OF A MESSENGER.

Mr. LORD. I ask on behalf of the managers of the impeachment of William W. Belknap to submit a resolution for the payment of the messenger to the managers.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Hugh Mohan, messenger to the board of managers in the impeachment of William W. Belknap, compensation for eighteen days from the 13th of August at the same rate the messenger has been heretofore paid.

No objection was made, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE obtained the floor.

Mr. WADDELL. I demand the regular order. [Cries of "O, no!"] I have been trying to get the floor for two hours and failed to do so, while other gentlemen have been recognized two or three times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the demand for the regular order, which is the call of committees for reports, and the call rests with the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. The regular order is the silver bill, which it would be well to dispose of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the morning hour, and the pending business is the demand for the previous question on the bill reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to utilize the products of the gold and silver mines. The morning hour begins at ten minutes before five o'clock p. m.

Mr. PIERCE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. O, no! Both Houses can get through by six o'clock.

Mr. PIERCE. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were not ordered, only 23 members voting therefor.

Mr. PIERCE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 31.

Mr. HANCOCK. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 29 members voting therefor.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 800) relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 310) Granting a pension to William H. Harrison; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the resolution (S. R. No. 26) authorizing allowances to certain clerks of committees; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) to defray the expenses of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia, with an amendment; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the President pro tempore of the Senate had appointed Mr. SPENCER, Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. WHYTE members on the part of the Senate of the joint select committee to prepare a suitable form of government for the District of Columbia under the concurrent resolution of the House of the 14th of August.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of expenditures for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had returned to the Senate the bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, with his reasons for declining to approve the same; and that the Senate, upon reconsideration, had passed the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The question was taken the motion of Mr. HANCOCK that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next; and there were—yea 1, nays 139, not voting 146; as follows:

YEA—Mr. Waddell—1.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, Banks, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Burleigh, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Dibrell, Durand, Durham, Eames, Eden, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Freeman, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Hereford, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lapham, Levy, Lord, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, Magoon, Maish, McCrary, McDill, McMahon, Metcalfe, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, Norton, Odell, O'Neill, Packer, Payne, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Poppleton, Potter, Randall, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, Spencer, Springer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Young—139.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Collins, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Frye, Fuller, Glover, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynde, MacDougall, McFarland, Meade, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Money, Morgan, Nash, Neal, New, O'Brien, Oliver, Page, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Platt, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Stowell, Swann, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—146.

So the motion of Mr. HANCOCK was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. NORTON. I desire to state that Mr. VAN VORHES, of Ohio, is absent from his seat to-day on account of sickness.

Mr. STEVENSON. My colleagues, General ANDERSON and Judge CAMPBELL, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. COOK. My colleague, Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, is absent from the House by reason of sickness.

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Judge HARRIS, is paired with Mr. MILLER, of New York.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House for the appointment of a joint commission to inquire into the relative value of gold and silver, &c.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) amending the eighth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 620) to remove the political disabilities of James Argyle Smith; and

A bill (S. No. 691) for the relief of Edward A. Leland.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 699) to confirm the sale of the marine hospital building and grounds at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi; and

An act (S. No. 892) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

An act (H. R. No. 4108) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.) The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PIERCE] that the House now adjourn; upon which motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 2, nays 135, not voting 149; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Sheakley, and Teese—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, Bright, Burleigh, Cannon, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Dibrell, Durand, Durham, Eames, Eden, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Freeman, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Lapham, Levy, Luttrell, Mackey, Magoon, Maish, McCrary, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, New, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Payne, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Randall, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, Spencer, Springer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Tarbox, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, James Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Yeates—135.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Foster, Frye, Fuller, Glover, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, Kimball, King, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McDill, McFarland, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Money, Morgan, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Page, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Swann, Martin I. Townsend, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—149.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 310) granting a pension to William H. Harrison;

An act (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory; and

An act (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the same committee, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 297) fixing the limit of expenditure for the erection of a public building at Little Rock, Arkansas;

An act (S. No. 736) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank; and

An act (S. No. 951) removing the political disabilities of Stephen D. Lee, of the State of Mississippi, and others.

INCREASE OF CAVALRY FORCE.

Mr. BANNING. I submit the conference report which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in the suppression of Indian hostilities, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments, and agree to the bill amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, empowered to increase the number of enlisted men to one hundred for each company of such regiments of cavalry as may be employed in existing Indian hostilities and as in his opinion may require the same: Provided, That not more than twenty-five hundred enlisted men shall thus be added at any time to the 25,000 authorized by the act approved July 24, 1876, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877: And provided further, That on the cessation of existing Indian hostilities, the number of enlisted men in the Army shall be reduced to the number now established by law: And provided, That the reduction shall not be made from the cavalry force of the Army. And the following sums are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for recruiting and maintaining the same: Recruiting twenty-five hundred cavalrymen, $50,000; pay per annum, $390,000; subsistence, $200,400; clothing, $206,000; regular supplies, $216,000; purchase of horses, $337,500; transportation, (wagons, &c.,) $84,800; transportation by rail, &c., $150,000; in all, $1,634,700."

Amend the title so as to read as follows: "An act to increase the cavalry force of the United States to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities."

And the House agree to the same.

H. B. BANNING,
R. Q. MILLS,
J. M. THORNBURGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN A. LOGAN,
R. W. HITCHCOCK,
S. B. MAXEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, the conference committee, after considering for some time the matters referred to them, were unable to agree, the Senate declining entirely to concur in the bill as passed by the House and we disagreeing entirely to their bill. After full discussion of the matter, it was proposed that we should agree to the bill which had been adopted in the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, increasing the army now occupying the Indian territory by the addition of twenty-five hundred cavalrymen. As soon as the Indian war is over these men are to be mustered out. The cavalry regiments now in that country are seven. We provide that the increase shall apply alone to those regiments; that each of the companies may be recruited to one hundred men.

This proposition as first agreed to in the Military Committee and ordered to be reported to the House was considered most economical by that committee. It was not exactly in accordance with my own views; but after a prolonged discussion in the conference committee, the Senate conferees positively declining to agree to the addition of five thousand men, for the reason, as they claimed, that it would involve a cost of $5,000,000, that the force would not be obtained soon enough, and that under the arrangement now proposed no additional officers would be required, while the men would be put immediately into service and mustered out as soon as they are no longer required, we felt it proper to agree to this report.

It was stated in committee (and I was authorized to state it in this House) by Senator MAXEY, one of the conferees on the part of the Senate, an old soldier of our Army, who has many times taken part in Indian wars, that in his opinion we are upon the verge of one of the most troublesome and extended Indian wars this country has ever seen. He stated in the committee that within the last ten days there had been three battles with Indians upon the Texas frontier. This war, he says, will not be confined to the Sioux Nation, but they will be joined by others of the hostile tribes.

I state this because the Senator authorized me to state it.

It is under these circumstances, therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have made this report. I now move the adoption of the report, and demand the previous question.

Mr. COX. I move to lay this conference report upon the table.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman will hear from the members of the conference committee before he moves that the report be laid upon the table.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I wish to be heard.

Mr. COX. I will withdraw my motion for the present. I thought the gentleman from Ohio wished to close debate and come to a vote.

Mr. MILLS. I am satisfied the gentlemen in the House do not understand this bill; that they do not understand the report of the committee of conference, which is exactly the Army bill as it passed the House providing for the recruiting of the cavalry force up to one hundred men in a company. It does not add one single solitary man more than that.

Mr. TERRY. You add twenty-five hundred men to the Army.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir; the gentleman does not understand it. The present Army of the United States is a little over 21,000 men. This provides that not more than twenty-five hundred, that is in the general sense, shall be added to the present force in the Army, and the specific clause is that only one hundred men in a cavalry company shall be recruited under any circumstance. That is the Army bill at present. This bill contains the same thing, with this exception, that one hundred men in the discretion of the President shall be put into the cavalry at once. The Army bill provides that they shall be put in to the extent of one hundred as soon as the artillery and infantry by expiration of service shall reduce their numbers below that amount. This bill does exactly the same thing and only says that the cavalry shall be recruited at once in the discretion of the President.

Mr. EDEN. But this does increase the Army.

Mr. MILLS. It is provided that the number of the Army shall not exceed 25,000 men.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular order of business.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. No; the gentleman from Ohio demanded the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the gentleman from Ohio withdrawn his demand for the previous question?

Mr. BANNING. I do not wish to lose the floor.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I will give the gentleman the floor if he will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. BANNING. I do.

Mr. MILLS. I here state to my friend from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] that the specific part of this bill must control the general part of it. He is a lawyer and understands the construction of the law. The specific part of this bill says the cavalry force shall be increased only to one hundred men in each cavalry company, that is, that increase shall be limited to one hundred men in the cavalry under any circumstances.

Mr. BAGBY. Let me ask the gentleman if under the bill it is not possible the Army may be increased?

Mr. MILLS. We provide it may under the Army bill already passed. The bill making appropriations for the Army says that the ten cavalry regiments shall be recruited up to one hundred men in each company and kept to that, but it says that the aggregate force of the Army shall not exceed 25,000. You can now put in four thousand more, as the aggregate is only a little over 21,000; but you are estopped in reference to the other thousand, making 25,000, until the Army, by expiration of service in the artillery and infantry, is reduced to that extent in those arms of the service. The only difference between the general Army bill and this is that under this bill one thousand in the discretion of the President shall be put in at once and taken out again as soon as the Sioux war is over. That is the only difference between this and the Army bill signed by the President. Under that you can put in four thousand men now, while under this you can put in one thousand more, without waiting until the Army is reduced by expiration of service in the infantry and artillery.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of economy I hope this House will pass favorably upon the action of this conference committee. It was not difficult when we got into the committee-room and got to work to ascertain just how much a regiment of cavalry cost this Government per month, per six months, or per annum. I have before me the items of the expense of a regiment of cavalry for last year. It is nothing but a mathematical calculation to ascertain that the pay of the enlisted men of a regiment of cavalry for one year is $390,000.

But I will not go on and give the items. It is well known that it costs this Government about one million dollars per annum to keep a regiment of cavalry in service. The bill as passed by the House of Representatives authorizing the President to call out five regiments of cavalry for six months would have cost the Government not less than two and a half millions of dollars, not including the expenses of enlistment and the transportation to the West where they are needed, and putting them on the field for action. To have enlisted for six months five regiments of cavalry would have been to have obtained the services of those men only from the 15th day of October to the 15th day of December while active in the field; for winter would then set in, and on the 15th of March, before you took them out of winter quarters, they would be mustered out. You would have spent under the House bill not less than three million dollars for the services of five thousand troops, beginning the 15th of October—for they could not be enlisted and put into the field earlier than that—till the 15th of December.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as it has passed the conference committee it will cost the Government $1,432,703, leaving out in that calculation, as I did before, the cost of enlistment and the cost of transportation to the scene of action. So it will be seen in a moment that, as the committee of conference claim and as Army officers and men who have been officers in the Army, of much experience, believe, this increase to the effective force of the Army of the United States will cost less than one-third the cost that would have been incurred by the bill as it passed the House. Some time ago the Military Committee of this House had this whole question before it. It deliberated upon it, it investigated facts and figures, and it came to the conclusion that the best and least expensive way of increasing the Army in this emergency was exactly this bill which we have agreed on in the conference committee, and which is the bill prepared by the Military Committee, but which they had not an opportunity of reporting.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we intend to give protection to the settlers upon our border, if we intend to strengthen the Army—our little, weak Army that is on the frontier—and to allow them to go on and settle this Indian trouble, this is the only opportunity we can possibly have this session. I therefore return the right to the floor to the chairman of the conference committee, that he may renew the call for the previous question.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 800) relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list of the Navy; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) amending the eighth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

INCREASE OF CAVALRY FORCE.

Mr. BANNING. I now move the previous question on agreeing to the report of the conference committee and call for a vote upon the bill.

Mr. COX. I made the motion to lay the conference report on the table.

Mr. BANNING. That motion is not in order.

Mr. COX. I was about to say, if the gentleman had not been so quick in interrupting me, that I proposed to withdraw that motion. It is a little doubtful whether the point of order on the motion might not be sustained. I hope the vote will be taken on the conference report, and that the motion to agree to it will be voted down.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. COX and Mr. WIKE called for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 24, noes 80.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 108, nays 39, not voting 139; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Bagby, John H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Bland, Bradley, Burleigh, Cannon, Cason, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Durand, Durham, Eames, Eden, Finley, Fort, Freeman, Garfield, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Levy, Lord, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, Magoon, Maish, McCrary, McDill, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, New, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Plaisted, Poppleton, Randall, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Sheakley, Sinnickson, A. Herr Smith, Springer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Tarbox, Teese, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Wait, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Yeates—108.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cook, Cowan, Cox, Dibrell, Douglas, Felton, Forney, Franklin, Ganse, Goode, Gunter, Hartridge, Hereford, Hooker, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lamar, Piper, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Scales, Singleton, Slemons, Terry, Gilbert C. Walker, Whitthorne, Wike, and Jeremiah N. Williams—39.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Caswell, Cate, Chapin, Collins, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Foster, Frye, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, Kimball, King, George M. Landers, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynde, MacDougall, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Morgan, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wigginton, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—139.

So the report of the conference committee was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. ROSS and Mr. JENKS, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. VAN VORHES is detained from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to say that Mr. DANFORD left for his home yesterday on account of indisposition. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. HARRIS, is absent on important business.

Mr. STEVENSON. My colleagues, Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. CAMPBELL, are absent. If present they would vote "ay."

Mr. MAGOON. Mr. CASWELL is absent. If present he would vote "ay."

Mr. DAVY. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. MCDOUGALL, is absent by leave of the House. If present he would vote "ay."

Mr. THORNBURGH. My colleague, Mr. MCFARLAND, is absent on account of sickness. If here he would vote "ay."

The resnlt of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. No. 719) for the relief of the heirs of William Stevens.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, at the close of this unusually long and laborious session it will occur to every member of the House that there are many causes of congratulation for the good fortune that has attended us and the degree of health that has accompanied us in our labors. But we cannot at this moment of parting forget that from the very moment of the organization of the House one of its most beloved and honored members has been stricken with disease, and though elevated to that high trust, the position which you at this moment in his absence occupy, a trust which the most distinguished men of the country have esteemed it an honor to discharge, has been, at first in our presence, and since parting from us, still failing in health until we are led sorrowfully to fear that his brilliant and honorable career is near—too near its close. The honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, has placed in my hand a telegram dated at Rock Alum, at 5.46 o'clock this afternoon, which bears the signature of the absent Speaker of the House, which I will read:

Hon. S. S. COX.

My condition is very critical; no change since morning.

M. C. KERR.

Sir, I am sure it will be the unanimous desire and a source of poignant regret if it should be omitted of all the members of this House from every section of the country and of every phase of opinion, that we should express to the absent Speaker our confidence in his high integrity, our admiration for his brilliant public services, our regret for his failing strength, and our hope for the restoration of his health. It is in this view that, upon consultation with gentlemen upon different sides of the House, I ask leave to offer a resolution as an expression of that feeling which I have imperfectly expressed, and which I know so well animates the heart of every member, present or absent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives at the moment of closing its present session tenders to Hon. MICHAEL C. KERR, its beloved and honored presiding officer, the unanimous expression of the heartfelt sympathy of its members in his affliction, and their hope that the recovery of his health may soon restore to his associates in the public service the wisdom of his counsel and the beneficent influence of his example.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was unanimously adopted.

Mr. BANKS. I move, with your leave and that of the House, that the Speaker pro tempore be requested to transmit this resolution to Mr. KERR.

Mr. TUCKER. By telegram.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will see that that is done.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS.

Mr. CROUNSE. I desire to call up the message of the President vetoing the bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians and the Sacs and Foxes, of the Missouri tribe of Indians, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, that the House may have an opportunity of reconsidering its action respecting that bill.

The Clerk read the President's veto message, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

For the reasons stated in the accompanying communications submitted to me by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, I have the honor to return herewith without my approval Senate bill No. 779, an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri tribes of Indians, in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 15, 1876.

Mr. CROUNSE. I beg to state respecting this bill that it originated in the Senate, came to this House, and was passed here unanimously. It went to the President for his approval and under a misapprehension and under information received from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs he refused to attach his signature to the bill and returned it to the Senate, but immediately thereafter, upon being advised of the mistake which had occurred and the misapprehension under which he labored at the time he refused to sign the bill, he followed it up with another letter which was read in the Senate a short time since and the United States Senate unanimously passed the bill. It is fair to say that the President himself admits that he acted under misapprehension and under misinformation, and that had he been advised at the time he vetoed the bill as he is now advised he would have attached his signature to it. In this state of affairs the Senate has passed the bill as it did before unanimously. The committees of the two Houses are in accord with regard to it and no objection can be made against it in any quarter.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill? And this vote can only be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me it should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CROUNSE. That committee are unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there can be a formal consideration of the bill by the Committee on Indian Affairs——

Mr. GOODIN. This bill passed the House unanimously.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, it certainly is questionable whether this bill should now pass.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays upon the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must rule that this is a privileged question, and the yeas and nays will be called; because under the Constitution the bill cannot be passed otherwise.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 18, not voting 149; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Baker, Banks, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, Burleigh, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Cowan, Crounse, Cutler, Davy, Dibrell, Durham, Eames, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Freeman, Garfield, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Henderson, Abram S. Hewitt, Hooker, House, Hunton, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Levy, Lord, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, McCrary, McDill, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Mutchler, Norton, O'Neill, Page, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Poppleton, Powell, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Whitthorne, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Yeates—119.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Cason, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Eden, Gibson, Hartzell, Hereford, Holman, Magoon, Maish, Monroe, Morrison, New, Randall, William M. Robbins, Springer, Stevenson, and Thompson—18.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Ashe, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Caswell, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Collins, Cox, Crapo, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Evans, Faulkner, Foster, Frye, Fuller, Glover, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kelley, Kimball, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Lane, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lynde, MacDougall, McFarland, McMahon, Miller, Milliken, Money, Morgan, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Packer, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Rea, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, Smalls, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Swann, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wiggington, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—149.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has a quorum voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman make the point of order that a quorum has not voted?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No point of order being made that a quorum of members have not voted, the bill is passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4106) to authorize the President to accept the services of volunteers to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 648) for the relief of Andrew J. Barrett;

A bill (H. R. No. 1075) directing the Second Auditor to settle the pay and bounty account of John Ammahaie, or Ammahe;

A bill (H. R. No. 1503) for the relief of Sarah F. Albertson, of Booneville, Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of company C, Eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 705) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska;

A bill (S. No. 752) authorizing the recorder of the District of Columbia to appoint an assistant, with certain powers;

A bill (S. No. 784) for the relief of Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased; and

A bill (S. No. 888) for the relief of Peter Phillips.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 719) for the relief of the heirs of William Stevens;

An act (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of Mrs. James K. Polk, of Nashville, Tennessee; and

An act (H. R. No. 4106) to increase the cavalry force of the United States to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives for the adjournment of both Houses of Congress without day, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that Mr. WINDOM and Mr. MCCREERY had been appointed a committee on the part of the Senate to join such committee as might be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress are ready to close their sessions by an adjournment without day.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. PIPER, Mr. MEADE, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa as members on the part of the House of the joint select committee upon the subject of Chinese immigration.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. MORRISON. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON.]

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to take from the Speaker's table the resolution in regard to the final adjournment of Congress, which has just been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday next, August 14, 1876, at four o'clock p. m.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "Monday next, August 14, 1876, at four o'clock p. m.," and insert "Tuesday, August 15, 1876, at half past seven o'clock p. m."

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION OF FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HANCOCK submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three members of the House be appointed to join a similar committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress are ready to adjourn, if he has no further communication to make to them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. HANCOCK, Mr. HARDENBURGH, and Mr. GARFIELD as the committee under the resolution just adopted.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to state that in the appointment of the committee just announced by the Chair to visit California and make inquiry in regard to Chinese immigration the wishes of neither the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. WOODBURN] nor myself have been consulted, and that——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not a question of privilege. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. PAGE (amid the vigorous rapping of the gavel and loud cries of "Order!" from all parts of the Hall) continued his remarks for some moments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] are entirely out of order. This is no question of privilege. The Chair directs that no language which has been spoken out of order and so ruled by the Chair be taken down by the reporters for insertion in the official proceedings.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.

Mr. DAVY. I ask unanimous consent to have considered and passed at the present time a bill to provide for a building suitable for the custom-house, post-office, internal-revenue office, United States court, and marshal's office, at Rochester, New York.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress at the beginning of its next session whether the present needs of the Government require the erection of a public building at Rochester, New York, and the estimated cost of the same, and upon what basis of donation or otherwise a suitable site for said building can be obtained.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4112) was read three times, and passed.

JAMES ARGYLE SMITH.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to suspend the rules and pass a bill (S. No. 620) to remove the political disabilities of James Argyle Smith, of Mississippi.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be removed from James Argyle Smith, of Mississippi.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is an application on file for the removal of these disabilities?

Mr. HOOKER. There is.

The rules were suspended and the bill passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ALLOWANCE TO CLERKS.

Mr. ROBERTS. I move to suspend the rules and pass a resolution (S. R. 26) authorizing an allowance to certain clerks of committees.

The resolution, which was read, provides that there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the respective Houses the usual per diem allowance to clerks of committees not having yearly salaries for a period of thirty-one days from the 1st of August, 1876.

The rules were suspended and the joint resolution passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof.)

L. H. FITZHUGH.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am directed by the Committee of Accounts to report back the following resolution adversely, and to move that it be laid upon the table:

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, instructed to pay to L. H. Fitzhugh, late Doorkeeper, an amount equal to the salary of Doorkeeper from the date of the consolidation of the office of Doorkeeper with that of Sergeant-at-Arms, May 22 last, to the 1st day of August; the said Fitzhugh having been detained and engaged in settling his accounts to that date.

The resolution was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' HOME INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized to draw on the contingent fund of the House for a sum not to exceed $2,500 to pay the necessary expenses of the investigation of soldiers' homes, ordered by the House of Representatives.

The question was put, and the Chair decided that the resolution was adopted, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I would have demanded a division of the House on that last vote, but I heard it called for in another part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 994) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes so as to allow repayment by the Secretary of the Treasury of the tonnage tax which has been exacted in contravention of treaty provisions.

BILLS APPROVED.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., one of his secretaries, announced that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876;

An act (H. R. No. 3184) for the relief of Emerick W. Hansell;

An act (H. R. No. 2848) granting a pension to F. M. Bruner;

An act (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others;

An act (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2844) granting a pension to Levi D. Hayward;

An act (H. R. No. 2846) granting a pension to Lovina Adeline Bowker;

An act (H. R. No. 2837) granting a pension to Edward F. Eddy;

An act (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss;

An act (H. R. No. 1931) granting a pension to John J. Partillo, of Gratiot County, Michigan;

An act (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain of Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 4107) to provide for the payment of a full month's wages to certain of the employés recently permanently discharged from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing;

An act (H. R. No. 351) to create an additional land-office at Colfax, Whitman County, Washington Territory;

An act (H. R. No. 1803) to provide for the appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits, &c., for the courts of the United States;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 165) to defray the expenses of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to prepare a suitable form of Government for the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 4093) granting a pension to Eliza Jane Blumer;

An act (H. R. No. 310) granting a pension to William H. Harrison;

An act (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordinance stores furnished to Kansas Territory.

An act (H. R. No. 4108) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;"

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh;

An act (H. R. No. 2689) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

An act (H. R. No. 4106) to increase the cavalry force of the United States to aid in suppressing Indian hostilities;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) amending the eighth section of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 800) relating to the promotion of commodores on the retired list on the Navy.

SOLDIERS' HOME INVESTIGATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think myself that this measure is right, but a division was distinctly called for on the other side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call for a division was made too late. The resolution is adopted.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the joint committee of the two Houses charged with the duty of informing the President that the two Houses were in readiness to adjourn and inquiring whether he had any further communication to make to their respective branches have attended to that duty, and have been requested by him to report that he has no further communication to make.

APPOINTMENTS ON COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair announces the appointment of the members of the joint select committee in relation to the changes in the relative value of gold and silver, as follows: Mr. GIBSON of Louisiana, Mr. BLAND of Missouri, and Mr. WILLARD of Michigan. And the Chair appoints the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] as member of the Joint Committee to frame a new form of government for the District of Columbia, in place of Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan, who has resigned his position on that committee.

STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. CATE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee of the Whole, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4086) for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin, be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas a treaty was entered into on the 5th day of February, 1856, by and between the Government of the United States and the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, in which the said Indians ceded certain lands to the United States, and accepted in consideration thereof certain lands as a reservation, to which said Indians removed, and upon which they have ever since resided; and whereas by the interpretation placed by Government officials on the act of February 6, 1871, an act for the relief of said Indians, a large part of said Indians (and their descendants) who signed said treaty of 1856, and have continued with said tribe from the making of said treaty to the present time, are excluded from participating in tribal funds and the right to occupy said reservation: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons who joined in the execution of the said treaty of February 5, 1856, and the descendants of such persons, and all persons who, being members of said tribe, did not join in the said treaty, but have since the making of the treaty come in under it and resided with said tribe upon its reservation, who did not in and by said treaty and have not since its execution separated from said tribe, are hereby declared members of said Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians, and entitled to share in tribal funds and the occupancy of tribal lands.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, without unnecessary delay after the passage of this act, to cause to be taken an enrollment of said tribe on the basis of the provisions of this act, which enrollment shall be filed, a copy in the Department of the Interior, and a copy in the records of said tribe.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CATE] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill. The motion to suspend the rules includes the rule which requires the reading of the report.

Mr. CATE. I do not object to the report being read. I desire that gentlemen should understand the bill.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 31, noes 98.

So the rules were not suspended, two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof.

PAY OF PAGES.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That the following-named pages, C. Sullivan Henry, William B. Hester, Frank Sebring, Frank Angerer, James W. Friend, and James Spellman, who have been acting on the floor during the session at the rate of $2 per day, be allowed the full pay of $2.50 per day for the session, and including the month of August, to come out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to inquire if this is a report from the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. TUCKER. It is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia did not state that this was the report of a committee, but moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. TUCKER. I believe if the gentleman from Indiana was dying as the House is now dying he would raise a question of that kind.

[Cries of "Vote."]

The question being taken, the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution was adopted.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask leave to be excused from serving on the Joint Committee on Chinese Immigration.

Objection was made.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the President of the Senate had appointed

Mr. JONES of Nevada, Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. BOGY members on the part of the Senate of the commission to inquire into the change which has taken place in the relative values of gold and silver.

PAY OF EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the rules be suspended and that the following resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed immediately after the adjournment to issue to the employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual rolls, for the month of August, their respective salaries during said month.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution was adopted.

COMPILATION OF DECISIONS ON POINTS OF ORDER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Journal Clerk be, and he is hereby, required to compile and index for the use of the House all questions of order decided in the House of Representatives; and such clerical assistance as may be necessary to carry out this resolution shall be paid for out of the contingent fund of the House, subject to the approval of the Committee of Accounts, but not exceeding the sum of $250.

The rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. WHITE. I insist on my motion that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House certain requests for the withdrawal of papers.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of L. L. Anderson, now in possession of the Committee of Claims, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. PACKER, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of Daniel Bishop, there being no adverse report thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 620) to remove the political disabilities of James Argyle Smith, of Mississippi.

THANKS TO THE CHAIR.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are due, and are hereby tendered, to Hon. MILTON SAYLER, Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives, for the impartiality, efficiency, and ability with which he has discharged the trying and arduous duties of his office during his term of service.

Mr. CLYMER, having taken the chair, put the question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend that resolution by adding the name of Hon. S. S. COX.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to accept that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. If there be unanimous consent I am willing to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER.) Is there unanimous consent to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was unanimously adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SAYLER having resumed the chair.) By concurrent resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives the hour of seven and a half o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, the 15th day of August, has been fixed as the time of final adjournment. That hour having arrived, under that resolution and by its authority, thanking the House for its courteous expression, I pronounce the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress adjourned without day. [Applause.]

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANKS: Memorial of Nathan Appleton, of Massachusetts, that Congress provide without delay for funding the public debt at 4 per cent. interest, and authorize citizens to purchase ships of all kinds where they can be had at the lowest prices, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. BOONE: Papers relating to the petition of B. R. Waller, Twentieth Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, for pay as a second lieutenant United States Army, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CABELL: The petition of citizens of Carroll and Grayson Counties, Virginia, for a post-route between Fancy Gap, Virginia, and Sparta, Virginia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Carroll County, Virginia, for a post-route from Lamsburgh, Virginia, to Mount Airy, North Carolina to the same committee.

By Mr. HANCOCK: The petition of William Moses and Felix Halff, for the right to prosecute in the Court of Claims for the proceeds of cotton seized by United States officials, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUNTON: The petition of Dr. Asa Wall, for the removal of his political disabilities, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: The petition of insurance companies, bankers, merchants, and underwriters of New York, for the maintenance of the Signal Service system, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of L. Jacoby and 100 other citizens of California for the repeal of the check-stamp tax, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of California, asking that the Presidio reservation be dedicated by Congress for the purposes of a public park, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of California, favoring an appropriation for the erection of a light-house and fog-bell at the straits of Carquinez, near Benicia or Martinez, California, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of D. Blume and other citizens of California, for a post-route from Reading to Furnaceville, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, remonstrance of Goodall and other citizens of California, against making any change in the pilot laws, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of S. A. Logan and other citizens of California, for a post-route between Susanville and Davis Bridge, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of the San Louis Obispo Grange, No. 28, favoring the repeal of the duty on sacks used for sacking grain, wool, or cotton, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Samuel Angell and other citizens of Utah, for the establishment of a land office in Beaver County, Southern Utah, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Berding & Co., for compensation for supplies furnished the Indians quartered on the Mattole Indian farm in California, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Kelseyville (California) Grange, No. 108, for the repeal of the duty on sacks used for sacking grain, wool, and cotton, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Thomas G. Morgan, for compensation for property taken by the United States officials after the close of the war, to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the petition of J. E. Carr, and 100 other citizens of California, for a post-route between Coffee Creek and Altoona, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of California, for a modification of the treaty of the United States with China so as to discourage the further immigration of Chinese to our shores, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of California, for a post-route between Rutherford's Station and Napa Valley, via Chiles Cañon, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Milton Krytser, that he be permitted to change his pre-emption right into a homestead entry, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the petition of citizens of California, for the establishment of a post-route between Belmont and Reveille, Nevada, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, testimony in relation to Alaska frauds and mistreatment of citizens, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PACKER: The petition of citizens of Lebanon, Pennsylvania, artisans and manufacturers of and workers in iron and coal, relative to the completion of the Southern Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route between Nashville and Leipers's Fork, Tennessee, to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the establishment of a post-route between Brick church and Booneville, Tennessee, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of J. L. Warthen and Eli Baskins, late privates in the Tenth Tennessee Regiment Volunteer Infantry, United States Army, for arrears of pay and bounty, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX

TO THE

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Amnesty and the Jefferson Davis amendment.

SPEECH OF HON. THOMAS L. JONES,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 13, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 214) to remove the disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States the pending question being on the motion of Mr. BLAINE to reconsider the motion by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am happy in the opportunity once more to raise my humble voice for governmental amnesty to all my countrymen. I had the honor to serve in the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses of the United States, and it was among my first acts in the Fortieth and my very last in the expiring hour of the Forty-first to offer a resolution for general and complete amnesty. I thank God, sir, and I thank the American people, that the popular branch of their Government is at length, I hope, enabled to vote complete amnesty and oblivion for all political offenses. A gracious Providence has changed the hearts of our people, has smoothed down the asperities of their rugged nature, and turned them once more to words and acts of brotherly kindness and affection. The time has come, sir, when we can look the sun and the world in the face and speak justice and truth without fear of assault or insult. Happy, happy indeed, sir, should we be in this return of fraternal feeling to hail and welcome with universal acclaim the centennial of our country's independence and glory. Universal acclaim did I say, sir? I would fain hope for it.

But I am reminded of the substitute offered by the distinguished gentleman from Maine, in which he makes, I had almost said an invidious exception, that mars the general harmony which was pervading the land. I had not believed it in his heart thus to express himself, and I had certainly thought better of his policy and wisdom. He is a representative man of his section, and even aspires to the chief dignity of his country. I would ask that gentleman, Why, why make this exception? What has Jefferson Davis done more than his fellows and comrades in their great struggle for separate government and independence? What crime, if crime at all, has he committed that they have not committed? And I speak, sir, not only of the leaders in that struggle, but of the people in their sovereign capacity. "In illos convertile ferrum adsunt qui fecint." It was they who first moved for rebellion and war; they commanded and appointed their leaders; they were before them in the inception of the struggle, and with impetuous and irresistible spirit ordered them to lead in the march. They unfortunately esteemed it their right to do so; they were educated in that political school and belief. Then, sir, if the gentleman and his friends (I hope indeed few) must still pour out the vials of wrath and pronounce excommunication upon the primal and real offenders, let them do it upon the whole Southern people, and not with exceptional revenge upon the frosted and sorrowed head of their still honored chief.

Why, sir, look around; here sit among us, welcomed with open hands and hospitable greetings, brave and gallant men, who stood side by side with Jefferson Davis in council and marched and fought and bled at his command and under his order. The Constitution of our country, by its amendments, supported and passed by the gentleman's own voice and vote, has entitled these men to their seats on this floor; and I cannot believe, Mr. Speaker, that he intended by his unfortunate exception to give affront to them, his peers in the American House of Representatives. And yet it must be so felt, sir. They have the forbearance, the courtesy, perhaps, the wisdom, commendable indeed, to pass it by in silence. But I know they must feel it sting in their hearts. Should I properly characterize the gentleman's substitute I would pronounce it an insult to every true man, woman, and child in the South. I love that people, sir; I am their "kith and kin," born and reared among them, and in a political sense, as it were, in the very heart of the South. I revere their great names and their great history; and if I should ever attempt to speak to their disparagement may my utterances freeze upon my lips. If they have committed a great wrong, greatly have they repented it: in sackcloth and ashes they have atoned for it. But, however mistaken in judgment, however disastrous to them their late struggle, you, their conquerors, and the civilized world must admit that it was one of the grandest that ever immortalized the virtue and fortitude of woman or the courage and endurance of man.

Sir, I deeply regret the character of this debate. But who is responsible for it? Who gave its peculiar and direful complexion? Is it the distinguished son of Pennsylvania, the "Keystone of the Federal arch," the great State which has done so much and so grandly to promote the centennial celebration by a united people at the cradle of American liberty and union? Has it been reserved for him to exhume the dead and buried past, and especially to present in the dread cerements of the grave the unfortunate prisoners of the late civil war, with all the horrible circumstances attending their death, in order only, it must appear, to re-open the closing wounds and re-inflame the hearts of a forgiving and forgetting people? Sir, if the spirit which the gentleman has manifested in this debate pervades the people of the North, the Centennial would be a mockery and a disgrace upon the civilization of the age. But, sir, I will not believe it. I pity him and I shall yet respect them. Why, sir, there are those of us on this floor who, if disposed and had the opportunity, could unfold scenes of hardships and cruelties in northern prisons which would harrow up the very soul; scenes of inhumanity unworthy of earth, and which cried to heaven. But, sir, we would perform no such office, much less would we hold Abraham Lincoln, the then President of the United States, responsible for these crimes. They were perpetrated by baser and menial hands. We had the sense and the charity to look upon them then, and we look upon them now, as the consequences and the legitimate fruits of dreadful war. May we not plead, sir, for the same consideration and charity from those of like experience on the other side? Let us no longer sow dragon's teeth, but the seeds of repentance and love, and let our grand celebration, if it be at all, be penitential as well as centennial.

Jefferson Davis, sir, was born in Kentucky. She cherished her son in the days of his early manhood, and she will not now, in the gloomy evening of his checkered life, disown or dishonor him. He bore an honored name in this Republic before the days of secession. He portrayed its eloquence and its courage in the council and in the field. He spoke and fought and bled for his country's glory, of which you are so justly proud. He was one of the greatest ministers of war the Republic ever had, and it was his clarion voice and noble bearing that inspired his Mississippi riflemen with the daring courage to drive the furious charge at Buena Vista, which, as it were, snatched victory from defeat, and crowned the American arms with one of the greatest battles of the world. He stood at his place in the other Chamber of this Capitol, a great and honored Senator, and mourned almost in tears his departure from those walls. But his State commanded and he felt bound to obey. The world knows his after-life, and the world at large respects him. He has expiated in your dungeons, in chains, and by all manner of degradation attempted upon him, his own offenses and those of his people; and now, although bereft of fortune, his eye dimmed, and his head bowed by age, still bearing bravely up, loyal to the old flag for which he once fought so nobly—doing all he can to instruct and enlighten our people, to develop the resources and to promote the wealth and the fame of our common country.

Is there no mercy left for him? Has the gentleman from Maine read history in vain, and has he no forecast of the future? Let him remember the noble acts of noble conquerors to the conquered through all time; let him remember the civil wars, the rebellions, if you please, on the continent of civilized Europe, and he will find that the great names on both sides are treasured up in the minds and hearts of future generations, a common heritage to a common people. Are not the names of Cæsar and Pompey honored alike by the descending ages of Rome? Are not the Legitimists and the Pretenders, the Bourbons and the Bonapartes held in common renown by all Frenchmen? And the Round Heads and the cavaliers, Cromwell and Charles, honored alike by all Englishmen? Let me tell the gentleman that the time will come, perhaps near at hand, when the names of Grant, and Sherman, and Sheridan, and Lee, and Jackson, and Breckinridge—yea, sir, of the martyred Lincoln, and the now insulted Jefferson Davis—will be read with common pride and common respect by the American youth, and the last may be honored as much as the first? Such is history and such the nature and character of man. I speak thus in no invidious sense or with sectional feeling. I love my whole country. Thank God, sir, there are no Alleghanies, no Potomacs, or dividing lines in my politics. I yield to none in appreciation of the common glory of my country and in meting out ample praise and justice to all its heroes and all its people.

I pray you, sir, let us take our lessons from the spirit and preaching of the Divine Master. His mercy and love extended to all, from the good Mary to the wretched Magdalene, from the beloved disciple to the Jew of Tarsus. Why, the gentleman from Maine would have had the Christ to have rejected Paul because he had been the chief of sinners, and yet he did most and best to promote the greatness and glory of his once-persecuted Lord. I implore the gentleman, in the name of charity, in the name of peace and harmony in this blessed year of our history, in the name of patriotism and union, to strike from his substitute the invidious exception, that it may be no more read by human eyes. Let our amnesty be as broad and free as the air we breathe; like the mercy of God, let it be for all.

> The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
> It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven,
> Upon the place beneath: it is twice bless'd;
> It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes:
> 'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
> The throned monarch better than his crown.

The olive-branch often becomes authority better than the sword. I rejoice to say, sir, that, in the noble State which I have in part the honor to represent, the animosities and distinctions engendered by the late war are well-nigh forgotten and buried in oblivion. The Federal and confederate soldiers have there embraced, and they have been promoted by the common suffrages of the people to the high offices of state, where they stand side by side in the earnest endeavor to build still higher the fame of the commonwealth; hand in hand they verify and illustrate the beautiful motto of Kentucky: "United we stand, divided we fall." So may it be here, sir, at the Capital of the great Republic. So may it be in every State—North, South, East, and West—of our glorious Union. "United we stand, divided we fall."

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. THOMAS L. JONES,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 20, 1876.

The House, as in Committee of the Whole, having under consideration the bill H. R. No. 514) relating to the centennial celebration of American Independence—

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: I had not intended to address the committee upon this bill. I have no prepared speech to make. I have not put pen to paper. But after the able and pursuasive speeches that have been made by gentlemen on this side of the House against this measure, as I intend to vote differently from them, I propose to give some of the reasons which influence me in my support of it.

I do not presume, sir, to take a flight on the wings of the American eagle, or to stand upon the helmet of the Goddess of Liberty that crowns this Capitol, and belabor the air with sound and fury, but I propose to speak words of truth and soberness. When I sat here yesterday and heard the very eloquent speech of the gentleman from Virginia, like Agrippa listening to Paul I was almost persuaded. But sir, I am not quite ready to yield to his constitutional christianity at least.

Now, sir, I shall support this measure because I believe it is in the interest of peace and amity among the people of the United States. I shall support it because I am a southern man—yes, sir, southern as he who is most southern. I shall support it because I am an American citizen and a Union man. I have nothing to do, Mr. Chairman, with those discourteous and contemptuous flings and gibes which have been made from this side of the House to the other, or from the other side to this. I participate in no feelings which prompt such unbecoming deportment on this floor. I will endeavor to rise to a higher plane. I consider the South, now so ably and gallantly represented on this floor, as reconstructed—reconstructed, sir, it is true, against my own voice and vote in many of the modes which made up reconstruction. But since it has been done I abide it, and so do these honorable gentlemen abide it. I have been reared, like the gentleman from Virginia, in the school of the strict construction of the Constitution. I have read and heard a great deal upon that subject from both standpoints, North and South, and my observation and experience have inclined me on some subjects at least to leave a little the strict construction side, and I think that I have illustrious examples for doing so.

The subject of internal improvements which has been alluded to is hereafter to be discussed in this House. It is a question upon which gentlemen on this side are to divide, and perhaps it is as well that, although we occupy the same stand-point, as it were, yet we see things differently. I expect, sir, to invoke the aid of this Government to some works of internal improvement in the South, that the South, equally taxed, may enjoy equally with the North the benefits of the Government. I expect to invoke it in some shape or another for the great Southern Texas Pacific Railroad; and for my authority in the Constitution, or in the views of the expounders of the Constitution, I point to the greatest strict constructionist the South ever produced, whose voice and whose pen have interpreted that instrument. Mr. Calhoun in 1816 was the very father in this country of a system of internal improvement. In that year he moved that a committee of Congress be appointed to present a bill for the purpose of devising a system of internal improvement. He was chairman of that committee, and reported the bill. It provided that the stock of the Government in the United States Bank and that the bonus that was offered the Government by private stockholders of the bank should be set apart as a permanent fund for internal improvements in the States. And he said, sir, on that occasion—

> Let us bind the Republic together by a perfect system of railroads and canals; let us conquer space. * * * It is thus the most distant parts of the Republic will be brought within a few days' travel of the center; it is thus that the citizen of the West will read the news of Boston still moist from the press.

He said this in the vigor of his great intellect and when the illustrious authors of the Constitution, from whom he drew his lessons, still lived. I am aware that Mr. Calhoun afterward doubted the faith which he then promulgated and reasoned much in the other direction. But I point, sir, to another renowned example among the expounders of the Constitution. Daniel Webster, on the question of internal improvements in the States by the General Government, said—I use his own language—he "had not a particle of doubt as to the power of Congress." In a speech which he made in 1836 on the bill providing that the Government of the United States should purchase the private stock in the Louisville canal and hold and improve it as a medium of commerce, he went into the doctrine of the constitutionality of the measure, and he said upon that bill "he was a western man as he who was most western," and he would support it if it was simply a means of intercourse between and for the benefit of but two of the States of the Union, Indiana and Kentucky. He looked not to the locality but the magnitude of the object.

He said that the Government had just as much right to improve rivers or construct railroads for the purposes of commerce as it had to built forts, light-houses, or harbors on the seashore.

And I would say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN RANDOLPH TUCKER] that probably the first step ever taken in this country toward the regulation of commerce among the States and to establish a system to promote it was in the house of delegates of Virginia. In July, 1785, they adopted the following resolution. I commend the name that heads it to the honorable gentleman's memory:

> Resolved, That Edmund Randolph and others be appointed commissioners, who or any five of whom shall meet such commissioners as may be appointed by the other States in the Union, at a time and place to be agreed on, to take into consideration the trade of the United States, to examine the relative situation and trade of the said States, to consider how far a uniform system in their commercial regulations may be necessary to their common interest and their permanent harmony, and to report to the several States such an act relative to this great subject as, when unanimously ratified by them, will enable the United States in Congress assembled effectually to provide for the same. That the said commissioners shall immediately transmit to the several States copies of the preceding resolution with a circular letter requesting their concurrence therein and proposing a time and place for the meeting aforesaid.

But, sir, leaving the subject of commerce or internal improvements for discussion on some more fit occasion and coming to the immediate question before the committee, I am expected and I ought to give some reason for the right which Congress has to appropriate money or to take stock, if you please, in this enterprise My friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] went into an argument for a strict construction of the Constitution, and denied the power of Congress to do any such thing. I propose to follow him as briefly as possible. I desire to call his attention first to the preamble of the Constitution itself.

That preamble specifies in general terms the objects for which the Constitution was made. It reads:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

It was then as much the object of the Constitution or of its framers to "insure domestic tranquillity" or "promote the general welfare" as it was to "establish justice" or to "provide for the common defense" or to "secure the blessings of liberty," or, indeed, to "form a more perfect union." Who shall discriminate between these great objects of the Constitution, or say that the Government has less or more power to effect one than the other? Is not the obligation of the Government equally great in respect to all?

But we are not left to the preamble alone for authority. We find in the body of the Constitution itself. in the enumeration of the powers of Congress, that—

The Congress shall have powers to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

All will say that here is a specific power given to Congress to collect taxes to pay debts, and who shall say the power is not equally given to provide for the general welfare? The power is there; and the only question is how shall the general welfare be provided for, in what manner, and to what extent? I say it is for the Congress in its best wisdom to determine. Another of the enumerated powers is "to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures," but in what amount or denomination, whether of gold, silver, or copper, or how regulate weights and measures, is not specified. It is for Congress to determine. Another is "to establish post-offices and post-roads," but whether to build a house for a post-office costing a thousand dollars or a million it is not defined; it is left for Congress to determine. Another is "to declare war;" another, "to raise and support armies;" but the specific mode of making weapons of warfare or providing munitions of war, or how much money is to be appropriated for the purpose, is not described or stated. Another power is "to provide and maintain a navy," but there is no defined power to build a brig or man-of-war, at what cost or in what manner a navy shall be maintained. All these things follow the general power, and it is left for Congress to determine how they shall be provided.

Why, sir, how is it that Congress appropriates money to build great hospitals for the sick and wounded and aged soldiers and sailors of the Union? There is no definite power in the Constitution to build a hospital. How is it that Congress grants pensions and appropriates millions every year to pay them? The specific power is not in the Constitution; the word pension cannot be found in the instrument. How was it that even yesterday this House passed a bill giving a salary for life to a feeble and paralyzed judge, retiring him before the limitation in time fixed by law? I am aware that some of the commentators and the courts have based the exercise of such powers upon the idea or assumption of a debt owing such persons by the Government. But, sir, there is no authority in the Constitution for it; it is simply the discharge of implied duties and obligations arising under the general powers of the Constituton. No strict constructionist would deny or oppose such an exercise of power. How is it that the Government has bestowed charities and aided the distressed and afflicted at home and abroad? There is no distinct power in the Constitution to do any of these things. Sir, did the authors of that bond of government intend to forbid the Congress and the lawful authorities the exercise of the principles of charity and humanity or the power in certain contingencies or emergencies to "promote the general welfare" or "insure domestic tranquillity" even by the appropriation of money? If such had been the intention our Government could not have existed, and its grand proportions and appendages, its magnificent edifices, ornaments, and public improvements, and its humane and noble beneficence would not now command the respect and admiration of the world. Then I say, sir, that to "provide for the general welfare" is one of the enumerated powers of the Constitution, and then follows at the close of the section enumerating the powers of Congress this clause, namely:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Sir, if the authors of the Constitution had thought it necessary to give definite authority to perform all the acts and do all the things which they knew were indispensable to build up a great and benevolent government, they could have filled a book as large as the Holy Bible. They intended only to lay out a general plan and specify certain general powers from which would necessarily flow by implication or inference the authority to carry them out, and the Government has exercised this authority from its foundation to the present time. I am for strict construction as far as we can apply the rule, but to say that we can or ought under all circumstances adopt and apply any fixed rule of construction I utterly deny. It cannot be done in the nature of the case. Why, sir, suppose a storm from heaven should come to-morrow and desolate half the State of Virginia, level its dwellings to the dust, and send its people homeless, houseless, naked, and starving into the wilderness, and no help could come but from the Government, should we deny food and raiment to the children of the good old mother under a strict construction of the Constitution that we had no power to appropriate money for any such purpose? A good government is humane and charitable, and will take care of its people.

Mr. Calhoun said on one occasion "he was no advocate for refined arguments on the Constitution. The instrument was not intended as a thesis for the logician to exercise his ingenuity on."

Mr. Madison said as late as 1830:

In order to understand the true character of the Constitution of the United States the error, not uncommon, must be avoided of viewing it through the medium either of a consolidated government or of a confederated government, while it is neither the one nor the other, but a mixture of both. And having in no model the similitude and analogies applicable to other systems of government, it must, more than any other, be its own interpreter according to its text and the facts of the case.

There, sir, is the rule, "its text and the facts of the case." Under these and according to these it is reserved for Congress to use its best discretion and wisdom, and I apply these words of wisdom to the facts and circumstances before us and to the case under discussion.

I was surprised, Mr. Chairman, to hear at this day in our history the speech of the gentleman from Virginia, although it was able and eloquent, and has given him a high reputation. I rather regret that he made it; I do not think it will have a tendency to unite the democracy on this floor or have a good effect upon the country; and while I agree with him in much he said as to the structure and character of the Government, eet I do not entirely admit his conclusions. "Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur in illis."

I call myself a strict constructionist, and yet I am more liberal than formerly. It will hardly do now to preach precisely the same rigid doctrines of State rights which we did twenty years ago; we might stir up old feuds which would endanger the democratic unity, for we are composed of old whigs and democrats alike, and they have always differed on this subject. While we should guard with the utmost vigilance the rights of the States, it is perhaps not needful now that we should enter into learned disquisitions upon the confederate or national character of the Republic, whether it is based upon a compact or a constitution.

In my readings this morning I chanced upon a paragraph in the Lectures on Constitutional Law of a distinguished Virginian—Henry St. George Tucker—to his law class in the university of that State. I believe he was the father of the honorable gentleman. He spoke thus:

It is not then by artificial reasoning founded upon theory, but upon a careful survey of the language of the Constitution itself, that we are to interpret its powers and its obligations. We are to treat it as it purports on its face to be, as a Constitution of government; and we are to reject all other appellations and definitions of it, such as that it is a compact, especially as they may mislead us into false constructions and glosses, and can have no tendency to instruct us in its real objects.

The gentleman ought to claim this by inheritance, and I commend it to him as a precious legacy.

Let us all remember, especially after the experience of the last few years, and in this felicitous period of our history, the peculiar circumstances under which the Constitution was adopted, by what concessions and compromises, yielding local interests and prejudices for the general good and an enlarged patriotism. It would be well, Mr. Chairman, for us to ponder long and often the words of Washington, the president of the convention which framed the Constitution, in presenting it to the old Congress for adoption. He said:

It is obviously impracticable in the Federal Government of these States to secure all rights of independent sovereignty to each and yet provide for the interest and safety of all. Individuals entering into society must give up a share of liberty to preserve the rest. The magnitude of the sacrifice must depend as well on situation and circumstances as on the object to be obtained. It is at all times difficult to draw with precision the line between those rights which must be surrendered and those which may be reserved; and on the present occasion this difficulty was increased by a difference among the several States as to their situation, extent, habits, and particular interests. In all our deliberations on this subject we kept steadily in our view that which appears to us the greatest interest of every true American: the consolidation of our Union; in which are involved our prosperity, felicity, safety, perhaps our national existence. This important consideration seriously and deeply impressed on our minds, led each State in the convention to be less rigid on points of inferior magnitude than might have been otherwise expected, and thus the Constitution which we now present is the result of a spirit of amity and that mutual deference and concession which the peculiarity of our political situation rendered indispensable.

This, sir, was the spirit that animated the great and glorious authors of the Constitution. Let us try in its administration to follow their benign example. This too, sir, has been the spirit which influenced our greatest judges, from Chief Justices Marshall and Story down, in their most important decisions upon questions of national interests, whether of material or moral import. I have not time to cite them. The same spirit in the main also runs through the texts of the most distinguished commentators upon constitutional law. It is the pervading spirit in the emanations of our greatest lawyers, statesmen, and orators, and by none displayed with so much learning, ability, eloquence, and patriotism as the matchless Webster. It is the heart and soul of all his grand arguments and orations in the courts, in the Houses of Congress, or before vast multitudes of our countrymen.

I admit, sir, that the powers of the Constitution have often been misused and misapplied. The Congress has often most unwisely and criminally exercised its discretion in the discharge of its duties, but that does not affect the principle. The rights and privileges of that great instrument, like the blessings of God, are to be used and not abused. The only rule is a wise discretion.

Now, sir, as to the constitutional power of Congress to appropriate money to further and complete the preparations for the centennial celebration I have not a particle of doubt; I would put it even alone on the power to promote the "general welfare," whether that power may be considered express, implied, or residuary. But there is another view to take of this question. The Constitution, in defining the powers and duties of the President, says:

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, &c.

Now, sir, by act of Congress of June 5, 1874, the President was directed "to extend in the name of the United States a respectful and cordial invitation to the governments and other nations to be represented and take part in the international exposition to be held at Philadelphia under the auspices of the Government of the United States in the year 1876." The President accordingly extended that invitation to all the civilized nations and governments of the earth; and how many, sir, have already responded? We are told that England, France, Russia, Austria, Spain, Italy, China, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, the Netherlands, Portugal, Egypt, Turkey, Brazil, Peru, Bolivia, Chili, Hayti, Venezuela, Mexico, Ecuador, Nicaragua, Persia, Liberia, Siam, Guatemala and Salvador, Honduras, the United States of Colombia, the Argentine Confederation, Tunis, and the Orange Free States, and others, amounting to nearly forty in number, have accepted and appropriated large sums of money to have themselves properly represented with their arts, their skill and genius, their manufactures and productions, at this grand assembly of the nations.

Now, sir, this act on the part of our Government and its President is in the nature of a treaty, and imposes a corresponding obligation. That obligation is to see that the invitation thus extended and thus accepted shall be carried out and realized in a manner corresponding with and creditable to the wealth, the character, the grandeur, and glory of the United States of America. The honor, sir, of our Government is involved in this business, and we cannot disguise it. Your honor, sir, and my honor, and the honor of every Representative on this floor, is, in the true sense of pride and patriotism, involved in it. We cannot ignore it. Let us act for our country as under like circumstances we would act for ourselves. Who among us would slight his invited guest or tarnish the honor of his house by an unseemly and stinted feast?

No, sir; let the United States in this matter rise to the full measure of her majestic proportions and show the nations of the world who she is and what she is at home among her own people. Let us not be "penny wise and pound foolish." The money proposed to be appropriated will be nothing compared to the benefit received. Regarding it in the sense merely of profit and loss—which is perhaps too sordid to be thought of—it will be a speculation for our people. Millions will come in and be spent among them and but little will go out. It will increase the wealth of the whole community. But, sir, in a higher sense it will prove of the greatest importance to our people. It will be a great school of instruction and education, teaching both by theory and practical illustration in all the sciences and arts, and giving visible demonstration of all the productions of the earth and of the varied industrial pursuits of man.

It has been said that this is a local enterprise gotten up for the benefit of the city of Philadelphia. I regard it in no such light. The spirit of it is national. The acts of Congress have made it national. It rises from the very birth of our liberty and Union, and speaks to every heart in this broad land; it embodies the signers of the Declaration and the framers of the Constitution, and appeals to us their descendants to give it free scope and let it be glorified. It is true that the noble State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia have contributed great sums, which, together with other individual and State contributions, amount to nearly $5,000,000. They have already erected mighty and magnificent structures, covering immense spaces of ground and rising to the very skies in the most exquisite architectural beauty and grandeur. But we are assured that they must have more; they can give no more themselves; and unless the Government comes to the rescue the great exhibition will fail. Shall we allow it to fail or shall we make it more emphatically our own and national by laying the hand of the Government to the work that it may be carried to its full and complete proportions? These reasons alone, to my judgment, would seem sufficient for us to grant this appropriation.

But I said, sir, in the beginning, that I supported this measure in the interest of peace and unity among the people of the United States. That, with me, is the chief object. I know no way and can imagine none by which the "general welfare" can be promoted so efficiently, so appropriately, and so delightfully as this. It was indeed a happy conception, and our hundredth anniversary could have come at no time when it was more important to quiet the prejudices and still the passions and unite the hearts of our people than now. The great war through which we have passed and the consequent suffering have not done their perfect work. Something more is needed; "domestic tranquillity" and the "general welfare" have not been "insured and promoted." It behooves us to try another plan—the plan of peace and brotherhood.

Sir, if Adams and Jefferson, Hancock and Rutledge, had stood among us the other day and had witnessed the scene that occurred on this floor, they would have thought that something was yet necessary to promote the "general welfare." And can you imagine that they would have suggested anything more fit and becoming than the measure before us? They would have implored us to hesitate not in this work, but give money if necessary, and ample for the purpose of bringing the people of this great country together and producing harmony, friendship, and unity among them, that they might go on and raise still higher the fame of this land for wealth, skill in the arts, manufactures, and all productive industry; and for the accomplishment of these great objects they could have pointed us to no more appropriate occasion than the celebration of the birthday of American Independence on the very spot of its origin. I feel that their spirits are looking down upon us to-day and silently appealing to our hearts to approve this measure.

Sir, I have more confidence in the people than in their leaders. They have no object in keeping up the animosities and nursing the passions which the conduct of some of their Representatives in this House would indicate. They are purer in heart; they know their interest better, and they want peace. I believe their hearts and minds are in this centennial celebration. Why, sir, they talk of it day and night in their homes and families, and thousands are saving their hard-earned pennies to enable them and their children to go and behold this great exhibition, the wonder of all the earth; there, too, to meet their fellow-citizens from the North, the South, the East, and the West, to shake hands over the cradle of their liberties and resolve to part from the father's house no more forever. And I want every American citizen when he goes to that sacred spot to feel that he is not indebted alone to Pennsylvania or Philadelphia, or any other State or city, for his enjoyment there, but that its great preparations are his own, he in part having paid for them by the sweat of his own brow, and that the expense came from the common treasure of the people.

Why, sir, every orator of the country, every preacher of the gospel, every executive of a State for the last two years has been eloquently rejoicing in the coming glories of the grand centennial. The people everywhere are hailing it with acclamations of joy. Shall we not respect them and their wishes? Have we not seen within the last year the most convincing demonstrations of returning good-will and friendship among the people, both North and South; and shall we stop or stay for a moment this bright and limpid current that is sweeping the land? Look how the sons of Virginia and South Carolina, of Yorktown and Eutaw, were received by those of Lexington and Concord, of Boston and Bunker Hill. The son of the great Lee himself was taken as it were to the bosom of the people of Boston, and he and his friends, confederate soldiers and citizens, were feted and feasted. The women and the children came out to honor them; they threw evergreens in their paths and roses on their heads. They met the welcome of brothers. And look, sir, how the men of Mecklenburgh last May threw open their doors and their stores and invited the people of all sections to come and partake of their generous hospitality and celebrate with them the centennial anniversary of the declaration of their fathers, the first declaration of independence that saw the light on the shores of the new world. There was another common and glorious rejoicing. I love the Carolinas; born in one and reared in the other, I claim them both. Old North Carolina, my native State, God bless her!

> Though she envies not others their merited glory,
> Say, whose name stands the foremost in liberty's story?

Sir, let us not quench this fraternal spirit; let us promote it by giving the people this grand jubilee. It may be the food and the blood of life to the Republic. We have a large debt, it is true, and it is incumbent upon us to economize and retrench; but in this measure we bring about that fellowship and harmony which will enable us the better to accumulate wealth with which to pay the debt and move on to untold riches—riches in money, riches in knowledge, riches in wisdom, and riches in brotherly love. Let us make one more and signal effort to bind the sections together.

> Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more.

Mr. Calhoun aptly said on another question, but for a like purpose:

> But on the subject of national power what can be more important than a perfect unity in every part, in feelings and sentiments, and what can tend more powerfully to produce it than overcoming the effects of distance? Uninfluenced by any other consideration than love of country and duty, let us add this to the many useful measures already adopted. The money cannot be appropriated to a more exalted use. Every portion of the community—the farmer, mechanic, and merchant will feel its good effects, and—what is of the greatest importance, the strength of the community will be augmented and its political prosperity rendered more secure.

I make his words my own, and apply them to the measure under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I know that I differ with many of my political friends on this subject, and with perhaps every one of my own delegation in Congress. I yield to them, sir, the same conscientious convictions in the discharge of their duties which I claim for myself. But I must carry out my principles and my faith, "come what come may." I am willing to meet the people, and stand or fall by my own acts. I take the responsibility; and in the immortal language of John Adams, as he stood for the Declaration on the floor of Independence Hall, braving the judgment of the world but conscious of his own rectitude and in the fear of God, so I stand for the Centennial:

> Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, I give my hand and my heart to this vote.

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. C. H. JOYCE,

OF VERMONT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House is an important one, as is every measure which calls for an appropriation of money, and we should not pass it unless demanded by the most obvious reasons and urgent necessity. Personally, it would give me the greatest pleasure to vote for it, but a sense of duty to my constituents and the country overrides every personal consideration, and leaves me no choice but to stand up manfully for what I conceive to be the right. While I cannot consistently with my sense of duty support this measure, and while I would not celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Republic by a palpable and high-handed violation of the Constitution, I desire it to be distinctly understood that I am decidedly and heartily in favor of the celebration and exposition; that I fully realize and appreciate all its benefits and blessings, and will do all in my power personally, as I always have done, to aid and push forward to a successful result what I consider to be one of the most important and splendid schemes ever inaugurated in the history of this country or of the world.

I am not blind, sir, to the fact that the celebration of this anniversary of the Republic, "when colonial valor struck from the mailed breast-plate of English oppression the first living sparks of American liberty," has now become a subject of vital concern and absorbing interest to the people of this country.

Neither am I one of those who believe that if this appropriation is refused the centennial celebration will be a failure and a disgrace to this country. I believe the people will nobly finish what they have begun, complete all the arrangements for the grand opening in May, and lift and elevate this great jubilee above all local or sectional influences, give it a grand and universal character, and endow it, if possible, with the spirit and power of the new Republic.

This specious argument, that the whole scheme would sink in utter failure and disgrace unless Congress makes an appropriation, is familiar in this Hall; it was heard and seen here two years ago, dressed in eloquence, pathos, and entreaty; yet, since that time, more than one-half the money then asked for has been raised under the provisions of the charters, the buildings and grounds nearly completed; and there is no shadow of doubt in my mind that, if Congress refuses at this time, as it did then, to be led away from the plain and beaten path of duty and the spirit of the Constitution, the people will readily supply the means, as I believe they should do, all the arrangements will be completed in due season, and no disgrace will be brought upon them or dishonor upon the Government.

During the long and tedious debate to which we have listened, I have watched and waited hopefully, anxiously, but in vain, for some solid reason or valid and plausible excuse even to justify the granting of this bequest.

Day after day we have been promised this feast of reason by the friends of this measure, but it has as often vanished into thin air, their promises have been broken, and, instead of putting the bill upon its merits and supporting it by sound logic, convincing reasons, and vigorous arguments, gentlemen have, being aware of the untenable nature of the proposition, gone off in a burst of artificial patriotism and a whirlwind of passion, and when the dust and smoke, caused by each successive explosion, had cleared away we found that it was simply "sound and fury, signifying nothing;" that, like the gentleman from Indiana who attempted to navigate his inflation balloon through this House against an adverse current, they had gone "up like rockets but come down like sticks."

While I contend, therefore, that the friends of this measure have utterly and confessedly failed to adduce a good reason or present a single sound argument in favor of its passage, I propose in the briefest manner to assume the offensive and to state briefly some few of the many considerations which have led me to oppose this bill.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, while I have neither time nor disposition to enter into an extended argument upon this branch of the subject, I emphatically deny the doctrine that the Constitution either in letter or spirit authorizes Congress to make a gift or to loan money to any individual or corporation for any object or purpose whatever.

I am aware that it is claimed by learned gentlemen upon this floor that this appropriation is in no sense a gift or a loan; that it is not voted to any individual or corporation; but the act, although carefully if not artfully worded with a view evidently to escape this objection, conclusively refutes this false theory and expressly declares that this money is to be paid over in installments to the centennial board of finance for the purpose of completing the centennial buildings and other preparations.

By reference to the acts of 1871 and 1872, it will be seen that the board of centennial commissioners and the centennial board of finance were created by Congress with well-defined powers and duties, the scope and extent of which were well known, and under which organizations were duly effected and the work commenced and carried forward in the most vigorous and prudent manner to its present near completion.

Down to this time the Government has had no part or lot in the matter, has not sought or exercised the least control over it, and has on all occasions absolutely and in the most positive and emphatic manner refused to become in any way responsible for its conduct or liabilities.

Now, after all this has transpired, a bill is brought in, and supported by both democrats and republicans, asking Congress to vote a million and a half of dollars to the president and treasurer of the centennial board of finance to finish the buildings and complete all the preparations for the great exhibition; and we are coolly told by the friends and promoters of this appropriation that the Government has taken charge of the enterprise and ought to furnish the money; that because the Government has, at the request of these corporations, given out the invitations to this entertainment at its own expense, therefore it is bound to entertain those who come and pay all their expenses.

To those who are at all acquainted with the result of schemes and enterprises like this, it is well known that the effect of the passage of this bill would be to bind the Government, by implication at least, to close up the concern and liquidate all the outstanding debts and liabilities at the close of the exhibition.

To all this I most solemnly and earnestly object and protest, not only because it is, as I think, in direct and open violation of the Constitution, but because it is in opposition to the plainest dictates of a sound and healthy public policy.

I do not desire to become a party to such a transaction or to be instrumental in opening a gate and establishing a precedent which under a corrupt administration might drain the Treasury and bankrupt the Government.

We have been entertained here with quotations from every writer upon constitutional and national law, from Braxton to Story, with a view to convince the members of this House that they have authority to make this appropriation under the clause in the Constitution which empowers Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Such a proposition, it seems to me, needs only to be stated to reveal its utter fallacy and convince any intelligent and candid man that the provision of the Constitution referred to has no application to this bill, and gives no power to Congress to make gifts or to set the Government up as a stockholder in a private corporation.

If Congress has the power to vote this money because the exhibition is designed to, and very likely will, promote and stimulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, then Congress may charter fairs and agricultural shows in every county in the Union, and appropriate the necessary money to carry them on.

The theory advanced that the money appropriated by this bill is to carry into effect a treaty or compact made by Congress or the Executive with those nations who have accepted invitations to be present at the exhibition hardly admits of serious consideration; and, while it rouses our mirth at its exceeding thinness, it at the same time excites our wonder that any man should bring himself to believe such a palpable and supreme humbug; and it seems to me that nothing but the most intense desire to be original and independent could have hatched out such a theory in the brain of any sane and reasonable man. Besides, it is not true in point of fact that Congress or the Executive ever made or attempted to make any compact or treaty with respect to the Centennial with any foreign nation or anybody else.

Congress merely chartered these two corporations, gave them full and plenary powers and privileges to perform all the acts and carry out all the objects of their creation; and the Government is no more liable for their acts or their debts than it is for those of a railroad or insurance company which it has chartered.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the record shows that these charters were passed by Congress under the most solemn and positive assurances on the part of those who sought them that the Government should never be called upon in any event to pay one dollar or be asked to become in any way liable for the debts or losses of these corporations. And so confident were these men at that time that they should raise all the funds desired and never call upon the Government, that they incorporated, on their own motion, this solemn promise into both the act of 1871 and of 1872, and relying upon these assurances Congress finally with great reluctance consented to give them their charters.

This reluctance and hesitation on the part of Congress grew out of a fear that the very state of facts which now exists would transpire, and that Congress would eventually be called upon to pay large sums of money, under the plea that is now set up and urged by the advocates of this measure, that unless the Government comes to the rescue the whole scheme will fail and the Republic be disgraced and dishonored.

After what took place at the time these charters were granted and what has since transpired, I can hardly conceive how the friends of this measure can now stand up here and ask Congress to give them a million and a half of dollars of the people's money, in the face and eyes of their own solemn assurances that all they asked was the charters, and that the Government should never be called upon, either directly or indirectly, to pay a single dollar.

But, Mr. Chairman, outside of all constitutional questions and scruples, there are reasons which are conclusive to my mind, and which alone would have determined me to vote against this appropriation.

In 1873 a financial simoom swept over this country, destroying our commerce, prostrating our business, paralyzing our industries, and driving our importers, merchants, and manufacturers into bankruptcy and ruin.

The primeval cause of this terrible disaster was a depreciated and fluctuating paper currency, which had led the people into all sorts of wild schemes and reckless speculations; and the victims heeded no voice of warning, until destruction came as a whirlwind, and the groans of the people filled the whole land.

From 1873 down to the present time the people of this country have bent every effort and strained every nerve to the work of repairing damages, the collection and gathering together of their scattered resources, and the building up of the business and industries of the nation; but under the terrible incubus of rag money and fluctuating values they have made but slow progress, and to-day the wail comes up from every section of the Republic that business is depressed and languishing; that the wheels are stopped at the mills, the fires are extinguished at the forges, that thousands of men are out of employment and their wives and children suffering for bread. And in addition to this the Administration is putting ingenuity and economy to the rack to devise means to meet our just and pressing obligations and keep the machinery of the Government in operation. And more than all this, I know that many of the people who sent me here to guard their interests and labor for their welfare are at this very moment groaning under a load of taxes, State, town, and village, which is grinding them down to the very earth, and testing their strength and courage to the utmost to survive the storm and save themselves from bankruptcy. It is because I know them, and know the crushing difficulties and burdens under which they are now struggling with desperate hope and courage, that I earnestly and emphatically give my voice and my vote against adding to their burdens or increasing their distress.

Mr. Chairman, the people of Vermont are a law-abiding, Constitution-loving, prudent, and economical people; they are in favor of frugality, and opposed to all schemes of speculation at the expense of the national Treasury, and the voting of gifts and subsidies to individuals or corporations; but, sir, in the future, as in the past, if the integrity of the Republic and the honor of the flag shall require every dollar of their substance and the last drop of their blood, the sacrifice will be ready at the appointed time. Now, Mr. Chairman, while I oppose this bill because I seriously question the constitutional power of Congress to pass it, and because I am firmly convinced that it is inexpedient to do so at this time, I believe I hazard nothing when I pledge you my word that the people of Vermont will be at that exhibition, and that all her grand interests will be fully represented; that her citizens are ready and anxious to do their full share in this great enterprise, and that private energy will gladly furnish all the facilities which may be required to place her in honorable competition with her sister States and the world in that magnificent exposition.

No people can join in this great national festival with more spirit and pride than the people of Vermont, for none did more to make possible this celebration, and none can bring richer or purer offerings to this exhibition. In the great struggle we are now seeking to commemorate, Allen, at the head of her gallant sons, made the first aggressive assault upon the forces of the Crown, cut off every shadow of hope for reconciliation, and paved the way for the Declaration of Independence and the surrender of a proud and arrogant foe at Saratoga and Yorktown. Ay, sir, among her green hills and gleaming valleys dwell a people to-day who are the best illustration on earth of the ennobling and sublime effects of the doctrine of that immortal Declaration which the world will gather together in 1876 to celebrate.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another view which I desire to take of this matter, which, it seems to me, will be both amusing and instructive, and will show why we ought not to grant this appropriation From the moment we entered this Hall, at the commencement of the present session down to this time, our ears have been filled with the trumpet tones of the dominant party upon this floor proclaiming retrenchment and reform.

A brief and cursory review of their acts during that time will attest the absolute insincerity of their motives and the hollow hypocrisy with which they have deceived the people and stolen into power. They proclaimed that they would purify the turbid streams of national power, reform existing abuses, squander no more of the national treasure, and cut down the extravagant expenditures of the Government. The objects are noble and worthy the best efforts of patriotic men; but how do they propose to accomplish this work and bring about this grand result?

We are told that they intend to reduce the Army and leave our frontier settlements exposed to the incursions of marauders and hostile savages; that the Navy is to be shorn of its strength and its glory, and our commerce, in case of war, be left to the protection and tender mercies of our enemies; that the already scanty pay of our learned professors and brave boys at West Point and the maimed and wounded soldiers who are serving as clerks and employés in the different Departments of the Government is to be reduced by these retrenchers to the starvation standard, and all the money they can save in this way is to be appropriated to the building and beautifying of the grounds and centennial palaces at Philadelphia and paying the expenses of this great national exhibition.

No man, sir, will go further than I will in all reasonable and proper retrenchment of the expenditures of the Government and in compelling an honest administration of public affairs; but, sir, I am earnestly and conscientiously opposed to doing it in the way proposed by these gentlemen or beginning where they propose to; and in the name of our brave Army, our gallant Navy, our noble boys at West Point, our faithful and efficient clerks and employés in all the Departments of the Government, the laboring and toiling people of our whole country, the thousands of honest, industrious men who are now seeking employment and finding none, and their suffering and starving wives and children, I protest against such retrenchment and against this appropriation.

Again, Mr. Chairman, what have these reformers and retrenchers been doing in another direction? I put them upon the stand and demand an answer. We have been here in session since the 5th of December, and I ask these gentlemen what they have to show for two months' work, during every moment of which they have been spending the people's money, drawing their salaries, and wasting the time which honestly belonged to their constituents.

They adjourned over the holidays, losing two whole weeks, during which time they ought to have been perfecting and maturing the appropriation bills; and if they had, every one of them might have been disposed of by this time and the attention of Congress directed to relieving the distresses of the people and reviving the depressed and languishing business and industries of the country. And in that way a few hours might have been spared to the humane and patriotic work of preparing and passing some act which would give pensions to hundreds of disabled Union soldiers who ought to have drawn them long ago, but have been shut out either by some technical defect in the present laws or too much red tape in the Departments.

Let us, Mr. Chairman, "be just before we are generous;" let us pay our honest debts, relieve the needy and destitute, and do something to lift the dark cloud of gloom and bankruptcy from the people before we run wild with gushing sentimentality or borrow money with which to erect palaces or make magnificent donations.

If the democratic party are really honest, and desire to show the people that they are sincere in their promises to relieve them of their burdens and infuse life and vitality into the material interests of the country, now gasping in the agonies of dissolution, why have they not made haste long ere this to take an advance step toward a sound currency and specie payments in the direction of the act of last session, and thus give an impetus to trade and commerce, break the clouds which cover us with their dark folds, and prove to the country that they are not hypocrites, instead of giving away a million and a half of the people's money and wasting the time of Congress in an attempt to elect Jefferson Davis to the United States Senate, convince the country that Webster never replied to Hayne, that we have had no civil war, and that the accursed dogma of States-rights still exists in all its strength and ugly deformity?

They have the majority upon this floor, and can go on in the reckless expenditure of the public money and waste of time; they can pass this bill and add still more weight to the burdens of a struggling and suffering people; but know ye that for all these things you will be brought into judgment. The great day of assize is at hand when you must stand before the judgment-seat of the American people to answer for the deeds done and left undone during the present session of this Congress. Before that august tribunal no dilatory pleas or dissembling excuses will avail; the secrets and intents of every democratic heart will be revealed and made known, and only those who have been true to their trust and kept the faith in its integrity and purity will receive the crown of approval, the diadem of honor, and the scepter of power.

What will the people of this country, and of the world, say of a party that celebrates its entrance into power by the adoption of a resolution declaring—

> That in the judgment of this House, in the present condition of the financial affairs of the Government, no subsidies in money, bonds, public lands, indorsements, or by pledge of the public credit, should be granted by Congress to associations or corporations engaged or proposing to engage in public or private enterprises; and that all appropriations from the public Treasury ought to be limited at this time to such amounts only as shall be imperatively demanded by the public service, and then in a few short weeks lends its power to a corporation to draw from the public Treasury one and a half millions of the people's hard-earned money, every cent of which must be made up by taxes wrung from those already sorely burdened, or the robbery of honest labor?

In view of the considerations I have mentioned, and the additional fact that we have now a national debt of over $2,000,000,000, which is hanging like a mill-stone about our necks, and which is every hour crippling our energies and draining the country of gold, and will in the end I fear bankrupt the Republic unless it is funded and the way prepared for specie payments, I am entirely willing to take the responsibility and vote against this bill, and I most heartily wish that every republican upon this floor would go and do likewise.

But, Mr. Chairman, while I am driven and compelled by an imperative sense of duty to oppose this measure, I still have the fullest confidence and most abiding faith that the celebration and exhibition will prove a great and glorious success.

When it shall be known that Congress has for the reasons I have set forth refused to become a member of these joint-stock companies or liable for their debts, those more directly interested will go to work and raise all the funds which may be needed or required, and the grand jubilee will be in truth what it ought and was designed to be in the outset, the great free-will offering of the people. Let them manage it and take the responsibility, as they desire to, and there will be no danger of failure or disgrace. They have not petitioned you for a dollar and have never asked you for an appropriation. They fully appreciate the importance and realize the benefits and blessings of the great enterprise in which they are engaged, and will, if permitted, on that grand and august occasion prove to the world that a hundred years have not chilled the patriotism or stifled the love of liberty which flashed forth when on the morning of July 4, 1776, the old bell upon Independence Hall proclaimed "liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. W. W. WILSHIRE,

OF ARKANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. WILSHIRE. Mr. Chairman, as one of the Representatives of the State of Arkansas, I feel it to be my duty to my people on this occasion to express my views and what I think they will approve of. Though my State has recently been the cause of considerable anxiety in political circles, and her people were regarded by some as disloyal to the Government of the United States, having no care for its perpetuity, no pride in its future greatness, and felt no interest in its institutions, I am proud to assert on this floor that since that State has been fully restored to her relations in the Union, equal with the other States, there is no State in the Union whose people are more loyal and devoted to the Government than those of Arkansas. And notwithstanding the withering blight imposed upon her by the misrule of the past few years, and her impoverished condition, her Legislature recently appropriated a sufficient sum of money to amply provide for her people being fully represented at the centennial exhibition. I think I hazard nothing in saying that the people of Arkansas almost unanimously approve of this national celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the day on which the glad tidings of liberty and free government were first heralded to the anxious people of the American Colonies. I shall favor the bill in its present form, if it cannot be amended, though I would much prefer to strike out that proviso which is intended to constitute the Government a stockholder to the extent of this appropriation. I will but briefly state my reasons for this preference.

Mr. Chairman, it is thought by some who favor this appropriation that it will finally cost the Government nothing, because the net proceeds of the exhibition will be large, and the provision contained in this bill entitling the Government to participate in those proceeds will re-imburse it for any money advanced.

This may or may not be true; it makes no difference to me whether it is or not. If, as has been said on this floor, the chief considerations moving the friends of the appropriation are to secure one grand centennial celebration of American Independence, and thereby bring together the people of all sections where they can blot out the last vestige of past differences, erect anew the altar of liberty upon which to rekindle the patriotic fires of the Revolution and consume the "bloody shirt" and the tales of horror that are still held up and dilated upon by designing politicians to arouse the temper and inflame the passions of the people both North and South, then, sir, it should be an unconditional appropriation, a free-will offering in the interest of harmony, unity, and the love of country. Besides, it does not comport with the dignity of a great Government like ours to become a stockholder, and a minority one at that, in a joint-stock company or corporation. I am quite sure the people, who are always right, when they understand it will not only indorse the appropriation but approve its being made without conditions.

It has been urged in opposing the bill that Congress does not possess the constitutional power to make such an appropriation. In this I do not agree with the learned gentlemen who have so ingeniously and with so much ability discussed that proposition. The old strict-construction doctrine of the democratic party has, I think, been somewhat modified by the determination of the questions involved in and settled by the late great American civil war; for I understand that all the political parties of this country recognize as valid that great debt now hanging over the people, and created in the suppression of the rebellion, under that provision of the Constitution conferring power on Congress to "provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," and each of the great political parties of the country stands pledged to its faithful discharge. Now, if Congress had the power under the Constitution to create this debt and appropriate money to carry on that war, then I must confess my inability to see any valid objections, on constitutional or other grounds, to appropriating the sum of $1,500,000 to contribute to the success of this the grandest of all events that can ever happen to heal the differences between and fraternize those who in that civil strife were opposed to each other.

I have yet to hear in this discussion one word to negative the proposition that this centennial exhibition, if a success, and generally participated in by the people of all the States, will do more to heal the still festering wounds produced by our late internicine war than anything that has yet been proposed. I am confident in the belief that if this Congress will lend the aid that is asked the exhibition will be grandly successful and incalculable good to the whole country result from it, peace and fraternal feeling be restored, and our Government, with a united people, enter upon its second century with the most happy and glorious prospects for the future.

The grand central principle of all civil government is that government is established among men to promote the security, peace, and happiness of the people governed, and is prior in existence to a written constitution which is only intended to sanctify and confirm the same.

Sir, there is a thought comes to me in discussing this question of appropriation which rises higher and enters into more sacred precincts than any constitutional question yet discussed upon this floor, and it is this: That by granting it we promote the happiness of all the people of the whole United States, particularly those once confronting each other under arms, by bringing them together upon the sacred spot where, under the providence of God, a new, free, and independent nation was born one hundred years before, possessing the largest possible power of securing the happiness and general welfare of the whole people. There let the victor in battle exhibit his discarded engines of war, freshly molded into labor-saving machinery, side by side with the vanquished, with his samples of fleecy product cultivated by free men upon the broad fields of dethroned King Cotton, there, under the benign influences of the glittering stars and dazzling stripes of our nation's emblem, to unite in rejoicing over the triumph of the patriotic efforts of our revolutionary fathers in establishing American independence and freedom; and within the sound of that old bell, still hanging in Independence Hall, the tone of which gave the first announcement of the signing of the Declaration of American Independence, to pledge anew their faith in our Government and their determination to maintain it. To secure this end and to restore to its fullest extent a fraternal feeling among the people of all sections of our common country is to my mind a duty rising pre-emminently by above all other considerations.

In discussing the constitutionality of this appropriation the arguments of some gentlemen have taken a very broad range, so that were not the printed bill before us we might conclude that the proposed measure was to alter, amend, or abolish the Constitution altogether, instead of the harmless proposition to cement and strengthen that which is over and above all constitutions—humanity, brotherly love, and fraternal feeling.

So far as the feelings and desires of the people are concerned, I can only speak for my own State, Arkansas, and in doing that I am proud to say for them that from Maine to California, from the Canadas to the Gulf of Mexico, a more loyal and devoted people to the Government of the United States cannot be found. They are proud of its flag, proud of its institutions, and proud of the patriotism that inspired the movers in getting up the centennial celebration of our national existence, and on that occasion will exhibit a feeling of patriotism and devotion to our General Government that will challenge the admiration of the most enthusiastic admirers of American institutions.

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. LUCIEN B. CASWELL,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, so much discussion has already been had upon this measure that I do not feel justified in detaining the House but a moment. I intend to vote for this appropriation, and it is but right that I give my reasons for it. This, sir, is a question which affects the nation both at home and abroad. Its credit, its honor, its opportunity, are now at stake. So are the interests of every American citizen. We have lived one hundred years. We have been tried in war and in peace, and found, I trust, equal to the emergency. There is wanting only the grand reception which awaits us at the Centennial. That occasion will not be for a few, for any chosen number. It will be for all the world. We have invited the nations of the earth to visit us and examine our fabrics and products and bring with them whatever they may think will successfully compete with ours. This we do in the interests of labor, skill, and industry; we do it in the interests of trade and commerce, and to invite immigration to this country. But we are told at the threshold that Congress has not the constitutional power to make the appropriation, that we are not permitted to put our house in order for the invited guests and give shelter to the wares which they may bring with them, Why, sir, this strained construction of the Constitution would extinguish half the life and glory of the Republic. It would paralyze and cut off the great arteries of commerce and destroy our usefulness.

I do not, sir, believe in any such construction. Why need we a constitution if it is but an obstruction in the great paths of intelligent progress? That constitution is the best which is the broadest in the interests of labor and enterprise, meeting all the wants of the people. And what greater and nobler enterprise can there be than that of celebrating the events which gave us life? What could better revive the love of our country, again united; what better kindle anew the patriotism and cement the great interests of society? My State, sir, is remote from the place of this exhibition; it is equally remote from the spot where the fires of our liberty were first kindled; but we are none the less patriotic, and love that liberty none the less, nor are we indifferent as to the good name and the honor of our country which is so much involved in this celebration. We are sensible of this fact, that, though thousands of miles apart, achievements since we have lived have made us near neighbors, and we can talk together as one family.

We should not be wanting in hospitality to those whom we have invited; we should not hesitate to add whatever money may be necessary to complete this the cap-stone of the column which in history will mark the centennial year of our great and good country.

Now, sir, this is all I have to say. I support this bill because I believe it is right.

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. B. T. EAMES,

OF RHODE ISLAND,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. EAMES. Mr. Chairman, the appropriate celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Republic is an event of great interest to the American people.

The principles of a free government announced when the Colonies severed their political relations with Great Britain have been on trial in this country for nearly a century, and the result has been to demonstrate that a government of the people is the strongest and best form of civil government, not only in securing life, liberty, and property, but also in developing the material resources of a people and in promoting their welfare in their social and political relations.

Under this form of government during the first hundred years of the Republic life has been safe, property has been protected, and constitutional liberty, after a terrible struggle, has been maintained and preserved. No people under any form of government has been better protected in these respects, and no country in any age during a like period has developed to such a remarkable extent its material resources.

The area of the Republic has been extended from 800,000 to 3,000,000 square miles. Its population has increased from 3,000,000 to upward of 40,000,000. Its wealth has accumulated to such a marvelous extent that its annual product now is nearly or quite equal to its entire wealth then, and the advances which have been made in agriculture and in the mechanical and manufacturing arts, and in commerce upon land by rail, and upon the rivers and ocean by steam, are without a parallel or precedent in the history of the world.

In this condition of the growth and prosperity of the Republic in the first century of its existence the question is presented whether on its hundredth natal day it is proper for the Government of the United States to participate in and contribute toward the expense of a national centennial celebration which will be worthy of the grand event which such celebration is intended to commemorate. All agree that this event ought to be appropriately observed. All agree that the celebration should be national in its character.

Some doubt whether it should be international. But these questions have been disposed of. A celebration national and international to be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States to which invitations have been extended to and accepted by foreign nations has been determined by the acts of Congress and what has been done under and in pursuance of them. It is true that the original purpose was that no expense should be incurred by the General Government. It was supposed that there would be no occasion to apply to the General Government for aid. But the plans proposed in good faith by those having this enterprise in charge to raise the necessary amount of money by voluntary subscription or the sale of stock have not been successful, and hence the necessity of the present application to prevent a failure after the honor of the nation has been pledged for its success.

It is practically of no consequence how this necessity has arisen. The fact exists, and there is no reason why the Government should not make its contribution toward the success of an exhibition commemorative of the centennial of the Republic.

Heretofore as the birthday of the Republic in the rolling years of the century has occurred every village, hamlet, and city within the Republic has welcomed its return with appropriate ceremonies and has cheerfully appropriated the money which was necessary to properly commemorate the day and the event.

A hundred years in the life of the Republic has nearly passed, a longer period than any other like government has ever withstood the shock of time, and it is eminently proper it seems to me that the whole people should at such a time unite in its celebration, and that such appropriation from the general Treasury should be made as may be required for a national celebration appropriate to and worthy of this great event in the life of the nation.

There can be no reasonable doubt of the right of Congress to make this appropriation.

The precedents in the same direction are numerous. If appropriations may be made for scientific observations upon the transit of Venus, for polar expeditions in search of the northwest passage, and especially if, as has been done, appropriations from the Treasury may be made in aid of foreign expositions, at London, Paris, and Vienna, it ought, it would seem, to settle the question not only of the right but of the propriety of an appropriation for an international exhibition within the limits of our own country.

The real objection to this appropriation is the present condition of the National Treasury and the financial condition of the country.

The national debt is enormous, the burdens of taxation are great, and the industries of the country are depressed. But if the debt is great, the wealth of the country is sufficient ultimately to meet and discharge it; if the taxes are onerous and the business interests of the country depressed, it is only for the time. The debt has been greatly diminished and the taxes have been largely reduced, and the return of business prosperity is sure at no distant day to succeed the present depression.

The amount of this appropriation compared with the wealth and population of the country is not large. It is necessary to have that amount in order to insure success.

In giving my vote for the appropriation I feel sure that I shall fairly express the sentiment of the intelligent constituency which I here represent. The time, the hundredth birthday of the Republic; the place, where was first promulgated to the world the great principles of constitutional liberty which underlie and support a free government; and the occasion, the exhibition to the world of the progress of a free government in the first century of its existence in comparison and contrast with that of older nations under different forms of government, alike justify if they do not imperitively demand that the appropriation should be made. And if made, I feel confident that the action of Congress in that respect will meet very generally with the approval of the American people.

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. T. W. BENNETT,

OF IDAHO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am well convinced that nothing new can be said upon the subject now under consideration after the exhaustive discussion of more than a week; yet, sir, I desire to say a word for a people not often heard upon this floor. The people of the Territory of Idaho, whom I have the honor to represent, live so far away, so near that point on the American continent where the old "star of empire" on its way westward from the Atlantic meets the new "star of empire" on its way eastward from the Pacific, that they are scarcely ever heard in the discussion of great national questions like the one now before the House. The people of that Territory, like those of the other Territories, belong to that grand army of pioneers who, forsaking the lazy ease of the old home, have crossed the great plains and climbed the mighty mountains of that vast land toward the setting sun, blazing the road over which "westward the course of empire takes its way," and adding day by day new States to the Union and new stars to its flag. Living among their great mountains and in their beautiful valleys, engaged in their noble work of civilization and development, they are incapable of any other than broad, national, liberal, and patriotic ideas, and consequently they are unanimous for every measure that tends to the success of the great American Centennial.

They give such a measure as this their support, because they know that the enterprise is not a mere local one, but a great national affair, appealing to the pride, patriotism, and honor of every citizen.

Sir, this centennial exhibition was inaugurated by the national Congress and its officers appointed by the Executive of the nation, and is, to all intents and purposes, an affair of the nation. Upon the solemn authority of Congress the President has invited the civilized world as guests, and the invitation has been formally accepted in the spirit in which it was tendered—that in every way, in every aspect of the movement, it was to be a national feast spread by one great government and to which all others were to be invited—a national host, a national invitation, national guests, and a national feast. By refusing now to contribute national aid to its success is to disown the enterprise and stand before the nations of the earth disgraced and dishonored.

The people of the Territories are for this measure, because they believe that the centennial occasion will afford them an opportunity to exhibit to the world evidences of the vast resources that lie undeveloped amid their mountains and their valleys. The people of Idaho are now preparing and will exhibit at Philadelphia indisputable evidence that in that Territory alone there is to-day, seamed all through the bosoms of her mountains and glittering among the sands of her valleys, awaiting only labor and capital, enough of the precious metals to liquidate the national debt and pay all expenses of future centennials. Thus we hope to induce emigration to our borders.

Sir, I believe that if this Government desires to rid itself of the incubus of hard times and bring prosperity to the people, the true policy is to foster and encourage the settlement and development of that great country. If the millions and millions of poor people who are crowding our great cities and scattered throughout the populous States of the East, out of employment, and recruiting the ranks of the vicious and the helpless, could be induced to seek homes and employment in that almost untouched region, many of the great questions that so disturb the people and perplex the statesman would at once be solved. The labor question would be settled, for instead of the starvation, the discontent, and the mobs that now disgrace the country, the men who earn their bread by labor could in that land of promise find everywhere employment pleasant, profitable, and ennobling. They could there compel the mountains to yield up treasures more valuable than fairy tale ever told of, and on more than a thousand hills herd cattle more numerous than Jacob ever dreamed of, and fatter even than the picture so wittily drawn of the Texas cattle by the venerable and eloquent gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] Such a policy would at once make easy the way to financial success, for all that is needed is plenty of specie, and there it lies in sight in the mountains of Idaho, only awaiting labor to go up and possess it. We believe that our display at the Centennial will awaken an interest in this great question, and set toward us a tide of immigration healthful to us and to the country.

Another object of this Centennial, and one which I believe to be more important than all, is the opportunity it will afford the people of all sections of this country to become better acquainted with each other, and thereby engender and perpetuate a feeling of fraternal love and patriotism. I am aware that this idea has been sneered at in this discussion. No intelligent man in this House or in the country can doubt that there are men North, South, East, and West who do not desire that the people of the late imbittered sections shall live together in peace and quiet. It is well known that in all sections there are men who for party ends would and do rejoice at every word and every act that tends to disturb the harmony of the people, and to prevent that universal love and confidence that must exist among us if we would preserve and transmit this glorious Union and its free institutions.

I fear we are not all willing to bury forever all the hate, all the bitter memories of a terrible war, and begin anew in the spirit of our fathers, with loving, trusting hearts, to move forward in the great pathway of the future. I fear some of our statesmen are not looking in the direction of peace and fraternal good will, but are rather laboring in the direction of mere party purposes and party advantages. Instead of pictures of the great future before us, our attention is sought to be turned backward across the bloody pathway we trod and toward the dark clouds that hung over our imperiled and battle-torn country, that we may gaze upon the horrid specters of war and scent the stench that comes up from a fratricidal slaughter.

Mr. Chairman, I have followed the great head of the republican party in his civil administration of this Government as I followed him during the long years of war; and, as I never faltered in my admiration of him as a soldier, so I have never wavered in my support of him as a statesman. And in my judgment he never displayed his soldierly character to better advantage than when, receiving the surrender at Appomattox of an army which Napoleon would have been proud to command, he in his plain, unostentatious way told them only to go to their homes and be good citizens, and they should be unmolested. And he never as a statesman penned a more patriotic or practical suggestion than when, in one of his messages to Congress, he urgently recommended universal amnesty.

I have, perhaps, no right to speak as a politician or a statesman, for I have no claims to either; but, sir, there is a character in which I have a right to speak on this floor and on every spot where the flag of my country floats. I was a Union soldier, and followed the "banner of beauty and glory" from the early spring of 1861 to the closing hours of 1865. In that character I speak not of party success nor party interests, but I tell the politicians and the country that the Union soldiers want no more war. War may do for those who are valiant just before and just after the conflict, for those who grow rich on the opportunities afforded, those who get more bonds than scalps for trophies, more offices than scars for mementoes, and who are more than willing to sacrifice all their wives' relations on the battle-field. But, sir, in the name of the soldiers North and South, the men who did once and would again have the fighting to do, I protest against every word, every measure, and every act that tends to irritate and keep open the wounds that must heal, and heal soon and forever, if we would preserve and transmit to posterity this great Republic of ours.

It may be of great importance to secure the success of party, but it is infinitely of more importance that every vestige of sectional strife and ill-will should now be blotted out forever.

I hope one great lesson at least will be taught in this centennial year: that is, that no party can succeed in the coming contest which bases itself upon any sectional ideas. Secession, State-rights, strict construction, slavery, human inequality, and rebellion are dead and damned, and all efforts to revive them or to keep before the people the horrors, the hates, the bitterness of the strife in which they went down will meet with the overwhelming rebuke of a brave and magnanimous people resolved to live in peace, harmony, and love. One sovereign nation, one flag, universal freedom and equality, universal amnesty, universal love, and universal peace are the living, guiding sentiments of the people in this year of jubilee.

Soldiers of the country, Union and confederate, you who wore the blue and you who wore the gray, let us go to Philadelphia, and there, under the shadow of the old flag, as it floats over the Cradle of Liberty, talk over these things as we always do when left to ourselves. We on the Union side want to take our former enemies by the hands, and tell them that one of the proudest reflections in the hour of victory was that our enemy was as brave as ourselves. We want to tell them that, while we never can love the cause they lost nor the flag they followed, we do love them as citizens of this great country of ours. We want to tell them that, while we believe we were right and they were wrong, yet we recognize the fact that they were equally earnest, equally conscientious as we, for we know that no soldiers ever fought more bravely, and only those who believe their cause to be just can be so brave. We want to show them that in restoring them to citizenship in this Republic we shall not mar the sublimity of that unparalleled act by taunts and jeers, and by reviving the bitter memories of our and their strifes. Rather will we forget all of that terrible war except the lessons it taught, the country it saved, and the heroic deeds of valor and devotion performed by both sides, so that the same history that records our triumphs shall do justice to the gallantry and sublime courage of our enemy.

All along the Potomac, the Rapidan, the Shenandoah, the Cumberland, the Tennessee, the great father of waters, on the mountain tops, in the valleys, and beneath the waters of the gulf and the ocean sleep together our fallen comrades on either side, and to-day from their spirit homes beyond the stars they admonish us to live in peace and fraternal Union.

On fame's eternal camping-ground
Their silent tents are spread,
Whilst glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

And in this connection I may be allowed to say that the real Union soldiers are not a part of that suffering army of patriots whose highest ambition is to hold a subordinate position around this Hall and for whose melancholy fate of removal resolutions of sympathy and condolence are heard. No, sir, the real soldiers are scattered over this broad land, in the workshops, on the farms, and amid all the great industries of the country, and need no congressional resolutions to commend them to the consideration of their countrymen. They are their own recommendation. They are neither seeking official pensions nor courting political martyrdom.

I hope to see every soldier in this House vote for this centennial bill. These constitutional objections are only the temporary expedients of its enemies. Such objections have always been made when the Government has sought to save its life or its honor. We were once told that it was unconstitutional to suppress a rebellion, to raise armies, to issue money, to do anything but submit to defeat, humiliation, and ruin. Had such arguments prevailed then we would have had no need of a Centennial now, for our glorious Republic would never have seen its hundredth anniversary. Neither is this a question of economy; it rises higher and above that. Pass this bill, perform this act of patriotism and duty, and let us have such a grand jubilee in 1876 as will send the fragrance of its glory and its good down to 1976, as the blessings of our fathers came down to us from 1776. If your constituents find fault with you, resign and give them an opportunity to fill your places with men

With souls so dead,
Who to themselves have never said
This is our own, our native land.

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. J. H. BAGLEY, JR.,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to enter my protest against this appropriation, and shall occupy the time of the House but a moment, as I am satisfied there can be but little added to the forcible arguments presented in opposition to the measure, and will call attention to but one of the arguments adduced in its favor. Gentlemen have been pleased to make figures, computing the amount each individual in the land would have to donate to pay these $1,500,000. Their mathematical minds have discovered that the cost will be but three and a half cents or thereabouts to each person. Truly, they exclaim, what a paltry sum! Who so mean, so sordid, as not to acquiesce in a measure requiring so small an outlay?

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that this does not sound like the language of business men, of prudent men, and, it is fair to say, of statesmen. It is the language of the prodigal, who, possessed, as he thinks, of an ample fortune, excuses each expenditure with the reflection that it is but a trifle. Let the gentlemen prove the sum by multiplying forty millions by three and the fraction, and what do they get? Why, $1,500,000! Why, sir, when we return to specie payments, (and it is hoped we may soon,) I should like to have one of these gentlemen who talk so glibly about three and a half cents count the amount in silver dollars. Allowing him to count one hundred and twenty per minute, and working four hours per day, as some of us have been working here so hard for several days on this question, it would take him with his nimble mind and fingers fifty-three days! It may be said that this is trivial and undignified. In reply, I would say that it is as fair a subject for computation as the three-and-a-half-cent problem. One million five hundred thousand dollars! a mere bagatelle, a mere pittance! Why, Mr. Chairman, suppose this bill had called for one hundred millions. That would be but $2.50 per head; and what is that amount to any of us? We can at any time spend it for comforts for the inner or the outer man and not feel its loss. But, sir, when we consider millions it is a very different thing. This question cannot be belittled by talking about three and a half cents per capita. We must look at the amount in the aggregate. Why, sir, $55 per head would cancel the national debt, and since we are in the line of appropriations why not appropriate twenty-two hundred millions at once, and pay the debt? It is not a large amount for each individual, and surely great and glorious results would follow—and we should all be happy.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that I am not wanting in centennial patriotism and enthusiasm, but it is not so fervid, it has not attained to such a white heat, that I am willing to vote $1,500,000 of the people's money for this purpose. It is almost appalling to observe the ease and facility with which gentlemen talk about giving this large sum of money, and we are led to think if they are not millionaires they ought to be and placed in positions where they can display their liberality.

Sir, while this House is apparently earnest in discussing retrenchment and reform, it is discouraging to have a bill of this kind proposed so diametrically opposite. No doubt the country is to-day looking eagerly and expectantly to this House, praying that it may not make this appropriation and thereby redeeming its pledges of economy. I am not as close a student of the Constitution as many gentlemen on this floor, neither do I claim to expound any of its provisions, but I have an opinion that this act is unconstitutional. Whether it is or not, the present depressed and unsatisfactory condition of the finances of the country warrants me in voting against the bill, and I shall vote against it.

Sir, there is on the bank of the Potomac an unfinished structure intended as a monument to the great Washington. To the shame of the people of this Republic be it said, there it stands, and has stood for years, unfinished and neglected. The reverence and love for his name and his deeds which inspired and prompted the idea of erecting an enduring monument to the memory of the father of his country seem to have subsided. If so, may there be a revival, and the work go on. Sir, I do not know how I should vote were a proposition made in this House to appropriate money for the completion of that monument. I should be guided by my sense of duty. But this I do know, that when this Government is able to do it, there are nobler and better uses to which a million and a half can be devoted than to provide for the people a national holiday or to aid and strengthen an ephemeral and grasping corporation. It may be said, sir, that mine is a narrow and contracted view; that with me it is a mere question of dollars and cents; but this is as much a matter of business as of sentiment, and I am here as a Representative to guard and protect the financial as well as other interests of my people, and in that way to contribute to the glory and honor of our common country.

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. JAMES H. HOPKINS,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize fully with the feeling of relief which pervades this House that this protracted discussion is almost ended.

It has developed some singular facts. One, that there are gentlemen upon this floor who pretend to understand the import of Judge HOLMAN'S resolution better than that distinguished gentleman himself. When the anti-subsidy resolution was presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] he distinctly stated that the Centennial appropriation was not within its scope. Without that assurance, I am persuaded, the resolution would not have passed. That assurance secured its adoption, and it is unfair now to hold it up as a record against those who may have been entrapped into voting for it.

Another singular fact is that there should be men of to-day claiming to understand the Constitution better than the men who made it and the men under whose guidance all its several parts were put into practical and useful operation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to split hairs about the strict or liberal construction of this clause or that of the Constitution. The theory of our Government and its organic law have been critically, ably, and elaborately discussed. I have neither the time nor the inclination, if I have the ability, to join in that discussion.

If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] has torn open the graves and held up before our unwilling eyes the gaunt skeleton of dead mortality, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has paraded before our equally unwilling eyes the specter of a dead idea. It was earnestly, eloquently, powerfully done. But, if I might venture upon a single criticism of that brilliant speech, I would say it was delivered almost a century too late. This is a nation, grand in its history, majestic in its power. It comes now to celebrate its one hundredth anniversary and, amid the grateful homage of all its children, to be crowned with laurel by all the other nations of the earth.

Yes, sir, this is a nation, and has all of a nation's attributes and powers. When I find that measures analogous to the one under consideration, measures not one jot more distinctly authorized than this, met with the approval of Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, of Webster, Calhoun, and Benton, I care not what they may have said about abstract questions of congressional power. I point to their acts and their votes for a practical interpretation of the functions of government. I can follow without compunction the long line of immortal statesmen which my friend and colleague [Mr. RANDALL] has just brought in grand procession before our eyes. Calhoun himself said that a line of precedents was a better interpretation of congressional powers than the most subtle of arguments.

Mr. Speaker, those who seek may find constitutional stumbling-blocks in the way of much legislation—blocks which might be unseen if there was an object to be attained beyond. On one of the early days of this session my colleague [Mr. COCHRANE] introduced and had passed a resolution donating Government cannon to a monument association. On Friday last he voted to retire a Federal judge on pay. I commend him for his support of both measures. But if he did not think it womanly and not statesmanlike to ask questions, I would ask him to point to the clause in the Constitution under which these things were done.

Goethe makes one of his characters say, with quiet irony, "So far as I, in wandering about the world, have been able to observe, statesmen are accustomed merely to forbid, to hinder, to refuse; but very rarely to invite, to further, to reward." There is too much of this sham statesmanship to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I have no jeers nor taunts for those who revere the Constitution of our country. I honor them as I honor it. But I protest against that sacred instrument being used as a shield from under which poisoned darts are hurled. My colleague from the twenty-third district alleges that the gentlemen in charge of the exhibition are prompted by mercenary motives. Now, sir, if my friend from Allegheny had known the gentlemen referred to, he would not have spoken thus; as he did not know them, he should not have spoken thus. Conspicuous among those managers are gentlemen whom two Commonwealths have honored and still honor. And the other managers are gentlemen of the highest character and of the purest motives.

My eloquent friend has fallen into another error. Perhaps it would be unreasonable to expect that in his profound study of the Constitution he should give any attention to such "inconsiderate trifles" as facts. He says "these gentlemen have thrice pledged their honor to this House that they will not ask for a dollar of appropriation from public moneys." The gentleman forgets that those having charge of this exhibition had nothing whatever to do with the passage of either the act of 1871 or that of 1872. The first act was passed in compliance with a memorial from the American Institute of New York, the Franklin Institute of Philadelphia, and from others equally disinterested and equally patriotic. The Centennial Commission are the agents of the Government to execute its will. The legislation was not their act. In compliance with their duty they report to Congress the progress of the work intrusted to them and the necessity for additional funds to complete it.

Mr. Speaker, permit me a few words on the subject of national honor. My colleague, Mr. COCHRANE, says, "National honor first requires the protection of the national Treasury." I have known men, sir, whose sense of honor and whose conviction of duty were measured by a financial gauge; but I regret to hear this avowal from the lips of one whom I respect.

In my opening remarks on Tuesday last I showed how step by step the Government had become involved in this exposition, until dishonor will inevitably follow the refusal to give material aid. No gentleman has pretended to deny the statement of facts then made nor to controvert the logical deductions therefrom.

If this were a new proposition I could join with gentlemen who cry out for retrenchment and economy. But it is too late now. When the resolution to invite foreign powers was pending, a Senator who opposed it said if the invitation should be given Congress would have to appropriate $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 to save the good name of the Government. The invitation was authorized; it was sent; it was accepted. The nation's guests are at the door, bringing their tributes of admiration and respect to lay at the feet of young America. And yet there are those who would snatch the diadem from her queenly brow, strip her of all her vestments of power, and expose her naked to the scorn of all Christian, ay, and of all pagan lands.

The national honor is involved. And we need seek for no constitutional enactment to authorize the performance of an instinctive duty. Can it be that national honor may be preserved by fire and the sword, by devastation, blood, and death, by whole hecatombs of human sacrifices, by universal anguish and distress, and that it cannot be maintained by gentle and peaceful means—means which will add to our country's glory, bring back her commerce to the seas, give new life to dormant industries and new affections and new hopes to all our people?

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. N. P. BANKS,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 20, 1876.

The House, as in Committee of the Whole, having under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 514) relating to the centennial celebration of American Independence—

Mr. BANKS said:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: It was my privilege to be chairman in 1871 of the committee that reported a bill organizing the corporation for the purpose of celebrating the centennial anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. But I did not present that bill to the House; and though earnestly urged from many sources and in many quarters to aid its passage with my voice, I declined to do it. I thought it was possible that the corporation might come to Congress for aid which they then said they did not desire; and as I had been, in virtue of the offices assigned to me by the honorable Speaker who organized the committees of the House, mainly instrumental in securing appropriations for the representation of this country in the industrial expositions of Paris and of Vienna, I did not wish to take upon myself any further responsibility in that direction. But, sir, the expectation in which I indulged has not been realized. The corporation does not come to Congress for money; the provision interdicting an appropriation of money by the United States for this purpose is still operative and inviolate; and therefore I might have done otherwise than I did on account of the apprehension which I have stated.

As I am a member of the committee that reported this bill; as I have considered it carefully and conscientiously, and joined in the unanimous decision of my associates to report it, it might be expected that I should make some suggestions in defense of its propriety, its necessity, and its constitutionality in reply to the arguments that have been so strenuously, as well as eloquently and learnedly, urged against it. Without exaggeration, I think I may say that I have not heard in this House nor in the other branch of Congress abler or more eloquent speeches than those made upon this centennial bill. But they do not disturb me. I have listened attentively, and I love to learn from any man, whoever it may be. I follow an enemy with as much pleasure as the dearest friend if he leads me right, against one who would lead me wrong. Still, sir, if I should go back to the committee of which I am a member to reconsider this measure I should do exactly as I have done, and vote that it is not only a proper measure, constitutional in itself, but one of absolute necessity. I say further, for the relief of some of my associates upon the committee who are a little apprehensive as to what may be the result of this measure, that it is impossible that the Congress of the United States should refuse to approve it.

I want to state the question for myself. I see in this bill but one subject. I notice in the debate two subjects. Multitudes of subjects are brought in which have no relation to it, but as for the bill itself, out of its text there have been drawn two subjects for debate properly enough, which ought to be considered separately. One is in regard to the centennial corporation.

Now, sir, I am not going to vote any money for the corporation. I do not know but I might say with sincerity that it would be an improper thing to vote an appropriation for this corporation, taking into consideration the history and conditions of the act creating it, and certainly I am not at present disposed to do it. The centennial corporation is organized to make arrangements for the exposition of the industries, products, resources, elements of wealth, and other objects pertaining to the pursuits and prosperity of the people, as a method of celebrating the Declaration of Independence a hundred years ago.

I concur in the view of gentlemen on the other side, and particularly the two gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COCHRANE and Mr. STENGER,] who have so strongly urged, one yesterday, the other today, that nothing is due to that corporation from us. I separate absolutely from the question before the House every consideration that relates to or concerns that corporation just as much as those gentlemen do. I dismiss it, and if it were necessary I would reject it.

There is one clause in the bill which relates to a division of a possible surplus of funds to the United States pro rata with stockholders. I suggested—I will not say to the committee, because it might not be proper to refer to its proceedings—I suggested to those with whom I have had conversation on the subject that it would be better if that clause were omitted; that the United States is not a stockholder with anybody else, and can have no claim to any surplus, if any should ever exist, which is wholly improbable, nor any right to share pro rata with the stockholders in that corporation.

In one word, sir, this House has now nothing whatever to do with the centennial corporation, incorporated in 1871 for the celebration of American Independence. The question which is brought here is brought by the President of the United States. He speaks of the United States as a contributor of the results of our administration and the functions of our Government to the exhibition at Philadelphia. He speaks of having invited the principal nations of the earth to make representations of their industries at this exhibition, and of an appropriation that is "appropriate"—that is his word, and necessary—that is my word—to discharge that duty which he, the President, has imposed upon the officers of the several Departments of the Government and of the measures taken to induce other governments to assist in the representation of the world's industries.

Now, in all that is to be said or can be said in regard to this bill which I hold in my hand there is not one word which pertains to the centennial corporation, its management, or its object, but every word of it relates to the Government of the United States, its administration, its functions, and to the great powers of the world which, upon our solicitation, have consented to participate in the exhibition, their people and their institutions. Will gentlemen say there is any impropriety in this application for an appropriation to which the President calls our attention? If the United States propose to exhibit at Philadelphia on the 4th of July and during the summer of this year the results of its administration, to make the representation of the sublime functions of our Government, for the inspection of the world, is there any one to say it is improper for Congress to appropriate money to defray the expenses of that exhibition? What State, what municipality or what individual can we call upon to provide quarters or defray the expenses of this exhibition? No, sir, the statement answers the objection. The United States will be represented there. The Congress of the United States has authorized it. The President has been directed to make a representation in the manner and of the character prescribed by law, and it is impossible that the Congress of the United States should not have constitutional authority to make an appropriation to defray that expense.

He has done more than this. At the close of the one hundredth year of the century, the greatest which has been witnessed in the history of man, more important in its consequences, more far-reaching in its influence, more august and sublime in its results than any other period in the secular history of man, this anniversary is to be celebrated by the American people, through the instrumentality of the Government, in their own way, for reasons and purposes of their own. It was indeed a responsible step for the Government of the United States to ask other nations to assist us in this celebration.

Mr. Chairman, we stand alone among the nations of the earth. There is no other government but our own, that represents, as we do, the principle of the right of the people to organize, direct, and control their government. Everywhere else, in all quarters of the world, more or less distinctly, more or less absolutely, the foundation of the government is that of the divine right and the hereditary succession of rulers. When we appeal to thirty-eight or forty treaty-making powers, representing this opposite principle, to cross the Atlantic and take part with us in the celebration of this great day, from which dates the organization, establishment, and success of principles in which they have no confidence, and to which they are utterly opposed—when we asked them to make that day sacred in the eyes of their subjects, and the world, we assumed a serious responsibility.

But we did it. We the Congress of the United States did it. We are responsible for it. The President has acted upon his instructions. He is not responsible for it. He made this appeal to the nations of the earth. They have answered it. Thirty-eight independent and sovereign powers have signified their intention to be present here on the sacred soil of Philadelphia, at the Hall of Independence, to celebrate the birthday of this great idea—the most important day, we think, of human history.

Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that Congress and the President have authority to invite thirty-eight sovereign powers to join us in celebrating the anniversary of the birth of this nation and no authority or power and no right to grant one dollar or one dime to defray expense incidental to the exhibition of their industries? Is it possible? Ay, sir, is it possible the United States can have taken this step, can have appealed to these nations, can have received the assent of so many of these potential governments of the earth without the right to appropriate a dollar or a dime for the exhibition? I only state the question. I beg gentlemen to consider and decide whether such a result as this is possible.

Gentlemen say that it is opposed to the Constitution of the United States. I give them credit for sincerity. I pay my homage to the ability, the eloquence, the learning, with which they have urged it.

If it were true I would be with them. I will never violate the Constitution of my country for any transitory or sentimental purpose. I am not a "strict constructionist," in the ordinary sense of the word. I believe there are some things that can be done by the Government of the United States; and the strict constructionists, taking one with another, after consideration, generally find that it is impossible for the Government to do anything. There is always somebody to make an objection that the Constitution does not allow any appropriation or legislation. For a long time, sir, strict construction was successful. The strict constructionists had the control of this Government for many years. They directed its affairs, filled its offices, swayed its destinies, controlled its history. And we saw what was the result of strict construction. Suppose, sir, the Neapolitans should undertake to strap down the volcano of Vesuvius, what would be the result? Just exactly what the strict constructionists brought upon us: convulsion and ruin, threatening the existence of the Government and imperiling the liberties of the people.

We must remember, sir, that, while we adhere closely to the provisions of the Constitution, we must not, after all, deny that it has some life, and that there are some things which a government may do and must do. There was a porter on one of the steamers of the line that runs from Boston to New York—elegant steamers they are—who went to a passenger one morning and said, "I want a quarter from you, sir." "What for?" said the passenger. "For blacking your boots," said the steward. "No, sir;" said the passenger, "you did not black my boots; I wear patent-leather." "It makes no difference," said the steward, "the principle is the same." Now, sir, whatever the subject or object, or whatever the authority or necessity of the Government may be, there is always some one to deny constitutional power and impede necessary legislation. No matter how inapplicable or futile the objection may be, no matter whether the Government is going up hill or down, they put the breaks on. "The principle is the same." We do not object to a proper method of construction. We do not ask for powers not clearly granted. It is the abuse of the theory of strict construction, and not the proper use of it, of which the country stands in fear. A latitudinarian construction is enervating and corrupting, but the opposite method pushed to a point of denial of the necessary powers of government, is convulsion and death. We have had enough of it. It does not, however, apply to this bill. I make this declaration, that I do not believe there is a man in this House who can name one act of the same character, that has ever been successfully opposed on the ground of a want of constitutional power since the adoption of the Constitution. Still further, I doubt if a prominent man can be named who has ever deliberately and earnestly opposed the passage of an act like this on the ground of the want of constitutional power.

I will state, sir, what the provision of the Constitution is upon which I rest the bill now before the House. I do not make any latitudinarian construction of the Constitution; I do not cite the provisions relating to general welfare, the necessity of carrying on the Government, or the duty of making it a splendid government, to which gentlemen make valid objection. I will not rest our cause upon such claim as that. On the contrary, I find in the Constitution an explicit and absolute concession of power to the Congress of the United States which covers the object we have in view.

When George III was asked in the name of the people of the American colonies to recognize the independence of their Government, he said to the American ambassador, "When your people can make a treaty, I will acknowledge their independence." They could not make a treaty under the Confederation. It was useless for the Congress of the Confederation to undertake to make a treaty. Any one of the States could defeat it, and there were always one or more of the States ready to interpose a veto. And the King of England very justly said if they could not make a treaty they were not entitled to independence. The recognition of American Independence, after seven years of war, was denied because the Confederation under which the war had been carried on could not make a treaty. It was for this reason, among others, that the Federal Constitution was formed. It gave to the executive and Congress full power to make treaties with foreign nations.

Yes, sir, we can make a treaty. The Constitution gives us the power. It is this power that makes us a nation. We can make a treaty of war, a treaty of peace, a treaty for the acquisition or the cession of territory, a treaty of commerce, navigation, friendship, and for other purposes that I cannot now specify. A treaty that has been negotiated by the President, which bears the signature of commissioners and has been ratified by two-thirds of the Senate, is in itself the supreme law of the land. If this matter had been passed upon in this manner by the Executive and Senate, the Committee of Appropriations would have been authorized to provide for the payment of the money in the regular appropriation bill, without a special vote of the House, because it would be an expenditure authorized by the supreme law of the land. But we do not claim that the measure recommended by the President bears this character. There are other compacts between independent nations. The general definition of a treaty, independent of the local laws by which it is governed, is, in general terms, a compact of accommodation between sovereign and independent states.

Now, sir, the subject which is before us is a compact of this character. It is a compact of accommodation between sovereign States. I will state, sir, in the language of the President, in order that we may properly understand it, for what purpose this compact or accommodation has been made. All the nations of the earth have been notified by the President that it is our purpose to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of American Independence by an exposition of the principal industries of the civilized world. And they have been requested to call the attention of the people of their several nations to this subject, with a view to their participation in the universal exposition—

"In the hope that the interchange of national sentiments and friendly intercourse between the people of the nations may result in new and still greater advantages to science and industry, and strengthen the bonds of peace and friendship which happily exist between them and the United States." * * * "A cordial invitation is extended to every nation of the earth, * * * and a formal acceptance of the invitation is requested previous to March 4, 1874."

Thirty-eight independent and sovereign states, we are informed, have signified their acceptance of this invitation. Now, we have treaties with all these nations—treaties of amity, peace, commerce, navigation, friendship, and good understanding. They have been negotiated under the treaty power given by the Constitution. There is another provision of the Constitution, printed upon the thirteenth page of the Manual, which gives to Congress power—

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

Of these "other powers" that of entering into treaties is one. We have a power therefore to execute those provisions. The purpose declared by the President in his invitation to foreign states was for the purpose of strengthening those relations which we had established with them in pursuance of the Constitution, and it is for the purpose of carrying out the objects for which these treaties were made that the appropriation is asked.

There are many precedents for legislation of this character. I am not going to present a detailed account of them, but only to name them.

There was, for example, the South Sea expedition.

Sir John Franklin's bark Resolute, found in the Arctic Ocean by a Yankee sailor, was refitted and sent to England as a present at a cost of $40,000. It was moved by a Virginia Senator, a strict constructionist, Mr. James M. Mason.

An appropriation was made to relieve sufferers from an earthquake in Venezuela.

A very liberal appropriation was made to send food to Ireland, which Mr. Calhoun asserted was constitutional.

Large appropriations were made to represent our industries at London, Paris, Vienna.

The friendly offices of this Government have been successfully tendered to the South American republics for promotion of peace between them and Spain.

Our diplomatic and consular officers were authorized by the Government, and appropriations made, to give the protection of the United States to the citizens of twelve different nations (five European, seven American) in France during the war between France and Germany in 1870.

Of course no one will pretend that the Constitution actually provides for services of this character in which the people of the United States could have no direct interest whatever, or that there is any clause of the Constitution expressly authorizing expenditures for such purposes. Gentlemen have said during this debate that such precedents furnish authority for doing many other things which may seem right and proper, regardless of the fact that the Constitution confers no express authority for such legislation. I do not accept these views of constitutional power. If the Constitution does not authorize such acts by a fair and reasonable construction of the Constitution they ought not to be passed. It is by no means clear that, because one thing has been done without express grant of power, anything else may be done or that the act itself may be repeated as often as we choose; but the fact is clear that all of these appropriations were considered as being strictly within the pale of the constitutional power of Congress. It was no sentiment of gratitude or generosity that led to this. It is not just to say that Mr. Calhoun advocated sending food to Ireland because it would secure for his friends the votes of Irishmen in this country. These measures were intended and calculated to give effect, and to strengthen the beneficent influence of the various treaties into which we had entered with other nations from the foundation of our Government. They were substitutes for appeals to the dread arbitrament of war. Their purposes were partially set forth in the titles of these international acts of legislation. They are variously described as treaties of amity, peace, concord, commerce, navigation, friendship, and good understanding, embracing all the purposes that can be brought within the pale of friendly intercourse between civilized nations, and this line of legislation differs so far from the ordinary course of constitutional enactment that it gives Congress, by express declaration, the power to enact laws for the purpose of giving effect to and strengthening the friendly intercourse between us and other nations, based upon the treaties that from time to time have been ratified and approved by the appropriate departments of the Government. If the three departments of the Government can enter into treaties with other nations, they can pass laws to secure the objects contemplated by the treaties themselves. The express grant carries with it the incidental power.

One power includes the other, and the first being granted in express terms by the Constitution under a government created for the express purpose of being able to enter into treaties, the power of legislation in support of the objects contemplated by the treaty is also expressly granted in the subordinate clause of the Constitution I have cited.

Now, if there are any precedents established against this theory of the constitutional enactments I should like to have them presented. When has the Government refused any act of this kind for want of constitutional power? They may have objected to it as unwise or inexpedient, but whenever the act was intended to give effect to treaty relations between this Government and others, the constitutional power necessary for this purpose has been recognized, and no man in my opinion can gainsay or deny it.

Now let me read from the President's message:

"The exhibition being an international one, and the Government being a voluntary contributor, it is my opinion that its contribution should be of a character, in quality and extent, to sustain the dignity and credit of so distinguished a contributor. The advantages to the country of a creditable display are, in an international point of view, of the first importance, while an indifferent or uncreditable participation by the Government would be humiliating to the patriotic feelings of our people themselves. I commend the estimates of the board for the necessary additional appropriations to the favorable consideration of Congress."

I ask any member of this House if there is any want of constitutional power to perform these acts, either as it regards those connected with us by solemn treaty, or the exposition itself which is intended to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the declaration, of a determination on our part to maintain the principle of the right of the people to control their own Government?

Now, sir, I ask gentlemen to look at the list of states that are to be represented. I had a memorandum of them, but I misplaced it. They include Great Britain, Russia, Japan, China, Egypt, Siam, Tunis, and nearly all the South American Republics. Tunis is coming, to which for nearly a quarter of a century the United States paid tribute. What power is there in the Constitution that authorized Congress every year to vote ten or twenty thousand dollars to any other nation for the recognition of our right to exist? What man can cite an express grant of power for that, and who can deny that it was done year after year by the unanimous vote of Congress, including the ablest men ever connected with its administration—strict constructionists and others. Was anything ever proposed more monstrous than that Congress has an express grant of power to appropriate money to pay tribute to the Algerine pirates that our flag might be recognized? But it was done; done in silence and without dissent. It was the treaty-making power that authorized it. It was a substitute for war, and when we were ready we put an end to it by war. And yet when the purpose is to celebrate the results of these hundred years, to give an illustration of the functions of government with a view to show our prosperity in peace, our unity and strength in war, and when the representatives of thirty-eight of the principal nations of the earth from the four quarters of the globe, with the proofs of their industrial capacity and wealth are here, does it become us then to raise the question of the constitutional power of Congress to make the requisite appropriation for the protection of the works of art which they are invited to bring with them?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKS. I thank the committee for its kindness, and will not long trespass upon its patience. The power being conceded, as I think it must be, and the objects being wise and patriotic as I think they are acknowledged to be, and the august parties that by order of Congress were invited to assist in the celebration having accepted the invitation, I do not understand how we can avail ourselves of any reserved constitutional power to refuse such appropriation of money as may be necessary for this purpose, for the protection of their property which at our suggestion they bring with them; and the bill before us expressly provides that the appropriation is to be applied to this purpose. It is to "complete the centennial buildings and other preparations."

I said that a treaty was defined to be a compact of accommodation between independent and sovereign states, and I say that this case, as presented by the President of the United States to this House in his annual message, is a compact, and in that limited sense a treaty, and requires of Congress the appropriation that the President recommends, if we find it to be reasonable. It is impossible that, having taken this position, or the one taken by our predecessors and binding upon us as upon them, when these thirty-eight nations having accepted our invitation shall present themselves on our soil, we cannot for want of constitutional power refuse whatever may be necessary to provide for their proper reception and protection. We have precluded ourselves against that. We have declared, against the express provision of the Constitution, in its letter though not its spirit, that they shall not be required to pay duties on their importations which other parties are required to pay. Are we to repeal that? Are we to strike down that statute which has already been enacted, and upon which these nations have consented to come here? That is impossible. I can say that whenever the vote shall come, whether to-day or hereafter, I believe that it will be impossible for this Congress to refuse any appropriation that shall be deemed necessary to make good the engagements with which in this respect alone we have entered into with the treaty nations.

Allusion has been made to the expenses of this celebration. I am one of those who believe that the present troubles of this country arise chiefly out of its excessive expenditures and its gigantic public debts, municipal, State, and Federal. That should be remedied; and I am here to do whatever is reasonable and right for that purpose, come the proposition from whatever quarter it may. But that does not relieve us from the obligations we have entered into with other governments, especially in regard to the celebration of the anniversary of the establishment of this Government as an independent Republic. No local and temporary necessities of this character can relieve us from a duty of that kind. It is an agreement—a compact. We have invited the nations of the earth, and they have accepted our invitation. We must meet any reasonable and just demands, whatever they may be, which they can make upon us to complete this action. They have the right to require it; but we need not look to them for any suggestion on that subject. The President of the United States has stated what he thinks would be proper in view of what he has done as the representative of the Republic by directions of Congress

The expenses of the exposition, so far as this corporation itself is concerned, do not trouble me, whether they shall be more or less. Whether the deficit shall be greater or smaller is no affair of mine. But I will say for this corporation that the people would gladly have met any expenditure necessary if in their power. But unhappily, improvident and unwise legislation, for which I am ready to take my full share of responsibility, has made it impossible for the people to do what otherwise they would gladly have done.

I speak for the town in which I live, where men, women, and children have exerted themselves to the utmost to raise funds to eke out the scanty resources of the centennial corporation. But the times are hard; people are out of employment; the insecurity of the future makes it difficult for them to do more. If we had the prosperity which we seemed to have had ten years ago, but which for some cause or other has taken wings and flown away—if we had this, the centennial celebration would have needed no assistance from Congress, for the people would gladly have given the requisite aid; for it is the celebration of the people, its success is their success, its honor is their honor, its promise for the future and its glory forever is their hope and their glory.

There is another subject of interest. I speak with deference of this House, of which I am a member, and of other bodies, charged as we are with legislative powers as representatives of the people. I repeat here and now what I have said constantly to the people I represent. They know my sentiment on this question. It is impossible for us, in the spirit with which we approach all questions, ever to come to any common sentiment that will lead the country out of its difficulties. What I have seen here this morning, what I observed on the other days of this week, and what I expect to witness in the future, confirms me in that opinion. We are gladiators, and it seems to me that each and every one of us would be perfectly willing to destroy the country if we could annihilate our opponents. No higher sentiment, no grander purpose seems to exist than that of fastening upon the opposition some opinion or act which by hook or crook, by perversion or controversion, may stamp the character of disloyalty or public crime upon its members. And on their part, there is nothing on the side of those who represent the administration of the Government that is not discredited by falsehood, fraud, and usurpation. So it will go on to the end. But there is another tribunal, thank heaven! There is another tribunal that is not inspired by such motives or such passions.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] said yesterday that he appealed to the democratic and republican members of the House. Sir, I have no appeal to make to democrats or republicans. I do not know what they may propose, still less what they may do for the relief of the country. I do not rest my faith in them. My hope is not there. I have an ever-abiding faith, which I think will be realized, elsewhere. I salute the august majesty of the people behind them;—the people, who know their stake in the condition of the country and their way out of its perils. They know perfectly well that peace does not lie in the direction of a continuance of the war, and that their prosperity is to be assured by the dismissal of the controversies growing out of it and the reconciliation of the different interests, races, and sections of the country in support of the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof. [Applause.]

Sir, I want these people to meet in Philadelphia on the day of the Declaration, or some other day that may be appropriate, that they may know each other. It is a great thing to know the men with whom we are associated, and particularly our antagonists. "Know thyself" is a good maxim; "Know thy neighbor and love him" is another. At one time I believed that there would be in the hearts of the people upon the recurrence of this grand anniversary a spirit of fraternization, but I did not know it. When an honorable gentleman who served in the Army with me during the war wrote to me from the city of Baltimore inquiring whether if the Fifth Regiment of Maryland Volunteers should visit the city of Boston on the anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill some recognition on the part of the veterans of the Union Army might not be made, I ventured to assure him that the Fifth Regiment of Maryland would be received with open arms and hearts, not only by the soldiers but by the people. I believed it but I did not then know it. A few of the veteran soldiers of the Union

Army provided a national flag as a fitting compliment to that unsurpassed organization, and the gallant officer that commanded the regiment accepted it with the declaration that it should be cherished with the affection that a son feels for his mother, and defended with their lives if necessary.

This morning I received from my comrade in arms, writing upon subjects wholly apart from legislative or political interests, an assurance that it was my letter, written in doubt and apprehension, that led to the visit of the regiment to Boston. How well I had anticipated the patriotism of the people of Massachusetts the country knows. The spectacle of the 17th of June, 1875, will never be repeated again and can never be forgotten by those who shared the universal joy it inspired. Why was it? If you had asked any one individual out of the quarter of a million people that participated in that demonstration what were his sentiments, he would have had the same doubt, the same distrust, the same apprehension that I had. But when they stood together—when they felt the presence of each other and touched the elbow as soldiers did in the war—they knew where they were and by what inspiration they were guided and governed.

The same spirit I have no doubt animates the whole country. The people of every section, South as well as North, East as well as West, desire the restoration of peace, the fraternization of the races, the re-establishment of that unity and loyalty which is indispensable to the maintenance of republican government. That will be the spirit and determination of the millions assembled during the summer at the centennial exposition at Philadelphia. It will represent the true interests of the country and exhibit the real sentiment of the people. It is for reconciliation and peace, the restoration of a common prosperity, and the preservation of universal liberty!

But, sir, what do we find here? I speak, as I have said, with great respect for the House of Representatives and all its members, whatever party or section they represent. A sort of specter seems to stalk before us. Threatening sounds seem to be floating in the atmosphere around us, caught up and repeated by interested partisans, that bid us hold our peace. We are not the representatives of the people upon these questions, and we dare not be. Very likely, sir, we have not a right to be the representatives of that spirit even if we know what it is. It is better that the people should speak for themselves. We are fighting the old battles over again. We are occupying the stage with the repetition of these scenes of sorrow or of triumph, while the people in the background are preparing another scene that shall be brighter and happier for the country and the human race than anything that we are doing, and that act will come off at Philadelphia, where the people will rally as they did at Lexington, Concord, and Bunker Hill.

The people of Lexington feared that nobody would attend their celebration. Concord was to have one on the same day, and she had claims as strong as Lexington. The President was to be there, with Cabinet officers, members of Congress, officers of the Army and Navy, the governor of Massachusetts with his military attendants, and the Legislature of that State. The whole country seemed to have said with one accord, We will go to Concord and celebrate the first fight of the year 1775. But when the people of Lexington awoke on the morning of the 19th of April they found their little town absolutely invaded by thousands and tens of thousands of people, who could scarcely find room to turn around.

And so, sir, it will be in Philadelphia. The people will be there, and they will say, whether they come from Massachusetts or Georgia, what cannot be said by this House without apparent offense, without some idea that it is intended or may result in a disturbance of our position and places—these people will say, "We have come home to the house of our fathers, and we have come to stay." [Applause.] That will be their sentiment and that will be their cry. I hope, sir, to see upon their banners and to hear at the street corners the declaration of the people, "We have come home to the house of our fathers, and we have come to stay."

Mr. Chairman, one word more and I will leave this question to the decision of the House, indifferent what may be its present judgment. I will speak a word on the position of the American Republic in regard to other nations of the earth.

Sir, we have been quoting the sacred scripture. I should like the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] to introduce his Bible. It has much to do with the position we occupy. It says that in the beginning "the word was with God," and He said "Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion." If there is any truth in the scripture, the right of government was from the beginning of creation given to man, including, of course, woman, and for five thousand years in all the governments of the earth the right of the people to manage their own affairs and to elect their own ruler was the universal law.

Somewhere near the eighth century, when Pepin, father of Charlemagne, and Charlemagne—himself greater than his father—burst with their splendor upon the benighted states of Europe, they, with the aid of the church, established an opposite theory of government: that the ruling families received their power by divine law from divine authority, and that it descended in a hereditary line from the father to the son; that the ruler owed his authority and power to a dispensation of God given directly into their hands, and that absolute and abject obedience was the duty of the people. In a few centuries had been changed the theory of government which had lasted for five thousand years, and that of abject submission for the people and divine right for the ruler had been established.

One by one the governments organized by the people were swept out of existence. More than three hundred republics, large and small, which dotted the surface of Europe, were destroyed.

It was after a survey of this scene of desolation, of the destruction of the governments of the people and the establishment of the principles of hereditary succession and divine right, that the first poet of his time, a half-century ago, gave utterance to his grief and that of the people for whom he sacrificed his life, in undying verse:

> The name of commonwealth is pass'd and gone
> O'er the three fractions of the groaning globe;
> Venice is crush'd, and Holland deigns to own
> A scepter, and endures a purple robe;
> If the free Switzer yet bestrides alone
> His chainless mountains, 'tis but for a time,
> For tyranny of late is cunning grown,
> And in its own good season tramples down
> The sparkles of our ashes. One great clime,
> * * * * * * *
> Still one great clime, in full and free defiance,
> Yet rears her crest, unconquer'd and sublime,
> Above the far Atlantic!—She has taught
> Her Esau-brethren that the haughty flag,
> The floating fence of Albion's feebler crag,
> May strike to those whose red right-hands have bought
> Rights cheaply earn'd with blood.

And in the agony of despair he called the suffering millions of Europe "over the deep" to—

> * * *
> Fly, and one current to the ocean add,
> One spirit to the souls our fathers had,
> One freeman more, America, to thee!

That is a brief statement of the history of government. To-day one State stands alone, self-possessed and confident, maintaining the principle of the right of the people to govern themselves. It is the Republic of the United States of America. We have begun to reverse the course of history for a thousand years past. Little by little we have invaded and undermined and occasionally destroyed elsewhere the theory of hereditary succession and divine right. The people of the East turn their eyes imploringly to the West for counsel and courage. Europe is everywhere moving for free government. The great Queen who sits upon the throne of the British Empire, more than equal to any ruler that wields executive power, said, when the people of Spain placed Prince Alfonso upon the throne, that she would not recognize the new government of Spain until she was informed whether or not that government was to be in conformity with the wishes of the people of Spain. Great Britain is day by day extending the elective franchise to her people, and the time is not distant when they will all enjoy as we do, without distinction of condition or caste, the inestimable privileges of free government.

The Scandinavian republicans are contending for universal suffrage. The vote which France took only last Sabbath shows that an immense majority of her people—more than six to one—seeks a resting-place between communism on one side and despotism on the other, those twin enemies of liberty in France. Italy, a free country, has been made free by the intellect, strength, and courage of her people. The late Mr. Sumner used to say that Russia at a day not distant would be a republic, and, he believed, the first republic in Europe. And wherever we turn we see that the example of the United States is silently undermining the union of church and state, and the principle of hereditary succession and the divine right of rulers.

Now we invite them to come here and witness the institutions and make the acquaintance of the people that for one hundred years have led this movement. Thirty-eight of these states accept our invitation. For the purposes of this bill they are here. And who shall say that the people of the United States will not grant the slight appropriation that is necessary to protect from the inclemency of the weather or from ill-disposed persons the art treasures of the Old World, the triumphs of its industry, or the property brought to us at our request? Who will say that it is not within our constitutional power, when with all these nations we have treaties of amity and peace, of commerce and navigation, of friendship and good understanding? and while this, as the President has said in his proclamation, is intended to strengthen the ties that bind us together, who will say the Constitution gives no power to pass this bill?

Sir, I take no exception and make no complaint of what has been said by gentlemen on the other side. As they view this subject they may be right; but I stand myself on the distinct declaration that the question of the centennial corporation is not embraced in the bill before us, and that no man can shield a negative vote on the ground of any objections he has to that corporation. The question for us is whether we shall confirm the action of the President of the United States, made in pursuance of the Constitution and the laws of Congress. Sir, a negative will discredit the character of this country and its people more than the atrocities of the rebellion, because they will show not only a want of integrity, but of decent respect for the obligations entered into upon our own motion and for our own advantage, with other nations. On the other hand, if we shall give it a unanimous vote, which I hope to see before the session closes for this bill,—to use the language of one whose words were quoted on the other side against it, a man who sacrificed his life to the spirit of peace, who deprecated war, and the consequences of war, from which we are this day suffering, and whose well-beloved son died in defense of the liberties of his country in front of the capital,—in the words of that man who spoke as no other American has spoken, if we shall give an approval of this recommendation of the President with that unanimity which is justified by the action of foreign states that join us in the celebration of the great day which marks, as we hope, the regeneration and the redemption of mankind, the name of America will be embalmed in the memories of men as if it were "written in letters of living light between Orion and the Pleiades." [Applause.]

Reply to an attack upon California.

SPEECH OF HON. HORACE F. PAGE,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

February 26, 1876.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker: The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] in his speech upon the finances, on Saturday last, made a comparison between the State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor and the States of Minnesota, Iowa, and Wisconsin in respect to the growth and prosperity of these States, greatly to the disparagement of California, and ascribing the alleged contrast to the fact that California had repudiated and nullified the legal-tender act.

The gentleman said in referring to the remarks of Mr. BLAINE, of Maine:

That was an unfortunate reference the gentleman made to California. He held her up as an example of prosperity to be envied by the suffering people of her sister States, and ascribed her prosperity to her repudiation and nullification of the legal-tender law. Sir, it may be an act of temerity, but I am prepared to present her as a warning to those citizens of other States who believe that by contracting the volume of money they can promote the welfare of the people or hasten the day when prosperity shall again dwell within our borders.

He proceeds:

While immigrants have flown into the cold Northwest by the thousand, they have hardly gone into California by the score, and her laboring classes are pariahs, who do not speak our language or seek to establish an interest in our country by acquiring homes or land, so that there, among the golden sands and verdant fields of California, is the land owned by a few capitalists and the labor performed by homeless wanderers. Do I exaggerate the picture? Let facts speak.

Let me compare her with States of her own age who are almost absolutely without mineral resources, whose summers are brief, whose winters long and severe, whose farms lie nearly two thousand miles from the seaboard, the profit on whose products is greatly reduced by the immense cost of bringing them to market, and the cost of the manufactured articles they consume enhanced by the fact that they have to traverse the same long lines of transportation. Let me compare California with Iowa, Wisconsin, or Minnesota. In order to do this justly, we must bear in mind the fact that California was admitted to the Union September 9, 1850; that Iowa, having been admitted December 28, 1846, had preceded her not quite four years; that Wisconsin was admitted May 29, 1848, preceding her a little more than two years; and that Minnesota was admitted May 11, 1858, and is therefore nearly eight years her junior. How do these purely agricultural and almost hyperborean States compare in all that constitutes the true greatness of a State with their more richly endowed and happily located sister? The extent of her territory is vastly greater than that of any of them, yet the census of 1870 shows her population to have been but 582,031, of whom 49,310 were Chinese; while Iowa, four years her senior, had a population of 1,680,637; Wisconsin, but two years her senior, a population of 1,064,985; and Minnesota, nearly eight years her junior, was nearly her equal in population, having 446,056.

Time will not permit me to run a parallel between her and each of these States. To make the contrast with Iowa would present differences so striking and immense that they would stagger credulity. I therefore take Minnesota, the youngest—eight years, or nearly one-third younger than she—and the most remote from the sea-board, the one also which stretches farthest into the wintry North, whose boundary is the northern boundary of the country, and whose season for the growth and gathering of crops is limited to half the year. The area of California is 188,918 square miles, and that of Minnesota 83,000. In 1860 California had 379,994 inhabitants and Minnesota but 172,023; the increase in California for the succeeding ten years was but 190,223, while that of Minnesota was 274,033, which is 83,810 in excess of the increase of California, which started into the decade with more than 100 per cent. in advance. The assessed wealth of California was in 1860 $139,654,667, and in 1870 it was $269,644,068; an increase of a little more than 90 per cent. The assessed value in Minnesota in 1860 was over $32,000,000, and in 1870 over $84,000,000; an increase of over 160 per cent. The assessed value of real estate in California in 1860 was over $66,000,000, and in 1870 was over $176,000,000; showing an increase in real estate of over $109,000,000, leaving but about $20,000,000 to evidence the increase of every other species of property. The assessed value of real estate in Minnesota in 1860 was over $25,000,000, and in 1870 over $62,000,000; showing an increase of more than $36,000,000, or nearly 150 per cent., and an increase of personal property of over 220 per cent. The indebtedness of California exceeds that of Minnesota by over $15,000,000. The taxes paid in Minnesota in 1870 were $2,646,372 in legal-tender money, being $5,217,734 less than were paid in California in gold. Minnesota had in 1870 923 more schools than California, and the number of children in attendance in the wintry State of the Northwest was 5,513 in excess of those attending in the genial climate of California. Minnesota had 234 more churches than California, fewer convicts by 1,426, and there were 844 fewer patients in the insane hospitals and asylums in Minnesota than in those of California.

How, Mr. Chairman, are we to account for these startling contrasts? Climate, soil, natural productions, geographical position, all favor California. Why is she thus laggard in the race for civic supremacy? It is because she has preferredto maintain as money a currency composed of a commodity which other nations ne ed and the volume of which cannot increase in a debtor State or nation, and thus to make all enterprise depend on the use of private credit; has maintained a monetary system by means of which they who lend credit absorb the sweat of the laborer's brow, together with the results of all productive industries. California rejected our national system of money, which, though called into being by the exigencies of the war, was, as I have shown, abundantly authorized by the terms of the Constitution, and in doing so deprived herself of that agency—a cheap, safe, and inexportable medium of exchange—which made the progress in wealth and all the blessings attendant upon wealth, churches, schools, galleries of art, improved means of transportation, and other commercial facilities throughout the North and East more remarkable than had ever taken place in any decade in the history of this or any other country. Who, in view of these facts, will claim that metallic money has been a blessing to California?

Now, sir, while it is true that gold and silver are the circulating medium of that State, it is not true that the State has either repudiated or nullified the legal-tender act. The only law touching that subject ever passed in that State was what is commonly known as the specific contract law, passed in 1862, which provides that parties may enter into a written contract for the payment of any specific kind of money, and did not preclude parties in the absence of a written contract from paying in the legal tenders of the country.

There was nothing like an attempt at repudiation or nullifaction of the legal-tender act, and no prohibition was put upon the people from using whatever circulating medium they saw fit in the making or discharge of contracts, either foreign or domestic.

The truth is, sir, that the people of California use gold and silver as a circulating medium because they furnish a currency less liable to fluctuate in value, because their use kept the State on an even financial footing with all the countries of the world and at a disadvantage with none.

But the gentleman presents her as a warning to those who believe that by a metallic currency they can promote the welfare of the people—and gives figures to show the deep humilitation to which the use of hard money has brought her in comparison with the other States named. He would have you believe, sir, that she is now sitting in sackcloth and ashes amid the ruins of her once promising but now desolated industries and the wrecks of a once glorious commerce in all the wretchedness of despair.

But his anxiety to make his warning effective has led him away from the true state of the case, as I shall presently show.

The gentleman compares the growth of California with Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota.

Sir, all other things being equal, the development of these States before that of California was according to the regular and established order of things. The star of empire in its westward way lights up the whole line of its track. It leaves no dark spots behind. Even the arid desert and rugged mountain kindle under its beams. Those States nearest the center of population are first developed, while those less accessible have to wait for the coming in of the tide.

Up to the time the overland railroad was opened California was practically inaccessible to the majority of those seeking new homes in the West, not only in view of the expense, but also of the length of the journey, the dangers of the sea, and the malaria of the isthmus. It cost a man without his family $300 for passage from New York to San Francisco, and with his family at least $1,000, while he could go to either of the States of Iowa, Wisconsin, or Minnesota for from twenty to thirty dollars, and take his family with him at an expense of about a hundred dollars. Nor did the inhospitable plains and snow-capped mountains of the overland route offer better inducements in respect either to safety or expense. In the mean time the States of Iowa, Wisconsin, and Minnesota were in direct and easy communication with the great centers of population by both land and water. And this, sir, will account for the greater rapidity with which these States have been populated and developed. But since the completion of the Pacific Railroad the increase of population of California, the facilities of travel being to that extent improved, will compare favorably with any of her sister States. In the single month of May, 1875, her increase of population was 15,261, and in the whole year more than 110,000, exceeding that of 1874 by 18,000 and more than four times that of 1872. On the 1st day of January, 1875, her total population was nearly 800,000 against 530,000 in 1870, an increase in five years of about 51 per cent., while the population of Minnesota was in 1875 about 600,000 against 440,000 in 1875, an increase of about 50 per cent. And this with only one railroad, while the States of Minnesota, Iowa, and Wisconsin have for years past had roads within signaling distance of almost every hamlet within their limits. At this ratio California will more than double her population during the present decade and have in 1880 more than a million of inhabitants.

It is not my purpose to disparage any of the States of this Union. My purpose is simply to defend my own State from the ungenerous and unwarranted attack of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and in doing so I shall give facts, and when I have concluded I will leave the gentleman to trace out a comparison between California and his own great State of Pennsylvania, the land of William Penn, whose history dates back to a time long anterior to that of the Union; whose manufactures and commerce contributed so much to the progress of the early colonies; whose wealth and power have long been the pride and boast of her sons, and hails herself the "key-stone" of the arch.

In 1870 the population of Pennsylvania was 3,500,000; in the same year that of California was 530,000. In 1875 the population of Pennsylvania was 3,750,000, while that of California was 800,000; showing an increase in favor of the latter State of about 43 per cent. in the last five years.

In the year 1875 the assessed valuation in California was $655,036,235, an increase of $386,000,000 since 1870, and a per capita of nearly $900; more than double that of Pennsylvania.

On the 30th of June, 1875, the merchant-vessels belonging to the district of San Francisco numbered 717 sail, with a tonnage of 88,066; and steam 151, with a tonnage of 42,139. While at the same date the number of sail-vessels belonging to the district of Philadelphia was 822, measuring 113,111 tons; and the number of steam-vessels was 278, measuring 78,000 tons.

The gentleman says that the indebtedness of California exceeds that of Minnesota by $15,000,000.

Why, sir, the debt of the State of California on the 30th day of June last amounted to only $3,302,283, including $731,500 in bonds, and these are held by her own educational department; while the whole State, city, and county debt of the State of Pennsylvania in 1870 was $89,027,131.

The following table will show the productions of California for 1875:

	Value.
Wheat, 17,000,000 centals	$26,000,000
Gold and silver	25,000,000
Wool, 44,000,000 pounds	8,000,000
Wine, 10,000,000 gallons	3,000,000
Fruit crop	2,000,000
Barley, oats, hay, &c	5,000,000
Dairy products	5,000,000
Lumber	5,000,000
Coal	1,250,000
Quicksilver	2,000,000
Copper, &c	250,000
Manufactures, value added of labor	41,000,000
Total	123,500,000

To summarize:

Wheat yield 1875, centals	17,000,000
Wheat yield since 1856, centals	200,000,000
Wool clip 1875, pounds	44,000,000
Wool clip twenty-three years, pounds	300,000,000
Receipts of quicksilver 1875, flasks	50,000
Product or wine, gallons	10,000,000
Receipts of lumber, feet	305,000,000
Coal receipts sixteen years, tons	2,500,000
Wheat and flour exports 1875, centals	8,500,000
Wheat and flour exports nineteen years, centals	73,000,000
Wool exported 1875, pounds	48,183,017
Total increase of population during 1875	113,000
Value of the productions of the State	$124,000,000
Value of manufactures	63,000,000
Gold and silver product of the coast 1875	100,000,000
Product of gold and silver twenty-five years	1,700,000,000
Treasure exports 1875	43,000,000
Treasure exports nineteen years	750,000,000
Coinage of San Francisco mint 1875	32,000,000
Coinage for last twenty-two years	410,000,000
Dividends declared 1875	17,000,000
Deposits in savings-banks of California	75,000,000
Banking capital of the State	155,000,000

The gentleman from Pennsylvania lashes himself into a fury in his eagerness to prove that a paper currency with no fixed value is a greater blessing to the people than a hard-money currency with a fixed and certain value that passes current throughout the world.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] held up the State of California as worthy of imitation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania presents her as a frightful warning to the country, and charges her with nullification and repudiation of the legal-tender act because she chooses to pay the laborer for his day's work in gold—a dollar of which will buy nearly a dollar and fifteen cents of his legal-tenders.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the facts which I have presented will dispel whatever fears have existed that a community cannot be prosperous that has gold and silver for a circulating medium. The gentleman says the fires have gone out in the forges in Pennsylvania and thousands are there out of employment. It is not so in California. No State in the Union, and perhaps no place in the world, pays better prices for labor than California and Nevada, and nowhere are the laboring classes in a better or more prosperous condition than in those two States. There is to-day in California nearly $75,000,000 in gold in the savings-banks of that State, the earnings and savings of her laborers, whom the gentleman has been pleased to characterize as "homeless wanderers."

I am not here to deny that there were some in California who doubted the policy of the State in not adopting the legal-tender as a circulating medium, but all such doubts have been dispelled by subsequent events.

Sir, while the commercial interests of the country here in the East were staggering under the panic of 1873; while fortunes here were being swept away in the maelstrom of financial disaster, the results of inflation and wild speculations; while failure after failure was daily chronicled upon your bulletin-boards; while ruin and starvation were settling like a pall over the land, California stood amid the general wreck unmoved. She suffered no perceptible inconvenience.

And now, while my friend from Pennsylvania and some of his democratic allies in this House on the subject of inflation are promulgating their wild and visionary theories on finance, and while the majority party of the House are exhibiting a masterly inactivity and inability to restore prosperity to the country, California and Nevada will produce bullion enough to supply the place of every legal-tender in circulation, and that within the next three years.

I desire, in this connection, to publish as a part of my remarks an article from the San Francisco Journal of Commerce, which will, much better than I can myself, explain the cause of the temporary suspension of some of the banks of California last fall, and from which the State so speedily recovered—another evidence of the soundness of our monetary system:

The depletion of our coin balances it was which immediately led to the suspension of the Bank of California on the afternoon of August 26 last, an event which has prostrated almost every kind of business since then, and which, but for the extraordinary soundness of our financial and commercial system, would have been productive of results fully as disastrous as those that followed the great eastern panic of 1873. We have said that the heavy coin export was the immediate cause of the failure; it was not, of course, the underlying one, and there were several collateral causes. The bank, through its late president, had loaned heavily on mining and water stocks, which immediately previous to the suspension had declined in an alarming ratio, and which were utterly unavailable when most needed. Extraordinary purchases of wheat had been made from the farmers, and as much as $6,000,000 had been withdrawn from the coffers of the banks, principally from those of the Bank of California, to meet them. The decline in stocks caused the big brokers who had heavy balances in the bank to make haste to withdraw them, and this becoming public caused the run resulting in suspension. A panic of the most fearful nature was the result; almost every bank in the city had a run which ended in the temporary suspension of all affected save the London and San Francisco Bank and the Anglo-California Bank, which, aided by the transfer of $700,000 from their friends in the East, paid every demand presented until the feverish public feeling existing had calmed down. Then turned the tide--the savings-banks had protected themselves by enforcing the agreement requiring notice to be given on the withdrawal of large deposits, and one by one the banks that had temporarily closed their doors again re-opened them. The National Gold and Trust Company, however, since sustaining a second run, has finally gone into liquidation, but will pay all depositors dollar for dollar. The immediate result of the panic was an almost universal suspension of business, the suspension of one or two large and well-known firms, and the temporary embarrassment of some of the greatest operators in produce on the coast. But a re-action soon set in; people were more frightened than hurt. The Bank of California re-opened a month later with a subscribed capital of upward of seven millions of dollars—the subscribers being financially the soundest men on the coast, and its directors, having effected arrangements with the larger depositors, announced their intention of immediately satisfying the smaller, and of ultimately not only paying dollar for dollar, but also a reasonable interest.

While all this tended to restore confidence, the opening on October 4 of one of the greatest banks in the world, the Bank of Nevada, popularly known as the Flood & O'Brien bank, with a capital in gold coin of $5,000,000, had an immediate effect in establishing our credit both at home and abroad on a firmer foundation than ever. This was soon followed by the announcement, first made by the San Francisco Journal of Commerce, that a new bank with a capital of $5,000,000 was to be opened by Lazare Frères, heretofore reckoned as among the largest importers of the city, and people felt that what elsewhere would have been a most serious blow to the general prosperity for years would here have only a temporary effect. The bank of California had been to this State and coast what the Bank of England is to the financial system of Great Britain and its dependencies, and we believe that in no other country in the world would a similar instance of almost immediate recuperation have been exhibited. The only drawback that has since occurred has been the suspension of the Commercial Bank, which has boasted a nominal capital of $5,000,000, but which has never had deposits to exceed $30,000, and whose demise has been in no sense felt by the community. Such a crisis could not have occurred in any other country in the world without failure after failure; and the fact that only two or three have occurred in our city is one of the greatest testimonials in favor of the soundness of our financial and commercial systems.

The banking capital and deposits employed in the first internal-revnue district of California, as shown by the books of the collector, compare as follows with those of 1874:

Capital and deposits, December 31, 1875	$69,578,266
Capital and deposits, December 31, 1874	54,937,337
	14,640,929

The capital and deposits of all the banks in the State aggregate about $165,000,000. The capital for 1875 aggregates $13,995,642 and the deposits average $53,582,624.

Finally and in conclusion, quoting the closing remarks of the gentleman in reference to California, "Who, in view of these facts, will claim that metallic money has been a blessing to California?" I reply, who, in view of these facts, will not claim that metallic currency has been a blessing to California?

If there are any such I have only to say that, while you may not be convinced, there is not a score of men in the whole State who have lived under this system for a quarter of a century who will not bear testimony to its beneficial results.

The unexampled prosperity of the State; its past financial history, so full of wisdom for the guidance of those who would travel the opposite road to resumption; the grand future that awaits her and her foster-child, the proud State of Nevada, peopled, developed, and built up during the last sixteen years by the bone and sinew and the capital of California—who will not say that she is entitled to rank with the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin; or that, in contrast with Iowa, she "would present differences so immense and striking that they would stagger credulity?"

Centennial Celebration of American Independence.

SPEECH OF HON. ANDREW R. BOONE,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 25, 1876,

On the bill (H. R. No. 514) making an appropriation for the centennial celebration of American Independence.

Mr. BOONE. Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to say upon the subject under consideration. It has been very fully and thoroughly discussed, and however much inclined I might be to extend my remarks, the time allowed me will not admit of my doing so. I shall therefore content myself with a plain and brief statement of my views.

As a new member of this body, Mr. Chairman, I have quietly listened to the discussion of this bill, and have tried to form a candid and impartial judgment upon its merits and to consider fairly the arguments which have been urged by its friends, and I am free to say that, notwithstanding the discussion has been able and elaborate, I have failed to see a single reason urged in advocacy of this measure which could not with equal propriety be used in favor of any other private enterprise, except the single fact that the great exhibition which this money is intended to assist begins on the one hundredth birthday of this nation, as it is called in modern times.

Now, sir, that this "centennial" arrangement is a corporation, and a private corporation, it seems to me there is no room to doubt, because, sir, it has all the attributes of a corporation, and whether it be a private or a public corporation is quite immaterial, for the question still presents itself: Under what authority and by what rule of construction does the Government derive the authority to take stock in and become a member of any sort of corporation, public or private? And I confess that the distinction is a curious one, for a public corporation, it seems to me, would be "something new under the sun."

Then, sir, here is a private corporation, formed for private and local purposes, as the history of the concern most conclusively shows, asking Congress to make this Government a member of this corporation by subscribing and paying $1,500,000 of money from the public Treasury, and to share alike with other stockholders in the profits of a grand display and magnificent exhibition which is to take place at Philadelphia on the 4th day of July next. And the only reason, as I before remarked, that is urged with any degree of plausibility why we should vote this large amount of money is that the Government has lived to see its one hundredth birthday, and therefore we must have a grand display and set a large feast and invite all the world to participate with us in our centennial jollification. We must have a sort of diamond wedding, at which we will receive presents and "give gifts unto men."

Mr. Chairman, I wish it distinctly understood that I have no objection to this "celebration." Indeed, sir, I wish it the most unbounded success. The proud old Commonwealth which I have the honor in part to represent here will be represented there by her gallant sons and fair daughters, and perhaps she will also be represented by her splendid herds and blooded horses, by specimens of her mineral wealth and the various productions of her fertile soil, but in her sovereign capacity as a State she will not be there. She could not go there, without humiliation, so long as the galling fetters of political proscription are fastened upon the arms of any of her noble sons, and too sadly does she remember that the noblest, the grandest specimen of her manhood went down to his grave an alien in the land that gave him birth. But I pass from this. I said I was in favor of this centennial celebration, and I am; but when it is proposed to invest in this enterprise $1,500,000 of money which must be raised by imposing additional burdens upon a people already oppressed by taxation, and who are staggering beneath the weight of an enormous public debt, I must be permitted to enter my very humble but most solemn protest. In the name of the toiling and suffering people of this country I do most earnestly protest. In the name and by the majesty of the Constitution of my country, I protest.

I know that the Constitution furnishes no barrier to great and powerful corporations that want appropriations. I know that it has too frequently been the case that the Constitution has been made to bend to suit grasping and mercenary schemes. I know that when the greed for money and the Constitution have come in conflict the latter has been made to yield, and under the specious plea of necessity, military or otherwise, the most flagrant and open violations of what was once considered a very sacred instrument have been accomplished. But, sir, I had hoped that we had, in the providence of God, lived to see the day when at least the lower branch of the Congress of the United States would return to that view of the Constitution which was entertained by a long list of democratic statesmen, whose names have made the history of this country illustrious by the fidelity with which they adhered to that instrument, and whose reverence for it was second only to that which they entertained for the Bible itself. And in saying this, I do not pretend to question the fidelity of any gentleman on this floor to the Constitution, for I know that there are gentlemen here who will vote for this bill who are as good democrats as I am, and at whose feet I might sit and learn lessons of political wisdom; but really I cannot comprehend the argument which finds constitutional authority to vote this money to this project and denies it to any other scheme which may be invested with any sort of public or national importance. The fault maybe in me and not in their argument, but my opinion is it will be rather a difficult task to make the country understand the difference.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I desire modestly to remind the democratic majority in this House that we were elected and sent here upon the idea and with the promise that under democratic rule the profligate and reckless (not to say corrupt) use of the public money would cease, and that a democratic Congress would strive to return to the paths of economy and strict frugality which characterized the earlier periods of the country's history. And believing, as we do, that under republican administration the most unbridled extravagance has prevailed, and the most stupendous frauds have been perpetrated, we hailed the results of the elections of 1874 as the harbinger of a more economical and purer administration of the affairs of this Government, in so far at least as Congress might be able to control it. And the people expected, and they had a right to expect, that all unnecessary and wasteful use of the public money would cease.

Now, sir, I desire to inquire of gentlemen on this side of the House how we will answer the people, when they demand of us to know how it was that a democratic House of Representatives, with its high pretensions to honesty and economy, felt itself authorized in the very opening of its session, when it was fresh from the people, to vote away this large amount of money, in aid of a purely local and private enterprise, when the whole country is groaning beneath a load of debt and taxation—individual, municipal, State, and Federal—too grievous to be borne. I fear we shall find it a troublesome question to answer. I concur most heartily in the noble sentiments uttered by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] in favor of peace, concord, and brotherly love between all sections of this country. Such sentiments as he uttered upon that subject are the inspirations of a noble and lofty patriotism, and I w uld there were more of it in the land; but, sir, I cannot accept such impulses as the guide to my actions in dealing with questions like this, for however much of patriotic devotion we may feel for the flag of the country, and however much we may talk of good feeling and brotherly kindness, and however much our bosoms may swell with pride in contemplating the future grandeur and glory of our country, still we must not forget that an overtaxed and heavily oppressed people are behind all this, and in the face of poverty and distress our object should be retrenchment, reform, and the most rigid economy in public expenditures. What the people want is to be relieved from the intolerable burdens which are now upon them, and any legislation which does not look to this end is a mockery, and will not satisfy them, and will not be a fulfillment of our promises to them.

I have already, Mr. Chairman, perhaps transcended the limits of the courtesy allowed me by the House, and will soon close. So far as the constitutional phase of this question is concerned, I shall not undertake to discuss that now, because I have not the time which is necessary to devote to so grave a matter, and also because it has been in far abler hands than mine. I was peculiarly gratified when the able and distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] touched upon that subject the other day; and it is no flattery to him to say he touched it with a master's hand. It seems to me he made it so clear that we had no power under the Constitution to vote this appropriation, that there can be no doubt upon the subject. His argument seems to me to be lucid and conclusive, and every attempt to answer it has only shown more strongly, if possible, the correctness of the views presented by him.

But it has been intimated, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to vote for this measure as an indication to our northern brethren particularly that the South and those who sympathised with her. are true to the Government and loyal to its flag. I know of but one true test of loyalty in this country, and that is obedience to the Constitution and laws of the land, and so far as I am concerned I recognize no other test. Sir, believing as I do that we have no power under the Constitution to make this appropriation, and even if we had the power that the condition of the country would not justify us in doing so, I shall vote against it.

The Mississippi Election.

SPEECH OF HON. OLIVER P. MORTON,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

January 20, 1876.

The Senate having under consideration the resolution of Mr. MORTON for an investigation into the late election in Mississippi—

Mr. MORTON said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: The task which I have undertaken is not a pleasant one; but I am in the performance of what I regard as a high duty. No more important question can be presented to this body during this session than the one I am considering, whether the majority of the people of a State can be overwhelmed with impunity by violence and fraud, and whether a movement that looks to the overthrow of the political and civil rights of five millions of people and the defeat of at least two important amendments to the Constitution of the United States, can pass on without notice and without condemnation. I ask the Senate this morning, as a matter of duty to themselves as well as to the country, to listen to the evidence that I shall produce. I will say, in the beginning, to disarm criticism, that it will be almost all from democratic sources. I am aware that letters or statements brought here, and especially if I am not at liberty to give the names, will have their force weakened because of their anonymous character, but I propose now to show to the Senate and to the country from democratic sources the actual character of the late contest in Mississippi and the principles that are involved in it.

But, Mr. President, before coming to that, I want to notice the question of the finances of Mississippi, and put that matter in a true light if possible. It has been constantly asserted, until a large part of the people of the North believe it, that the reconstructed government in Mississippi, first under Governor Alcorn, then under Governor Powers, and then under Governor Ames, has been extravagant beyond precedent, has been and is thoroughly corrupt and rotten; and these charges, so persistently made, have made an impression upon the North and have been made the excuse and justification for murder and intimidation in the State of Mississippi. I want, then, first to consider that question how much, if any, truth there is in that general statement that has been so persistently made.

THE STATE WHEN THE REPUBLICANS TOOK CONTROL.

First let me say a word in regard to the condition of the State of Mississippi in 1870 when the reconstructed government went into operation. Mississippi was then in an impoverished condition. She had been under a State government organized by President Johnson from 1865 until 1867, then under military government for three years, and the reconstructed government went into operation in March, 1870. The republican party found Mississippi in a destitute and prostrate condition. Many of the public buildings had been destroyed by fire; all of them were out of repair, many of the court-houses, jails, asylums, and most of the bridges over the rivers had been destroyed; the public highways were all in a dilapidated and insecure condition, and many of them almost impassable. Extraordinary expenses had to be incurred necessarily, for the purpose of lifting the State out of this prostrate condition. The work of reconstruction had to be undertaken with a majority of the citizens newly enfranchised, wholly unacquainted with the science of government. The judiciary was reconstructed under the new constitution, and I may say right here, and I believe I shall not be successfully contradicted, that that judiciary has perhaps been the best the State has ever had; that there has been but little said against it. I believe no well authenticated charge has been made against the supreme court, or against any one of the forty judges in that State. If such charges have been made, they have not been brought to my attention. Amidst the storm of obloquy and calumny that has swept over that State, the judiciary has comparatively escaped from it. So far as the State officers are concerned, the administration I believe has been comparatively pure. No well-grounded suspicion exists against the integrity of Governor Alcorn, the first governor, or against Governor Powers, the second governor, or against Governor Ames, the present governor. I know that general charges of corruption are made against Governor Ames, but I imagine that it will be impossible for any Senator upon this floor to bring evidence fixing any charge of corruption or fraud upon Governor Ames.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MORTON. I hope my friend will allow me to make my general statement. I will yield a little further on.

Mr. STEVENSON. I only wanted to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. MORTON. In regard to the subordinate State officers I understand that no charges of corruption have been made against any of them. The present lieutenant-governor, Davis, has been charged with taking a bribe of $500 to pardon a criminal at a time when he was acting governor in the absense of Governor Ames. I believe it has not been officially or judicially established in any way, and whether he is guilty or not I cannot say. Mr. Cardoza, the superintendent of public instruction, was charged with having been guilty of corrupt practices before he became superintendent of public instruction; but I have not heard of anything having been preferred against him since that time, though there may have been.

The sheriffs of the counties in Mississippi are collectors of taxes ex officio. I have heard of but two cases of defalcation on the part of tax collectors in that State since reconstruction in 1870. I do not say there are not others, but I will say that upon inquiry I have heard of but two, and the aggregate sum of the defalcations amounts to $15,000. One of these tax collectors was a republican and the other was a democrat.

There have been charges in regard to the public printing, that there were great extravagance and corruption in that. It has been said that the rates for printing fixed by the Legislature of 1870 were too high, and I am not prepared to dispute it. I believe they have been largely reduced since that time; but the public printer against whom these charges have been chiefly made was re-elected in 1872. The principal charges against him were for maladministration during 1870 and 1871. He was re-elected by the Legislature in 1872, and at that time received the entire democratic vote in the Legislature. He was indorsed by the vote of the democratic party after these charges had been made, and I believe some of them had been preferred by Governor Alcorn himself. That does not justify or vindicate his conduct. But what I mean to say is that, whether he was guilty of those charges or not, the democratic members of that body, with a full knowledge of what had been done, voted for his re-election, I believe unanimously.

THE FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE STATE.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question of the finances of Mississippi; and I ask the attention of the Senate to the present condition of the State government of Mississippi in a financial point of view. I read from the message of Governor Ames, and I presume it will not be successfully contradicted in any of the matters which he states. He says:

The condition of the State's finances is unprecedentedly favorable.

The real debt of the State, that is, its outstanding obligations beyond its ability to pay at once with its current and available funds, (the taxes received for 1875,) amounts to $500,000.

But very few States in the North are in as good a condition in that respect. There would have been a large public debt hanging over Mississippi, coming down from the years before the war, if before the war that State had not repudiated the debt. But I am now speaking of the present debt of Mississippi.

The common and Chickasaw funds—debts upon which the interest only is to be paid, the principal never becoming due, (obligations incurred many years since)— amount to * * * $1,530,620.

Before the war—

This debt against the State, upon which the State pays interest, the State having received the money herself, is formed in this way: $823,000 were received from the sale of Chickasaw school lands in 1847, lands granted by Congress in the northeastern part of Mississippi, sold for gold and put into the Treasury. These moneys were loaned by the State in 1858 to four railroad companies and lost. The rest of this $1,500,000 consists of fines, forfeitures, and liquor licenses paid into the State treasury and set apart for the school fund.

The expenses of the State government during the past year amounted to	$618,259 18
The amount paid to the two universities of the State, to normal schools, and interest on Chickasaw school fund was	136,896 37
The Mississippi State bonds paid amounted to	250,000 00
Interest on bonds	37,664 00
Extra improvements, (State buildings)	56,017 44
* * * * * * *	*
Receipts over disbursements were for 1874	49,114 47
Receipts over disbursements were for 1875, (based on moderate estimate of taxes already received and due,) over	400,000 00

Since this message was delivered I have received a communication from Governor Ames, stating that subsequent returns made by the State treasurer show that the receipts over disbursements for 1875 will be $496,000.

EXPENDITURES COMPARED.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question of taxation. The republican government of Mississippi has been foully and so persistently slandered on that subject that I beg the indulgence of the Senate to go into a little detail upon that point; but before doing that I want to contrast the expenses of the present State government of Mississippi under Governor Ames with the expenses of the State government beginning with 1857. I have figures here which I am told have been carefully prepared from the journals.

The expenses of that State government were in—

1857	$736,531 00
1858	614,659 00
1859	740,015 00
1860	662,536 00
1861	1,824,161 00
1862	6,819,894 00
1863	2,210,794 00
1864	5,546,732 00
1865	1,410,250 00
1866	$1,860,800 00
1867	625,000 00
1868	525,678 00
1869	463,219 00

In these last two years there were no State Legislatures, and that accounts for the diminution at that time. I have not been able to get the figures for 1870, 1871, and 1872. For the first years of reconstruction of course they were necessarily larger than they are now from the causes I have stated—

1873	$953,030 00
1874	902,330 00
1875	618,259 00

I think that will compare very favorably with State governments anywhere. Then bear in mind that, by the enfranchisement of the colored people and they becoming citizens, the expenses of the government have been necessarily enlarged. That is an item that ought to be taken into consideration; and, further, that the expenses of the State government before the war were paid in coin, and since that time they have been paid in paper which has been at a very considerable discount, sometimes as low as sixty-five cents on the dollar.

TAXATION.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question of taxation in the State of Mississippi. In 1873 the State tax for general purposes was seven mills; interest and principal on bonded debt, one and a half mills; school-teachers' tax, four mills. The tax for school-teachers was first imposed this year by general law. This tax had previously been levied by the counties; but to obtain uniformity throughout the State it was thought best to make a general levy, and therefore it made the State tax that much larger. Now I will read to the Senate the law passed in 1872:

Be it enacted, That the power of the boards of supervisors in the several counties of this State, to levy taxes for all purposes of whatever kind, is hereby so limited and restricted as to prohibit the said boards from levying a tax any one year which with the State tax added, shall exceed $25 on the $1,000 of assessed valuation.

Now, I come down to 1874. The State tax then was six and three-fourths mills; interest and principal on the bonded debt, three and one-fourth mills; teachers' fund tax, four mills. Allow me to remark right here—and it is particularly worthy of attention—that there had never been a common-school system in Mississippi before the war; and of course there was none during the war; and the very first Legislature after the reconstructed government established a common-school system. There were four hundred thousand school-children in Mississippi of both races, and the most of them, even the whites, were without the means of education; and the State was taxed to establish and maintain a common-school system, and if there should be any complaint about the increase of taxation or increase of expenditures, bear in mind that it comprehends a school system, a thing before unknown in the State of Mississippi. In 1875 the tax law was amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the boards of supervisors of the several counties of this State are hereby prohibited from levying taxes which, with the State and school taxes, will exceed $20 on the $1,000 of valuation.

In addition to the above levy for public purposes a like tax was laid on business, by the general tax bill of this year, and a slight one on merchants and some other branches of business perhaps. A poll-tax of one dollar is levied, that goes exclusively to the school fund. The average delinquent list on all taxes is about 20 per cent. The proceeds of all fines, liquor licenses, sales of public lands, &c., go to the common-school fund, and cannot be used for general purposes. Therefore the tax during the last year for all purposes cannot exceed 20 mills, or 2 per cent. I now invite the attention of my democratic friends to a comparison between the rate of taxation in Mississippi and other States. This is compiled from the census returns of 1870. Of course I cannot speak for the last year or two, but I understand that the rate of taxation in Mississippi in 1875 was no higher than in 1870.

New York:
Assessed value of property $1,967,001,185
Total taxes 48,550,308
Rate of taxation, 2.4$^{9}/_{10}$ per cent. on the dollar.

Ohio:
Assessed value of property 1,167,731,697
Total taxes 23,526,548
Rate of taxation, 2.01 per cent. on the dollar.

Illinois:
Assessed value of property 482,809,575
Total taxes 21,825,008
Rate of taxation, 4.5 per cent. on the dollar.

Indiana:
Assessed value of property 663,455,044
Total taxes 10,791,121
Rate of taxation, 1.6$^{7}/_{10}$ per cent. on the dollar.

Massachusetts:
Assessed value of property 1,509,983,112
Total taxes 24,922,900
Rate of taxation, 1.5$^{9}/_{10}$ per cent. on the dollar.

Missouri:
Assessed value of property 556,129,969
Total taxes 13,908,498
Rate of taxation, 2.5 per cent. on the dollar.

Michigan:
Assessed value of property 272,242,917
Total taxes 5,412,957
Rate of taxation, 1.9 per cent. on the dollar.

Pennsylvania:
Assessed value of property $1,313,236,042
Total taxes 24,531,397
Rate of taxation, 1.8$^{8}/_{10}$ per cent. on the dollar.
The average rate of the above States is 2.1$^{5}/_{10}$ per cent. on the dollar.

TAXATION COMPARED WITH OTHER STATES.

I submit, in this connection, further evidence showing the rate of taxation in several States of the North. Mr. Smith, of Ohio, (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 1605, Forty-third Congress, second session,) says:

In the table before me there is a statement of valuations of forty-five cities and towns, all the cities and a number of the large towns in Ohio. The total valuation of the property in those cities is, in round numbers, $448,000,000. The average rate of taxation is 25.433 mills per $100, a little over 2½ per cent. on all the town property in the State of Ohio. This includes all the taxes except special assessments for improvements, &c.

The auditor of the State of Indiana says—

That a large portion of the taxes in the towns of that State are not returned to the State auditor; but, notwithstanding he has not those taxes in many instances, the average is there over 2 per cent. * * *

And I am told by gentlemen here, who live in New England, that the rate of taxation there is at least 2½ or 3 per cent. in that part of the country.

Mr. Cotton, following Mr. Smith in the discussion on taxation in the District of Columbia, said:

I do not think that the city tax should be higher than 2 per cent., although that is not a very high tax. * * * We pay much than that all through the West, in some cases 4 and 5 per cent. on the value of the property.

Thus it will be seen that this charge about extravagant taxation in Mississippi under the circumstances is without foundation. There is another species of taxation, however, that I must call attention to so as to avoid confusion, and that is called the levee tax. The counties along the line of the Mississippi River that are liable to overflow are divided into two divisions. Each county sends a representative to what is called a levee board. These levee boards assess taxes for levee purposes. They are paid more cheerfully than any other taxes in the State. They are assessed by the planters themselves owning the land, and of these I believe there is little or no complaint made. I understand that they are paid cheerfully, and the complaint has been often that they were not high enough to protect the lands, because unless the levees were kept up the plantations would be entirely destroyed.

Now I desire to call the attention of the Senate to this rate of taxation as compared with the taxation of Mississippi established by the democratic Legislature of 1865 and that which existed in Mississippi before the war under democratic administration. The law in Mississippi until 1870 in regard to the assessment of real estate is found in the code of 1857, and I will read it and would like to have the opinion of my friends upon it:

Lands shall be assessed every four years according to the intrinsic value, to be judged of by the owner or person having possession or charge thereof. (Code 1857, page 75.)

The owners of plantations were made to assess themselves, and it is not recorded that they ever made the assessment too high, but there is much evidence that it was too low, and that the burdens of taxation were thrown upon the few feeble industries of that State.

INIQUITOUS DEMOCRATIC REVENUE LAW.

In 1865 there was a new tax law passed, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate, under the government established by President Johnson, when there was no republican in the Legislature, and when the colored men were still little better than slaves. The first provision was that real estate should be assessed at the rate of one mill on the dollar. Bear in mind that Mississippi is an agricultural State, that there are few manufactories, and very few moneyed corporations. The railroads there were exempted by law from taxation for twenty years by the Legislatures chartering them. There were very few insurance companies, and scarcely any banks; so that there was but little property in the State except real property and a comparatively small amount of colored people's property; and yet in levying the taxation for that year (and that continued to be the law till 1870) there was but one mill assessed on real estate. The land-owners threw the burdens upon the mechanics and working-people of the State; and, as I shall show you, a more oppressive system was never devised; and I defy any member of this body to show anything in the history of what are called the carpet-bag governments that bears any comparison to the oppression, I may say the wickedness, of the tax law of 1865. Of course one mill upon real estate would not raise money enough to meet the expenses of the government; and to supply that deficiency they put a tax of $25 on a barber's shop. The poor barber might not have five dollars' worth of property in his shop, yet he paid $25; while a man whose real estate was assessed at $25,000 in value would only pay $25.

THE POOR OPPRESSED.

I want to show you what ideas of justice and equity prevailed at that time, and how the labor of the State was oppressed. The blacksmiths, bakers, butchers, brick-masons, brewers, carriage-makers, carpenters, dealers in lumber and shingles, printers, gunsmiths, tailors, tanners, watch-makers, painters, milliners, and owners of flouring mills were taxed twenty-five cents on each and every $100 of the gross receipts of their several trades or callings.

On sales of merchandise sold by any regular merchant or dealer in goods, wares, and merchandise, furniture, books, carriages, or any other species of merchandise, except ale, beer, spirituous and vinous liquors, .3 of 1 per cent.

* * * * * * *

On all livery stables, upon the gross receipts of their regular business, 2 per cent.

* * * * * * *

On all confectioners' shops, barbers' or hair-dressing shops or establishments, the sum of $25.

* * * * * * *

On all pleasure carriages, clocks, watches, gold or silver coin, gold or silver plate (above the value of $50 of gold and silver plate,) pianos and watches, ½ of 1 per cent.

On the gross receipts of all ferries, bridges, turnpikes, or other places where a fee is collected from the passer, ½ of 1 per cent.

On the actual value of all solvent credits, ¼ of 1 per cent.

* * * * * * *

On each and every hack, cab, carriage, or omnibus, used for transporting passengers for pay or compensation, if drawn by one horse, $5; if drawn by two horses, $10; and if drawn by four horses, $20.

On each and every dray, or wagon, used for transporting freight for pay or compensation, if drawn by one horse, $5; if drawn by two or more horses, $10.

This was the State tax on a few of the many subjects of taxation, and then the counties came in, and sometimes triplicated these taxes, so that I have heard of cases down there where a man's license on his dray would be $20, and the county tax assessed on a barber-shop added to the State tax would make it $100.

It will thus be seen that this system of taxes was devised for the purpose of relieving those who owned the land, and throwing the burden upon the labor of the State. I might refer to many other things to show the iniquity of this system of taxation under democratic administration in Mississippi; but there has been so much said about the oppression of the republican party as if it was a new thing in Mississippi; but it has been so grossly and shamefully exaggerated for political purposes that I wish now to refer very briefly to the history of Mississippi under democratic rule. I do so to meet a charge that I heard made on the floor of the Senate four years ago, and I have a very distinct recollection of it. A Senator was inveighing with great bitterness and power against the oppression of the republican party of Mississippi, and said he, "I state it upon my honor that the taxes upon real estate in Mississippi have been increased tenfold." I thought it was a very grave charge and a very gross outrage if it was true; but I did not know then that the tax before had been only one mill on real estate and had afterward been put up to 1 per cent.

STARTLING DEMOCRATIC DEFALCATIONS.

Now I come to the question of democratic taxation before the war, and I shall quote entirely from official sources. The senate journal of Mississippi for 1840 shows a list of defaulters for one year in that State, amounting to thirty-eight county sheriffs. They numbered twenty-eight defaulters in that many counties, amounting to $26,980. The senate journal for the next year shows thirty-six defalcations in that many counties on the part of tax collectors, amounting to $90,617; and I shall show by a quotation from the message of one of the governors that these men were never brought to justice, but that defalcations, recklessness, and robbery were so common that there was scarce any attempt made to hold men to official responsibility. The following tables are taken from the official journals of the Mississippi Legislature:

[Senate journal, 1840, pages 90, 91. Defalcations of 1838.]

Choctaw	$134 58
Madison	947 21
Winston	71 67
Lauderdale	24 95
Itawamba	12 67
Copiah	50 00
Oktibbeha	78 44
Hancock	150 00
Jefferson	5,960 19
Carroll	2,960 21
Coahoma	251 25
Leake	469 67
Smith	285 62
Covington	189 00
Yalabusha	265 96
Warren	3,855 43
Lafayette	1,053 88
Pontotoc	62 70
Amite	30 00
Pano'a	60 00
Washington	1,992 38
Tishemingo	221 89
Clarke	406 26
Holmes	4,222 66
Monroe	2,155 38
Tallahatchie	1,048 25
Total	26,980 27

In senate journal, 1840, pages 86 and 87, exhibit A, is a list of public defaulters referred to by name and county and the amount due by each, 1839. Number, 33. Total amount, $90,617.46.

Noxubee	$1,235 50
Lowndes	356 88
Greene	22 89
Adams	7,708 09
Winston	65 13
Carroll	1,331 30
Hancock	210 21
Scott	42 00
Greene	718 84
Wilkinson	1,047 83
Adams	204 43
Jefferson	4,113 38
Hinds	2,637 24
Marshall	425 00
Chickasaw	75 02
Kemper	650 72
Choctaw	285 51
Marshall	153 35
Jefferson	1,480 30
Pontotoc	835 38
Warren	2,621 08
Yazoo	72 73
Wilkinson	58 40
Covington	873 51
Jones	317 58
Lauderdale	256 66
Lowndes	285 06
Adams	35,431 77
Leake	101 00
Hinds	15,836 78
Monroe	1,271 32
Madison	5,995 44
Holmes	3,896 13
Total	90,617 46

I read from the message of Governor McNutt, of Mississippi:

Thirteen tax-collectors are in default for the year 1838 in the sum of $23,533.38, and twenty-one in the sum of $32,859.25 for the taxes of 1839. Large balances are still due for taxes which have accrued previous to the year 1838. Some of the assessors have failed to return their assessment-rolls. The auditor estimates the taxes of 1840 at $192,876.94. It will be perceived that the expenses of the government cannot be sustained hereafter without a change in our whole system of assessing and collecting the revenues. Not more than one-half of the taxable property in the State is ever assessed, and large portions of the taxes collected are never paid into the State treasury.

THE STATE TREASURY ROBBED.

That is the testimony of Governor McNutt. In 1843, Mr. Graves, State treasurer, was a defaulter to the amount of $165,547.07 and absconded. In 1858, the then governor says of the auditor, John Mallory:

It appears that he is a defaulter to the amount of $54,097.96, all except $230.58 on account of town lots and the 3 per cent. seminary and sinking funds.

In 1866, under President Johnson's government, the defalcation of A. D. Haynes, State treasurer, was $61,962.38. According to the report—

The amount of defalcations and insolvencies disclosed annually in the auditor's report can but satisfy you that there is great remissness on the part of some of the collectors.

In view of this character of its government before the war is it probable that the democracy of Mississippi have been aroused to uncontrollable anger by the allegations of corruption and mismanagement on the part of the republicans of Mississippi for the last six years? And, Mr. President, I have only made a little beginning in it.

I am authorized to state here by a gentleman who is very familiar with the condition of Mississippi that this defalcation of Haynes in 1866 of $61,000 is greater than all the defalcations which have taken place in Mississippi since that time.

MISSISSIPPI'S SHAME.

This is only a very small part of the history of corruption in Mississippi before the war. In 1829 the Legislature of Mississippi chartered the Planters' Bank, in which the State subscribed $2,000,000 of stock under the charter. The State issued her bonds to procure the money to pay for that stock, and the bonds were sold in the London market at 113½. A part of them passed afterward into the hands of George Peabody. A sinking fund was provided to pay these bonds. It was provided that the dividends on the stock should go into the State treasury, and remain there as a sinking fund to pay the bonds when they should fall due, and that sinking fund had grown until it contained $560,000. In 1838 the State chartered what was called the Union Bank of Mississippi, with a capital of $15,000,000. The State provided for issuing to the bank her own bonds, made payable to the bank, for $15,000,000. In other words, the State guaranteed the stock, but only $5,000,000 of bonds were issued. These bonds were sold to Nicholas Biddle, the president of the Bank of the United States, at par, and the State subscribed her stock, or took stock to that amount in the Union Bank of Mississippi. Two years after that the bank failed, and the Planters' Bank failed, and then the State repudiated the bonds of the Planters' Bank and the Union Bank, and there began the darkest spot in the financial history of any State in this Union. These bonds were boldly and shamefully repudiated upon the smallest possible legal quibble or pretext, and I desire to read to the Senate the reasons given by Governor McNutt for this repudiation. It seems that the $5,000,000 of bonds that had been purchased by the Bank of the United States had been hypothecated with the Rothschilds, in England, for borrowed money. Governor McNutt, in giving the reasons why these bonds should be repudiated in the hands of the Rothschilds, says this:

The bank, (i. e. the Bank of the United States,) I have been informed, have hypothecated these bonds and borrowed money upon them of the Baron Rothschild; the blood of Judas and Shylock flows in his veins, and he unites the qualities of both his countrymen. He has mortgages on the silver-mines of Mexico and the quicksilver mines of Spain; he has advanced money to the Sublime Porte, and taken as security a mortgage upon the holy city of Jerusalem and the sepulcher of our Savior. It is for the people to say whether he shall have a mortgage upon our cotton-fields and make serfs of our children. Let the baron exact his pound of flesh of Mr. Jordan and the Bank of the United States, and let the latter "institution of our country" exact the same of the Mississippi Union Bank. The honor, justice, and dignity of the people of this State will not suffer them to interfere in the bankers' war.

A BITTER SARCASM.

The bonds were repudiated. I now want to call the attention of the Senate to a sarcasm, and a very bitter one, by Mr. Peabody. Mr. Peabody held a part of the bonds issued to the Planter's Bank, and just before his death, as you are aware, he made a magnificent donation to the Southern States and a gift of $1,000,000 to the State of Mississippi. In a letter addressed by Mr. George Peabody to the trustees of the Peabody fund for education in the Southern States, dated February 7, 1867, in which he designated the amount and character of funds set apart for that purpose, he says:

In addition to this gift ($1,000,000,) I place in your hands bonds of the State of Mississippi, issued to the Planters' Bank, and commonly known as the Planters' Bank bonds, amounting with interest to about eleven hundred thousand dollars, the amount realized by you from which is to be added to the fund and used for the purpose of this trust.

A BLACK RECORD.

But, Mr. President, this is not the worst part of the repudiation of the bonds of the State of Mississippi. The Union Bank was incorporated in 1838. The money was loaned to members of the Legislature and the leaders of the party who incorporated the bank. They borrowed it without security, or with imperfect security, and I read the statement in regard to the winding up of that bank and of the Planters' Bank, which has been made out for me and I have no doubt is correct, and I ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCORN] to tell me whether the history is correctly given or not.

The State sold bonds at par to the amount of $5,000,000, which was subscribed as stock to the bank. The bank was organized and its directors appointed. Among their first acts was an order authorizing the cashier to discount the individual notes of the directors for $50,000 each, and this they obtained. The bank went forward in a most reckless style, but secured nevertheless on its loans a large amount of money circulated among the people by taking mortgages and other securities.

In 1842, while the banks were going on in the effort to recover the moneys that they had loaned, an act of the Legislature was passed—I call attention to this because I do not think any carpet-bag government with their best efforts could equal this—the Legislature passed an act authorizing a writ of quo warranto to be sued out against the banks in order that their charters might be forfeited. The Legislature provided a sharp and speedy remedy for the forfeiture of their charters. The charters were forfeited and all efforts on the part of the creditors of the bank to induce the Legislature to provide a remedy for the recovery of debts due to the banks were fruitless and the whole amount was lost. The debts due the banks were thus wiped out and all suits were abated. The corporations could neither sue nor be sued as they were functus officio.

The men who had borrowed the money had controlled the Legislature, provided for forfeiting the charter, and destroyed the banks, so that they could not be sued for the money loaned; and thus they kept the money. Now, take it altogether, has there ever been anything like this in the history of any other State? I invoke my friends to search the history of carpet-bag governments in Mississippi or elsewhere, and see if anything approaching this in enormity can be found. The idea of destroying the charter of a bank by the very men who borrowed the money so that they could not be sued and then the State repudiating the bonds that had been sold in good faith and for which it had received the gold, I think never occurred to anybody outside the State of Mississippi. Now I want to give a specimen—it is only one of many—of another steal down there, and, by the way, I will ask the Senator from Mississippi if the facts I have presented are correct.

Mr. ALCORN. My recollection is that it is substantially correct.

Mr. MORTON. In 1841, the Legislature, being in possession of a large sum arising from the 2 and 3 per cent. funds derived from the sale of public lands received from the United States, passed an act making an appropriation from the 3 per cent. fund for the purpose of improving the navigation of various streams within the State. Sixty-five thousand dollars were appropriated for the improvement of the Chickasawha River; I believe I never heard of that stream before. John J. McRae, afterward governor of the State, took a contract and executed a bond for its performance and drew the money in advance. He did no work whatever, but drew the money. After several years had elapsed, suit was brought on the bonds, and after many delays, and when it was supposed the case was ready to be tried, the bond was missing from the office of the secretary of state, in which it had been filed. It was, therefore, necessary to file an amended declaration to aver upon the lost bond. The usual delays were resorted to, in order to prevent the making of the issue. Finally the issue was made up, but before the case was tried McRae was elected governor. Under the statute all suits were required to be brought in the name of the governor, and the attorneys of the governor filed a plea in abatement, alleging that he was governor of the State, and that an action could not be maintained, and therefore the suit was abated, because it had to be brought in his name. I take it that is a model in its way, and that nothing half so ingenious and smart has been done under carpet-bag government.

SACRED TRUST FUNDS STOLEN AND SQUANDERED.

But, sir, it does not stop here; I now come to the question of the school fund of Mississippi, and I shall read from the report of the State board of education on that subject. I will remark that the Government of the United States has dealt with Mississippi in the way of grants of land with more liberality than with any State of this Union. The total grant of land to Mississippi has been 6,000,000 acres, equal to one-sixth of the whole area of the State. It is estimated that, had these lands been husbanded and taken care of instead of squandered, their value would have been over $25,000,000. About 850,000 acres were originally granted for school purposes—a quantity equal to over one-thirty-sixth of the whole area of the State—that is, the sixteenth section in every sectional township.

Nearly all of this munificent endowment has been disposed of and the proceeds squandered. From investigations already made, we are satisfied that thousands of acres of these lands, some of them the most valuable in the State, are held and occupied without the shadow of title. It is our purpose to thoroughly investigate this matter, and recover all lands thus illegally held.

We have no means of arriving at a correct estimate of the value of the unsold school lands, but it cannot be doubted that a very moderate degree of honesty, economy, and skill in the administration of the lands donated by the General Government to the State for school purposes, would have produced enough of revenue to have furnished perpetual and efficient free schools for all the people of both races in this State to the full extent of their needs forever!

The following table exhibits the amount of the proceeds arising from the sales and rental of school lands:

Amount arising from the sale of Chickasaw lands	$826,432 78

That was paid into the State treasury in 1857, and the whole amount loaned to four railroad companies in direct violation of the terms of the grant, and the whole amount lost.

Amount arising from the sale of Chickasaw lands	$826,432 78
Amount held by the State in trust	815,227 73
Amount of the proceeds arising from the sale and rental of sixteenth-section lands, about	1,500,000 00
Aggregate amount of the proceeds arising from the sale and rental of school lands, about	2,326,432 00

Of the proceeds of sale and rental of sixteenth-section lands it is estimated that at least $1,000,000 is a total loss on account of the want of proper management, and the remainder consists of outstanding claims, in notes, for loans and leases made by township trustees and the former board of police.

UNPARALLELED CORRUPTION AND MALADMINISTRATION.

The school fund has been squandered; the money for the education of the children has been stolen. It is a part of the financial history of the State of Mississippi before the war. Now, the "white-liners" of Mississippi, educated in this way, pretend that they are outraged by the frauds and corruptions of the republican party in Mississippi, that they are justified in resorting to violence for the purpose of getting clear of that government! I am reminded of a general exhibit of the financial affairs of Mississippi given in the message of Governor Tucker, and I would not do my duty if I did not present it. I will ask the Clerk to read this, as I am somewhat fatigued. This was the message delivered in 1843 by Governor Tucker.

The Chief Clerk read, as follows:

On the 1st day of January, 1838, as appears by the reports of the State treasurer up to that date, there was a surplus or balance of cash in the treasury amounting to $279,613.31½, not including, as I understand, either the effects of the sinking fund, the seminary land fund, or the Jackson City lot notes. Besides this balance, and the sinking fund in the Planters' Bank, the seminary land notes, and the Jackson City lot notes, the State held stock in the Planters' Bank to at least $2,000,000, which stock had, prior to that time, yielded to the State a dividend of 10 per cent., or $200,000 per annum. When I came into office the scene was lamentably changed, notwithstanding the population of the State had been burdened with the payment of a heavy tax for each year prior to that period. What was the condition of the State treasury when I came into office? On the 10th of January, 1842, the report of the State treasurer, as made to the Legislature, shows a balance in the treasury, on the 30th of November of $302,955.95½, consisting of the attorney-general's receipts for claims on the Brandon and other broken banks, for the sum of $213.102; the notes of the insolvent Mississippi Railroad Company, $63,030; the notes of the Mississippi Union Bank, $1,800; the notes of the Hernando Railroad Company, $20; Jackson corporation tickets, $3 62½, and specie the sum of 34 cents! These sums are not in my estimation intrinsically worth 5 per cent. on their amount.

I found, at the same time, an immense liability pressing on the treasury in the shape of outstanding and funded auditor's warrants, ranging in amount from one-half to three-fourths of a million dollars, and that instead of the State being the owner of $2,000,000 of stock in the Planters' Bank, yielding a dividend annually of $200,000, that this stock had been referred to the Mississippi Railroad Company, then insolvent. I found also, the first installment of the bonds issued on account of the Planters' Bank, $125,000, due and unpaid, as well as the interest for several years on said bonds. The interest, when added to the first installment, amounted to but little short of $500,000; making a difference to the State, in this transaction, including the $2,000,000, of State stock transferred and thereby lost, of $2,500,000. Besides these enormous liabilities, I found a claim set up against the State of $5,000,000, in the shape of bonds, created under and by virtue of the act supplementary to the charter of the Mississippi Union Bank, together with the interest which had accumulated thereon, a sum not short of $250,000. This sketch, which will be found by practical tests to be more than fanciful, shows a vast difference in the financial condition of the State in the period of four years preceding my administration. On the 1st day of January, 1838, there was in the treasury the sum of $279,613.31½ in cash. On the 10th day of January, 1842, when I came into office, the real and pretended claims against the State exceeded the sum of $8,000,000. This presents a scene of reckless extravagance and prodigality unequaled in the administration of any free government which has ever existed. The State has to exhibit as the proceeds or avails of those enormous liabilities: First, the sinking fund in the Planters' Bank, supposed to amount to between $500,000 and $1,000,000, but uncertain as to naminal amount, and still more so as to the real and available value thereof; second, $2,000,000 in stock in the Mississippi Railroad Company. This company has suspended both in the payment of its liabilities and in the performance of the public works contemplated by its charter. The stock is of but little if any value. The railroad being completed only for a short distance, yields but small profit, if any, beyond the current expenses of the company.

HOW THE LATE CAMPAIGN WAS INAUGURATED.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I have said as much in regard to that State government before the war as I care to do. I have very much more material of the same character, but it is hardly worth while to take up the time of the Senate in reading it. I now come to the question of the last campaign, the question of violence, intimidation, and fraud; and I ask the attention of the Senate, and I ask the attention especially of democratic Senators, who, I have no doubt, from sources of information more open to them or perhaps that they more frequently consult than we do, entertain sincerely different opinions. I want them to understand what was the true character of that campaign, and I want them to understand how it started out—the policy of violence and of fraud in which it began and in which it was consummated; and I first ask my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to read an extract from the Raymond (Hinds County) Gazette, a leading democratic paper, in the month of August at the beginning of the campaign, indicating a policy that was afterward pursued, as I am advised, in nearly every county of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. INGALLS read as follows:

There are those who think that the leaders of the radical party have carried this system of fraud and falsehood just far enough in Hinds County, and that the time has come when it should be stopped—peaceably if possible, forcibly if necessary. And to this end it is proposed that, whenever a radical pow-wow is to be held, the nearest anti-radical club appoint a committee of ten discreet, intelligent, and reputable citizens—fully identified with the interests of the neighborhood and well known as men of veracity—to attend as representatives of the tax-payers of the neighborhood and the county, and true friends of the negroes assembled, and that, whenever the radical speakers proceed to mislead the negroes and open with falsehoods and deceptions and misrepresentations, the committee stop them right then and there, and compel them to tell the truth or quit the stand.

THE WHITE-LINE POLICY.

Mr. MORTON. I shall read from many other democratic newspapers during and early in the campaign, to show the spirit and policy in which it was conducted. I read from the Shubuta Times:

Call it what you please. Some call it the color line. It looks to us like the white-line. Let it be drawn close and deep. It shall be seen who, in this emergency, can choose to stand with the negroes as against the whites. Mark them.

Again I read from the Handsborough Democrat:

We are in favor of the color line as a principle, a necessity, and a policy.

As a principle it means that property, intelligence, and integrity enjoy, of right, a superiority over poverty, ignorance, and duplicity; for which reason, as an abstract principle, it has our hearty indorsement.

I now read from the Meridian Mercury:

Rally on the color line, boys, beyond the platform, every man to his color and colors, and make these negro pretenders to govern this great county come down, else put 'em down. What do the young men say to the old man's battle-cry in this political campaign: "Step across the platform, boys, and go for 'em."

Next from the Forest Register:

The body of the democratic party will carry their colors of the white line over the State. Some of the auxiliaries in a scout or bushwhacking maneuver may use a mild conservative face over the flag, but still it will rest on a white journal. To the radicals we say just superintend your structure, we will raise our own flag and colors.

Here is another:

The Forest Register keeps the following standing at the head of its editorial column:

A white man, in a white man's place. A black man, in a black man's place. Each according to the "eternal fitness of things."

I read now from the Vicksburgh Monitor, (democratic,) being a report of the democratic State convention August, 1875.

As the convention was strictly white line, and as no negroes were nominated, and as the hankering after the negroes was pretty thoroughly squelched, how would it do to raise a little purse to buy a few bags of salt for the use of those who still want to try and catch black birds?

From the Columbus Index:

Already do we see signs in our State of the good effects of the color line. Prior to its organization there was no harmony or unity of action among the whites. The negroes had perfected their race in organizations and were able to control the politics of the State. The whites, after having attempted every scheme to secure an intelligent government and a co-operation of the negroes in this behalf, wisely gave it up and determined to organize themselves as a race and meet the issue that had presented itself for ten years.

Now we recognize the fact that the State is most thoroughly aroused, more harmonious in its actions, and more determined to succeed in the coming election than it has been since the days of secession. * * *

So the grand result of the color line has been accomplished in organizing the white people of the State and placing them in a position to control the coming election. No other policy could have effected the result.

From the Meridian Mercury:

Our correspondent at Running Water Mills makes his points well. His positions cannot successfully be contradicted. The miserable bunglers who have put the negro in the Constitution have certainly written themselves down asses all. When we accept "results of the war," we do not accept the notion of statesmen, but the blunders of unreasoning malice and stupidity, and of course we continue to accept it only so long as we are compelled to.

I read now from the Aberdeen True Republican, being a report of a speech by Colonel C. E. Hooker, member of Congress from Mississippi, at Aberdeen, during the late canvass:

Colonel Hooker, of Jackson, then addressed the convention in a speech of over an hour, in which he advocated the color line, and said in conclusion, "White men must and shall rule Mississippi!"

The Vicksburgh Herald (democratic) reports a speech of L. Q. C. LAMAR, at Aberdeen, Mississippi, thus:

In his speech at Aberdeen, last Saturday, Colonel LAMAR made an eloquent speech. A better democratic speech we do not care to listen to, and in manly and ringing tones he declared that the contest involved "the supremacy of the unconquered and unconquerable Saxon race." We were glad to hear this bold and manly avowal, and it was greeted with deafening plaudits.

We have never seen men more terribly in earnest, and the democratic white-line speech made to them by Colonel LAMAR aroused them to white heat.

From the Canton Mail:

It is useless to talk of the races living together as free American citizens; it cannot be done; and justice to forty millions of whites demands that four millions of blacks should be segregated from them. To permit them to remain together will be to continue to all time an unsettled state of society, with dread and distrust, and forever drive peace and prosperity from us. This is high ground, yet we believe it will come to this and that right soon. The flow of immigration that will set in with our harvest season will bring us an element that will supersede the negro as a laborer, will add strength and force to our intelligent voting population that will in time enable us to demand what the necessities of both races require.

All these extracts are from papers during the last campaign. I now read from the Westville (Mississippi) News:

"VOTE THE NEGRO DOWN OR KNOCK HIM DOWN."

Does not the very thought boil the blood in every vein? Will you still contend that we must not have a white-man's party? Away with such false doctrines; we must and will have a white-man's party. We have tried policy long enough. We must organize on the color line, disregarding minor considerations. The white-man's party is the only salvation for the State. Show the negro his place and make him keep it. If we cannot vote him down, we can knock him down, and the result will be the same. Either the white man or negro will rule this country; they cannot both do it, and it is for the white men to say who the ruler shall be. Let us have a white-man's party to rule a white-man's country, and do it like white men.

From the Okolona Southern States:

The African race can no more be absorbed and transmogrified into dignified, intelligent statesmen and responsible self-governing citizens than the American Indians could be bought and trained to lay aside the tomahawk and live with us in peace, under an administration which promises equal rights, civil and political, to all men. Consequently we may expect these outbreaks.

That was in reference to a murder which had been committed. I read next from the Columbus Index:

The necessities of the State of Mississippi recall this injunction and give emphasis to the parallel—put none but democrats in office.

We have gained a great victory—Bull Run or Chickamauga. Let us follow it up to the securing of results.

The white people must be welded into one compact organization. All differences of opinion, all personal aspirations, must be settled within our own organization, and from its decision there must be no appeal. Otherwise each recurring election produces its disorders.

AN OATH-BOUND WHITE-LINE LEAGUE.

From the Columbus Index:

A color-line club has been organized in Columbus, of which we are proud to announce ourself a member. It is secret in its nature, but its principles are such that even the conservative editor of the Independent could conscientiously subscribe to them. The club has a large number of members, which is rapidly increasing.

Now from the Vicksburgh Herald, August, 1875:

The color line was by common consent ignored—

I refer to this for the purpose of calling attention to the attempt that was made in the Mississippi convention by passing a color-line resolution to disguise the real purpose and object of the party—

The color line was by common consent ignored. It was only mentioned incidentally, and it was not "killed off" either by the speech of Colonel Lamar or by a vote of the convention. The representatives of the people expressed no opinion on the subject. The convention left each county to manage its own affair in its own way.

I now read from the Columbus Index:

We stand on the color line, because it is tacitly indorsed by the platform, and because we believe it to be the only means of redeeming this and other counties from negro rule.

From the Vicksburgh Monitor:

Is he white and true to his own color?

From the Yazoo Banner:

We have thrown the Banner to the breeze as the color-line organ of all good color-line citizens.

From the Winona Advance:

The motto of the Advance, "Mississippians should rule Mississippi," should be changed to read "shall and will" rule, &c.

From the Newton Democrat:

Mr. Potter, and Ex-Governor Brown, of Hinds, think the negro can be reasoned into democracy, and they have been thinking so ever since the war; but for our part we would as soon reason with a shoal of crocodiles or a drove of Kentucky mules. And so might they, for all the convictions they have produced in the counties of Hinds and Copiah.

THE ALABAMA POLICY TRANSFERRED TO MISSISSIPPI.

From the Meridian Mercury, report of a speech made by Colonel Taylor, of Alabama, telling how that State was carried in 1874, and urging the same line of policy in Mississippi:

At first they tried the policy of conciliation. He said he did not believe they carried one single negro vote by it. Little by little they came to try the color line in municipal elections and then county elections here and there, and finding it to succeed, they at last made the State canvass upon it and redeemed the State.

That is referring to the Alabama election of 1874. I have already spoken of that as being a carnival of blood and fraud.

From the Vicksburgh Monitor:

For these reasons we say that the negro as a voter and a citizen is a failure, and the republican is the party convicted in the eyes of the world of a fearful crime, not only against the southern people but against the civilization and progress of mankind—such a crime as was never committed by a political party before in the cycle of the centuries.

Now, from the Columbus Democrat:

And the white men of Mississippi will do it in spite of eloquent diatribes and sham platforms which represent nothing but a clique's notions of expediency. In the contest on which they have entered they mean something more than the election of certain men to office or the elevation of LAMAR or ALCORN to the Senate. They mean the preservation of their constitution, their laws, their institutions, their civilization from impending ruin. They mean that they will take the government of their own State into their own hands. They mean that white men shall rule Mississippi.

Now, from the Jackson Clarion:

Appeal after appeal has been made in vain to the colored people. No more appeals will be made to them.

From the Vicksburgh Herald:

Colored men, remember that next Tuesday is your golden opportunity. Throw it away, and the white people will eliminate you from politics and discard you forever. The Congress already elected is democratic, the next President of the United States will be a democrat, and after next Tuesday this State and county will be democratic. You have no hope and no salvation but in acting with the democratic party in this contest. Will you do it?

From the Columbus Index:

Below we give a list of the presidents of the negro clubs in this county. In the coming election these must be marked men. We request every beat committee to save this list for future reference.

Subsequent events show what was meant by that.

From the Yazoo Democrat:

Let unanimity of sentiment pervade the minds of men. Let invincible determination be depicted on every countenance. Send forth from our deliberate assembly of the eighteenth, the soul stirring announcement that Mississippians shall rule Mississippi though the heavens fall. Then will woe, irretrievable woe, betide the radical tatterdemalions. Hit them hip and thigh, everywhere and at all times.

Carry the election peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must.

From the Yazoo Democrat again:

There is no radical ticket in the field and it is more than likely there will be none. For the leaders are not in this city, and dare not press their claims in this county.

I referred to the returns from Yazoo County in the first speech I made on this subject. In that county there was a regular, ordinary republican majority of 2,000. At the last election the republicans gave just 7 votes and the democrats 4,044! That shows the easy explanation of the republican electors being absent. I shall afterward introduce evidence to show that they were driven out and that a number of very bloody murders were committed in that county.

From the Aberdeen Examiner:

The present contest is rather a revolution than a political campaign; it is the rebellion, if you see fit to apply that term.

From the Vicksburgh Herald:

Spot the men who try to defeat the will of the people next Tuesday and remember them hereafter.

Remember that hereafter.

From the Jackson Clarion:

Do not submit to any of the old "back to breast" arrangement, a long line of voters in which you have hitherto had to take the rear. If that game is tried again, break the line. After you have carried the day at the polls submit to no throwing out of votes or of boxes. Put your votes in the boxes and see that they are counted and returned properly afterward. * * * Hang the registrar that proposes to throw out a democratic vote or a democratic box.

No difference how bold the fraud, how manifest it may be, "hang the registrar that proposes to throw out a democratic vote or a democratic box!"

From the Yazoo Herald:

"Shoot him on the spot," if you find any man following Waner's suggestions about "counting the votes and making up the return" in the interest of radicalism.

Our colored democratic friends must not be beaten and scoffed at on the day of the election by men of their own color, steeped to the lips in radicalism. Let all such disturbers of the peace be shot on the spot as a fit punishment for their disgraceful conduct.

Democratic votes must not be thrown out by false-hearted, scoundrelly registrars, working in the interest of the radical party. If this be done, shoot the man who does it on the spot; and, our word for it, the public sentiment of the world will sustain you. Such a man deserves to die the death of a dog.

From the Vicksburgh Herald:

Much as we deplore bloodshed and much as we lament violence, we believe that every riot will carry a plain lesson to the intelligent electors of Mississippi. To put down this riotous, revengeful feeling we have just got to put down the Ames ring.

Just so long as the Ames power rules Mississippi, just so long will white men be compelled to sleep with guns handy to reach.

TRY THE ROPE.

From the Yazoo Democrat:

Speaking of the troubles in Madison County, the Yazoo City Democrat for the 26th October says: "Try the rope on such characters. It acts finely on such characters here."

From the Forrest Register:

In this connection we will state that the white men who ally themselves with negroes in this conflict need not expect any better fate than they; fact is, they will be the first to suffer if the Caucasian can find them at all, when trouble comes.

From the Yazoo Democrat:

God speed the day when Mississippians shall rule Mississippi, and the Alonzo Phelps and Murrells of radicalism shall find their fate in a "stout rope and a short shrift;" then will "peace reign in Warsaw."

From the Jackson Clarion:

If the old game of packing the polls is attempted and the radicals will not give you a chance to vote, break the line! Come what will, break the line!

From the Aberdeen Examiner:

We have already broken the line in old Monroe, and we never intend that it shall be so formed around the polls as to interfere with democratic voters.

From the Vicksburgh Herald:

The wanton killing of a few poor negroes is something unworthy of our people. If the killing of anybody is necessary, we repeat what we have heretofore said: Let the poor negro pass, and let the white scoundrels who have fired his heart with evil passions be the only sufferers.

I now ask my friend from Kansas to read an extract from the Meridian Mercury.

Mr. INGALLS read as follows:

LAMAR AT SCOOBA.

The leaders of the radical forlorn hope have got Jason Niles, the back-salary grabber and force-bill supporter, with Cork-screw McKee, into the country, and they went to Sageville yesterday to stir up the negroes in that corner to the pitch of going "through blood and hell to get to the polls and vote." The quoted words are the key-note. McKee pitched the tune upon it at Okolona the other day. We echo the sentiment of the gifted LAMAR at Scooba the other day, when alluding to this diabolical advice, if, after all our overtures to the negroes to have peace, and appeals to them to cease their hostility and the scathing ruin they inflict upon us with their hostile ballots, more terrible than hostile bullets; if they will take McKee's advice to go through blood and hell to ruin us with their votes, "Go to hell and be damned!" We beg leave to add they will find "Jordan a (damned) hard road to travel."

Mr. MORTON. Again, from the same paper of another date:

Ames and his crew are, no doubt, endeavoring to have the State overrun with Federal troops, and to erect again the enginery of Ku-Klux courts to have another bayonet negro election this fall. It is reported in some of the journals that gentlemen about Jackson approached him the other day, and told him flatly that his life should be the forfeit if he issued any of the State arms to negroes. While they were about it, we think he might, with equal propriety, have been spoken to about this Federal troops and Ku-Klux courts' business.

From the Forrest Register I read:

There has been a fight between the whites and blacks in Noxubee County. It is difficult to arrive at any very definite results. No white man was hurt; eight negroes were reported killed, which we fear is true, but now it is stated that none were killed, but eleven wounded. For the next fourteen months there will be lots of collisions, and we advise every white man to be prepared. The rads know it is a death struggle.

From the Jackson Clarion:

The time has arrived when the companies that have been formed for defensive and protective purposes should come to the front. There are three of them in the city of Jackson. There are others in other parts of Hinds County. Let still others be formed all over the State as speedily as possible, and armed and equipped with the best means that can be extemporized for the occasion.

From the Vicksburgh Herald:

In its head lines to the news we print elsewhere of trouble in Tallahatchie County, the Vicksburgh Herald significantly says: "The negroes in North Mississippi need a little killing."

ALABAMA MINUTE-MEN STAND BY THEIR ARMS.

From the Mobile Register:

If the tocsin of war is sounded by Ames he will find men, money, and arms trooping across our border to defend our kinsmen and our trade. This is no vain and idle threat. The moment Ames organizes his militia let the democratic and conservative young men organize bands of minute men in every county. Let them stand by their arms.

From the Aberdeen Examiner:

In our sister county of Lowndes, Gleed, one of the basest and most reckless negroes in the State, is now the radical candidate for sheriff, and confidently expects to be elected. The white people of Lowndes County will make the best fight possible against him at the polls, and, failing there, are determined that he shall never, under any circumstances, fill the office.

From the Holly Springs Reporter:

Governor Ames has made proclamation ordering the military companies of the State to disband at once. No attention is being paid to his proclamation so far as we have heard, and the probability is that no company now organized will disband at this particular juncture. We think the times demand the organization of more companies, and, if it become impracticable to organize by daylight, then the work will go on at that dread hour "when grave-yards yawn and hell itself breathes out contagion to the world."

I want to call the attention of the Senate to these facts. Governor Ames had five colored companies in Mississippi. It was said that, if he dared to call out those companies, it would be the signal for a general slaughter. He found that he could not use colored troops to keep the peace or to protect even the colored people; and General George, the chairman of the democratic State committee, came to him and said, "If you will now disband your militia, I will undertake, upon the part of the democratic party and my friends, that we will keep the peace." The General Government had failed to respond to the demands of Governor Ames, and he was utterly powerless, and was compelled to make a treaty with the chairman of the democratic State committee, by which that committee promised to keep the peace upon the condition that he would dissolve his military companies. He did disarm them, but no company on the other side was disarmed, and here is the evidence of it: The white companies retained their arms, and new companies were formed every day, until they existed in every county and almost every township in the whole State.

I read from the Yazoo Banner:

It is no longer "renounce the devil and his pomp," but forswear his twin brother radicalism, with his manifold machinations and chicanery; then you with your county will be safe. Take a little advice, ye imps of radicalism hereabouts.

What that meant is shown by what afterward occurred. I will now read the following from the Hinds County Gazette:

The clubs in some parts of the county recommend that the anti-radicals vote open tickets at the election. The proposition is a good one, and if universally adopted may be made answer a very good purpose. The democratic conservative committee at each voting place will be prepared with a list of all the voters at its box, and as each man votes his name will be checked off, and the character of the ticket he votes may then be entered with certainty if the democrats and conservatives agree to vote open tickets. All open tickets will speak for themselves, while the folded tickets, as a mass, may be counted radical, and the men voting them entered on the club-books as radicals. The citizens of the country—especially the landowners and the merchants—desire to know who are their friends.

DEMOCRATIC PROSCRIPTION AND INTOLERANCE.

I said something yesterday and I want again to refer to the proscription practiced upon white republicans, the course taken to drive them out of the republican party, to destroy them if they joined it, and to keep others from joining it. I could refer to very many illustrations, but I will present one set of the resolutions that were adopted in the county of Noxubee by the Cooksville democratic club. They are published in the Columbus Index; and I will say in advance that Mr. Ma Horner, the man referred to, is the richest man in Noxubee County; is said to own twenty thousand acres of land. He was a confederate during the war and has been a conservative democrat since that time; but, being a large property-holder in the county, he had much interest in the election of proper supervisors, and he allowed his name to be put on the republican ticket for supervisor of the county, an office without emolument, the supervisor there having simply the power which a county commissioner has in Indiana and other States. Now, I want to read the resolution of the democratic conservative club, of Cooksville in regard to Mr. Ma Horner, a man of unquestionable character:

Whereas Mat Ma Horner, in the late election, acted in a manner totally offensive to the interests of the white men of our country and the policy of the democratic conservative party by violating his promise to act with said party by starting an opposition ticket with his own name connected with two scalawags (I. L. Wilkerson and Bill Parmenter) and a negro, (Robert Lacy,) which was loathesome and despisable and injurious to the white man's cause, by erasing the names of his friends and putting others in their places equally despised, and by him and his scalawag associates distributed and placed in the hands of the negroes on his own plantation and of the neighborhood and at a negro church on Sunday—

You see they do not like to have the Sabbath violated—

Resolved, 1. That we unanimously consider him a traitor to his country and an enemy to his neighbors.

2. That henceforth we shall have no moral, social, or political association with such a beast in a man's clothing, nor will we countenance any man who condescends to associate socially with him.

3. That these resolutions be considered as applying as much to I. L. Wilkerson as to Mat Ma Horner.

4. That the Macon Beacon be requested to publish these resolutions and send a copy to each of the two above-mentioned traitors.

5. That as Bill Parmenter has repudiated and seeks to be a white man we extend to him our cordial sympathy.

Done by order of the club at Cooksville, December 11, 1875.

J. L. HIBBLER,
President.

J. R. D. KING,
Secretary pro tempore.

A SYSTEM OF COERCION.

A very general system of coercion was adopted throughout the South by democratic clubs and associations agreeing not to employ negroes who voted the republican ticket, not to lease them lands, nor to furnish them with or allow them to obtain for themselves any means of subsistence. I have here a number of resolutions on the part of such clubs and declarations on the part of their newspapers, but I shall content myself with reading only a few, as the time is passing. I will first ask my friend from Kansas to read from the Chickasaw Messenger a communication from Buena Vista, Mississippi.

Mr. INGALLS read as follows:

BUENA VISTA, MISSISSIPPI, January 1, 1876.

EDITOR MESSENGER: The following list comprises the freedmen that have been reported by the members of the Buena Vista democratic conservative club as the one-third that would be refused to recontract for the year 1876. You are requested by the club to publish their names in the Messenger.

Respectfully yours,

C. A. M. PULLIAM,
Secretary Buena Vista Democratic Conservative Club.

Fred. Crow, Frank Williams, Dary Holliman, John Doss, Wade Pulliam, Calvin Gladney, Joe Moore, Henry Johnson, Anderson Williams, Ed. Bramlett, John Pulliam, Ben Valliant, Gay Brand, Wash. Chandler, Jake Walker, Henry Woodard, Lawson Pulliam, W. Huddlestone, Martin Pulliam, Ed. Kyle, Calvin Gray, John Buchanan, Dan. Punds, Albert Conor, Ed. Nathan, Jim Pulliam, Simon Baskin, Bill Pulliam, George Gates, J. Featherston, Shadi Love, Hilliard Fields.

We are not familiar with the names of all the leading darkies in Buena Vista, but it occurs to us that many of them do not appear upon the list sent us. We may not understand aright the action of the Buena Vista club, but our impression was that one-third of the laborers were to be discharged, and that one-third should include such turbulent, vicious rascals as Fred McIntosh, Prince Huddlestone, and others who once held high carnival in that section. Let us have no "whipping the devil around the stump," friends, but let us carry out our pledges both in spirit and letter.

HOUSTON, January, 1876.

Pursuant to a call of the president, the club met at the court-house at eleven o clock a. m., W. S. Bates presiding.

On motion of Captain Frank Burkitt, the following resolutions were read:

1. That we solemnly declare our purpose to stand to and abide by our pledges made during the canvass, and that we will hold in utter detestation any man claiming to be a conservative democrat who by any equivocation shall in the least violate the sacred promises made by us previous to the election, either as a club or as individuals.
2. That at no time and under no circumstances will we employ those who are regarded as leaders in the radical party.
3. That we will not employ any laborer who has been discharged by any member of our club because of his past political course.
4. That the members of this club are requested to send into the secretary the names of all persons turned off by them under the above resolutions, and that the executive committee of the county is requested to publish their names.
5. That every other club in the county is requested to take like action.
6. That our papers are requested to publish these resolutions and the names of persons sent to them by the executive committee.
7. That colored men are invited to join this club.
8. That this club meet first Saturday in each month.

J. B. GLADNEY,
Secretary.

THE STARVING-OUT PROCESS.

Mr. MORTON. I will now ask my friend to read certain extracts, and state what papers they are from.

Mr. INGALLS read as follows:

The democratic conservative club at Rocky Springs, Claiborne, County, on Saturday last, discussed the question of renting lands, advancing supplies, and employing men in the year 1876 who voted the radical ticket in 1875. It was finally determined that no member of the club should rent or advance to or employ any but members of the democratic conservative party, and any employed men who voted the radical ticket at the late election should be discharged at the expiration of the year unless they come forward voluntarily and joined the club and promise henceforth to act openly with the friends of honest and good government.

Is it not time that the Raymond club should take some definite action on this subject? We are to have a presidential election in 1876, and in 1877 a governor and all the State officers are to be elected. Our triumph in 1875, great as it certainly is, will not be complete unless we repeat it in 1876 and again in 1877.—Raymond Gazette, December, 1875.

Colonel R. O. Reynolds, our noble standard-bearer in this senatorial district, sounded the key-note of the campaign in his brief but telling speech at Buena Vista last Thursday, when he said that his platform hereafter was that "whoever eats the white man's meat must vote with the white man or refrain from voting at all," and the immense applause with which this sentiment was greeted showed that he had reached the heart of every auditor.—Aberdeen Examiner.

Remember that you solemnly pledged yourselves, each to each, and one to the other, that after the expiration of your present contracts and leases you would neither rent land to nor employ any lessee or laborer, "without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude," who auctioned the oppression under which you and your dear ones groaned, by his voice on the 2d of November; that inasmuch as it was impossible for many of you to make a clean sweep on the 1st of January, you each and every one of you agreed not to lease land to or hire one-third of those now your tenants and employés who disdained your proffered friendship, and that no one of you would contract with, as landlord or employer, any laborer or tenant who so refused.

This solemn pledge was made in the hour of danger; it was made for the salvation of all that you held sacred and dear, and you are not true men to yourselves or your country if you do not stand by it now that the storm has passed.—Aberdeen Examiner.

Resolutions adopted by the McCondy store club, Chickasaw County.

Resolved, 2. That we organize ourselves into a company, for in time of peace we should prepare for war.

Resolved, 3. That we pledge ourselves individually and collectively not to employ in any manner for any purpose, directly or indirectly, any man, black or white, who casts his vote with the so-called republican party at the next election.

Resolved, 4. That if any member of this club fail to comply with the provisions of the last resolution he be expelled from this club, and his name be published in the Messenger and Southern States.

HOW IT IS DONE IN CHICKASAW COUNTY.—The democratic clubs of this county are requested to meet at their respective club-rooms on Saturday, November 13. Every member will at that meeting give to the secretary of his club a list of the names of those of his employés with whom he does not expect to make contracts next year. The secretaries of the different clubs will please forward a complete list of these names to the secretary of this committee.

D. P. BLACK,
Chairman Democratic Executive Committee.

A republican victory in Mississippi this fall means 10,000 laboring-men out of work and out of food.—Vicksburgh Herald.

Are those who are to be turned off for voting the republican ticket included in this number?—Jackson Times.

That's the understanding in this part of the country.—Aberdeen Examiner.

Men who employ hands, or rent lands, or advance supplies on crops, yet have the right in Mississippi to employ, to rent land, and to advance to whom they please. They are not compelled to contract with radicals, and they may refuse to do so if they think proper. Men do not often willingly feed and provide for their enemies.—Raymond Gazette.

TESTIMONY INEXHAUSTIBLE.

Mr. MORTON. I could treble the number of these extracts. I did not suppose it was necessary to read them all, and I have not done so. I have brought them to the attention of the Senate for the purpose of showing the spirit of the Mississippi press during the last campaign, the publications from day to day and week to week, testimony that cannot be controverted, and will not be, on the other side. It is a running history made up at the time, one not made up afterward, to suit a political exigency. I shall continue also to read from democratic sources. I now call the attention of the Senate to the letters of H. B. Redfield, published in the Cincinnati Commercial, an independent newspaper well known to you. Mr. Redfield is a democrat, and a very well-known correspondent. He has been the regular southern correspondent of that paper for eight years, and lives in Chattanooga, Tennessee. He is a very ardent democrat, but a man of great intelligence, and I think a very good man. You will find in his letters his prejudices against negroes and negro suffrage and against what he calls carpet-bag governments. I shall ask the attention of the Senate on both sides of the Chamber to the statements of facts made by Mr. Redfield. His character as a man will not be impugned, I presume, on this floor by anybody. These letters are somewhat lengthy, but they are interesting and very valuable as showing the character of the campaign. He traveled through the State of Mississippi just before the election, and his letters are written from Jackson, the capital of the State. I have quite a number of them. I shall not read all of them; but if any of my friends on the other side desire to look at these letters they will be at their service, so that they may read any of the passages that I do not read. His letter of October 25, 1875, from Jackson, Mississippi, begins as follows:

The sacrifice of life in this campaign is appalling. In the past sixty days not less than one hundred men have been killed in political quarrels or quarrels growing out of politics and the relation of the races. In this estimate I do not include such as have fallen in merely personal difficulties, disconnected with politics, such as the killing of Cocke in Senatobia, Wilson in Grenada, and Nye in Yazoo. These "personal difficulties," ending in shooting and stabbing, keep up at about the same ratio in times of profound quiet and peace as in seasons of political turmoil and confusion. During exciting political campaigns the murder list is fearfully augmented by race difficulties and riots and assassinations.

* * * * * * *

But it was of race difficulties here that I propose to write, and not of personal quarrels between man and man. I was drawn into it by reading accounts of some recent killings in adjacent States, which were so absolutely unnecessary as to be doubly shocking.

The condition of affairs in Mississippi is very bad, but so much better than immediately before the recent "treaty of peace" that thoughtful men feel a sense of relief.

This was after the treaty that Governor Ames had been compelled to make with General George, the chairman of the democratic committee.

At the time of the conference between Governor Ames and the leading conservatives, the State was on the very brink of a volcano. Negro militia were strutting around, pompous with conceit and ignorance, and face to face with them in this very city were hundreds of white men, with pistols buckled on the outside of their clothing.

Other evidences will show hereafter that there were but five colored companies in the State, less than five hundred men, and, so far from strutting around offensively, they scarcely dared to drill in public, never dared to make the slightest demonstration; and those few companies Governor Ames was compelled to disband. I shall show hereafter that his own life depended upon it.

A little spark, a single difficulty between a white man and a black man, would have fired the magazine, and the most furious slaughter would have commenced. Of course, the negroes would have fallen like the leaves of the forest, militia and all. Although in the majority, they cannot stand against the whites, and it is the height of absurdity to suppose that they can, or to put arms into their hands. When the result of a race fight is figured out, it is always found that about fifteen negroes have fallen to one white man.

I think the evidence will show a hundred negroes to one white man.

But for that peace conference and agreement by the governor to disband the militia which he had just called out, all this central section of the State would have been plunged into war, compared to which the Vicksburgh and Clinton riots and slaughterings would be as nothing. Yet some of the skillet-headed negroes here in Jackson who owe their lives to the governor's humane action are finding fault with him for making them (the negro militia) disband and give up their arms.

* * * * * * *

The whites are actuated by a firm, I may say a desperate, determination to carry the election; that is, gain the Legislature. They say they must have it, or see their State sink into such a condition of worthlessness and wretchedness that it would not bring two dollars and a half at auction. They point to the steady decline of property and rise of taxes since the negroes took control, and they affirm that their very self-preservation demands that this rule be overthrown.

PROPERTY NOT DEPRECIATED.

Here Mr. Redfield refers to that stereotyped falsehood about the great increase of taxes and the depreciation of property. I am informed, and I believe the statement to be true, that there has been no decrease in the price of property in Mississippi since 1870. In 1860 the property in Mississippi was valued at $541,000,000, with the slaves. In 1870, at the beginning of reconstruction and republican government, it was valued at $150,000,000; and there has been no decline in real value since that time, whatever the assessments may show. I am informed if a man wants to buy land he cannot buy it one cent cheaper, and in many counties he cannot buy it as cheaply as he could five or six years ago. I am told another thing, too, that land is rented in Mississippi to colored men for a price upon the acre each year that is equal to the assessed value of the land.

Mr. SPENCER. More than its assessed value.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator says more than its assessed value. I am told that in many cases it is quite equal to it, and perhaps in some cases it is rented for more than the land is taxed for. In some places cotton-land is rented for $12 an acre to colored men, while to ordinary farmers $6, $5, and as low as $3 an acre, and very many of these plantations were not appraised at over $2, $3, and $4 an acre. The result is that the negroes come out in debt at the end of every year. Their earnings are almost totally absorbed, and they fall behind.

I am reading from the same letter:

OUTRAGES IN YAZOO COUNTY.

Morgan, the sheriff of Yazoo County, had had to flee for his life, and is now in this city. He has positive assurances that if he comes back to Yazoo his life will be taken, and very properly he has concluded to remain here a while.

Now, says Mr. Redfield:

What a spectacle is this! Here is the legal sheriff of a county containing over two thousand republican majority who fears to go back, and where the majority is as worthless as straw in protecting him. Ordinarily, the thing for a sheriff to do when attacked by a mob is to summon a posse, the power of the country. But should Morgan attempt that no white man would obey him, and any negro who obeyed would be shot on short notice. In the very nature of things a negro is utterly worthless to perform this branch of a citizen's duty. Morgan is a white man, but he has rendered himself doubly obnoxious to the whites by marrying a lady with colored blood in her veins.

It looks to me very much as if the more headstrong of the whites of that county had determined to get rid of "negro rule" and had set about it systematically. Let us see. On the night of September 1, the republican club met at Yazoo City.

The account of the difficulties I have almost entirely from democratic sources—

Morgan was making a speech, when somebody denounced him as a liar.

That was in pursuance of an arrangement made in the beginning of the campaign to appoint men to attend every public meeting, and if anything was said which was distasteful to call the speaker a liar or make him leave the stand.

This, we are told, "was followed by firing, and fifty shots were fired." R. B. Mitchell, a leading white republican, was shot dead. Several negroes were wounded. Morgan was not hit, although a dozen shots were aimed at him. He jumped out of a back window, and escaped to the woods and thence to this city.

Now, anybody with half an eye or no eye at all can see that this was a plot to get rid of Morgan and the republican leaders. Not a republican fired a shot or attempted the least resistance. The negroes, like Morgan, jumped from windows and ran pell-mell out of town. Morgan came to Governor Ames and applied for militia to re-instate himself. The governor hesitated, but finally agreed. Word went to Yazoo with the rapidity of the wind, and in twenty-four hours eight hundred armed men were on the road toward Vaughan Station, to meet Morgan and his "nigger militia."

I have a democratic newspaper on my desk, giving an account of the assemblage of eight hundred and fifty armed men at Vaughan Station, with the avowed purpose of absolutely annihilating any forces that Morgan might get to come to Yazoo County to assert his character as sheriff.

The State was on the verge of war, and just at the opportune moment, when the special train was all ready to carry the negro militia to Vaughan Station, the peace policy prevailed, and Ames disbanded and disarmed them. He could do nothing else unless he wanted them killed, for killed they would have been as sure as fate. The duties of sheriff meantime are being performed by Morgan's deputies, who have not been disturbed.

But there was another republican leader whom it seemed necessary to get rid of. This was Patterson, colored, member of the Legislature. A negro was shot in a cotton-field, by whom it was not clear. Another poor devil of a negro was jerked up by the whites, charged with the crime, and he "confessed" that he did it, and that Patterson promised him $50 for the job. This settled the fate of poor Patterson. It was excuse enough. He was arrested, and, along with the negro who made the confession, brought toward Yazoo City. A dispatch to the Vicksburgh Herald says that the deputy was returning to this city with the prisoners, when they were met by an armed body and Patterson taken from him. They report him lost in the swamp. The other prisoner was brought to this city and placed in jail. That tells the story. Patterson was taken to the woods and murdered. But the other prisoner, who confessed to doing the deed, was suffered to go to jail! It was all a bungling device to get Patterson out of the way. With Morgan run off and Mitchell shot to death and Patterson lost in the swamp, the negroes would be without organization, and would of necessity allow the election to go by default. They can do nothing without leaders. What is the result?

The result of all was that the republicans, having a majority of 2,000 in that county, were only able to poll 7 votes.

What is the result? The negroes, although having a majority of over 2,000, have no ticket in the field, and peace prevails, for there is no cause of irritation. The whites will elect their entire ticket, and hereafter will allow just enough negroes to vote not to endanger their supremacy. Nothing short of the power of the Federal Government can revive the republican party in Yazoo; and then it will tumble over again as soon as that power is withdrawn.

* * * * * * *

When one of these counties escape from what they style "negro rule," no matter how, nothing but the active power of the Federal Government can restore it again.

Mr. President, with these remarks I close the discussion for to-day.

Honesty, Reform, and Economy.

SPEECH OF HON. M. J. DURHAM,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

March 23, 1876,

In Committee of the Whole on the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have examined the bill under consideration with a great deal of care, and while I object to some of the provisions of the same, and think the appropriations made therein are inadequate in some instances, I approve of its general scope and tenor. The committee deserve great credit for the laborious investigations they have undertaken, as well as for the reasonable reductions they have made in this bill over other bills of a similar character for the last several years. I do not believe that the country is disposed to complain of fair and liberal salaries to our public servants, but when they are exorbitant, or when there are too many persons filling offices where a fewer number would suffice, then the evil should be corrected. I believe that all public servants who perform their duties faithfully and honestly should be fairly remunerated. An excess of compensation and officers, as well as too small an amount of salary, lead to corruption and dishonesty.

Many of the reductions of the amount of salaries now received by employés of the Government as proposed in this bill are eminently proper, while other reductions, in my judgment, should not be made. I fear, Mr. Chairman, that in some instances the reduction on the part of employés in some of the Departments proposed by this bill is too great, and these Departments will suffer in the public service for the want of more employés. That there is a large number of supernumeraries connected with the Government, and drawing pay from the Treasury daily in many of the Departments, is unquestionably true. The proper criterion should be to pay fair and reasonable salaries to those who are competent and faithful, requiring of them care and attention in their various avocations, and cutting off all the supernumeraries over and above what is necessary to carry on the operations of the various Departments. The country can justly complain that for years the number of employés and officers of the Government has been greatly increased, and no doubt far beyond the requirements and necessities of the public service. I find on examination that the number of employés borne upon the civil list of the United States for the years indicated is shown as compiled from the Biennial Register, and is, to wit: 1859, 44,527; 1861, 46,049; 1863, 47,375; 1865, 53,067; 1867, 56,113; 1869, 54,207; 1871, 57,605; 1873, 86,660; 1875, 102,106. A very considerable number of the above who are borne upon the pay-rolls can without doubt be dismissed from the service and there would be still enough left to carry on the Government in its various branches with promptness and dispatch. One of the consequences arising from this large biennial increase of office-holders, and it may be at larger salaries than they are entitled to, is to increase the annual expenses of the Government until they have become enormous and very burdensome to the people. Indeed, the ordinary expenses for the last few years have been very much larger than is necessary, in my judgment, arising from a number of causes; and the committee in their labors have undertaken, as I believe, faithfully and honestly to inquire into and ascertain whether some of these expenses cannot be legitimately reduced without detriment to the public service. In order that the committee may see how these expenditures have been increased from year to year, I append a list taken from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the net ordinary expenses from the year 1792 down to July, 1875:

From March 4, 1789, to December 31, 1791	$1,919,589 52
1792	1,877,903 68
1793	1,710,070 26
1794	3,500,546 65
1795	4,350,658 04
1796	2,531,930 40
1797	2,833,590 96
1798	4,623,223 54
1799	6,480,166 72
1800	7,411,369 97
1801	4,981,669 90
1802	3,737,079 91
1803	4,02 2,821 24
1804	4,452,858 91
1805	6,357,234 62
1806	6,080,209 36
1807	6,984,572 89
1808	6,504,338 85
1809	7,414,672 14
1810	5,311,082 28
1811	5,562,601 86
1812	17,829,498 70
1813	28,082,396 92
1814	30,127,686 38
1815	26,953,571 00
1816	23,373,432 53
1817	14,454,609 92
1818	13,808,673 78

1819	$16,300,273 44
1820	13,134,530 57
1821	10,723,479 07
1822	9,827,643 51
1823	9,784,154 59
1824	15,330,144 71
1825	11,489,459 94
1826	13,062,316 27
1827	12,653,095 65
1828	13,296,041 45
1829	12,660,490 62
1830	13,229,533 33
1831	13,864,067 90
1832	16,516,388 77
1833	23,713,755 11
1834	18,425,417 25
1835	17,514,950 28
1836	30,868,164 04
1837	37,243,214 24
1838	33,849,718 08
1839	26,496,948 73
1840	24,139,920 11
1841	26,196,840 29
1842	24,361,336 59
1843, (to June 30)	11,256,508 60
1843–'44	20,650,108 01
1844–'45	21,895,369 61
1845–'46	26,418,459 59
1846–'47	53,801,569 37
1847–'48	45,227,454 77
1848–'49	39,933,542 61
1849–'50	37,165,990 09
1850–'51	44,049,949 48
1851–'52	40,389,954 56
1852–'53	44,078,156 35
1853–'54	51,142,138 42
1854–'55	56,312,097 74
1855–'56	60,333,836 45
1856–'57	65,032,550 76
1857–'58	72,291,119 70
1858–'59	66,327,405 72
1859–'60	60,010,062 58
1860–'61	64,537,221 62
1861–'62	456,379,696 81
1862–'63	694,004,575 56
1863–'64	811,283,679 14
1864–'65	1,214,349,195 43
1865–'66	385,954,731 43
1866–'67	206,216,571 38
1867–'68	229,397,251 37
1868–'69	190,851,647 96
1869–'70	164,658,273 84
1870–'71	158,141,301 08
1871–'72	133,037,346 15
1872–'73	180,229,971 32
1873–'74	194,217,210 27
1874–'75	171,529,848 27

I am free to say, Mr. Chairman, that very much of this extraordinary annual expense can be curtailed, by cutting off the supernumeraries alluded to, without interfering materially with fair and legitimate salaries to those who serve the Government faithfully. A very large proportion of these extraordinary expenditures grow out of the fact that many of those who have been in place and power, who have had the management and control of the affairs of the Government for the last few years, have been perfectly reckless of the wants and wishes of the people who make their living by the various honorable avocations in which they may be employed throughout the country. A system of extravagance has grown up, which in many instances has led to absolute corruption on the part of those in power; and this should be checked. It must be conceded by everybody that the business of the whole country is now in peril, and from one end of the land to the other the cry comes up to us of hard times. Men who are desirous of employment cannot obtain it; the industries of the country are paralyzed, and something should be done if possible to revive those industries. I might draw a comparison of the country in 1859 and 1860, and its generally healthy financial condition, with its condition at the present time. Some party or persons are responsible for the present state of affairs and the general distress in the country. It is true that legislation will not make a people prosperous until they betake themselves to habits of industry, frugality, and economy. When the measures adopted by the national Legislature lead to wild and reckless speculation and extravagance, the whole country seems to enter into the same spirit, and the result is general bankruptcy and ruin. As an evidence of the depression which prevails throughout the country, I might refer to the number of financial failures there have been for some years past. I append herewith a list, which I believe to be correct, of the failures of the year 1875, as well as of several preceding years, giving the number of failures in each State, the amount of liabilities, and the valuation of the property as taken from the census of 1870, in each particular State:

Years.	Number of failures.	Amount of failures.
1871	2,915	$85,252,000
1872	4,069	121,056,000
1873	5,180	228,499,000
1874	5,830	155,239,000
1875	7,740	201,060,353

Number and amount of failures in each State and Territory in 1875.

States.	Failures.	Amount of liabilities.	Valuation of property, census of 1870.
Alabama	42	$1,118,100	$155,582,595
Arkansas	31	391,300	94,528,843
California	237	5,281,111	269,644,068
Colorado	70	918,351	17,338,101
Connecticut	191	2,851,926	425,433,237
Delaware	21	559,500	64,787,223
District of Columbia	18	164,924	74,271,693
Florida	16	262,800	32,480,843
Georgia	156	6,128,464	227,219,519
Idaho Territory	1	3,000	5,292,205
Illinois	409	8,218,470	482,899,575
Indiana	332	4,804,052	663,455,044
Iowa	183	1,610,305	302,515,418
Kansas	88	829,400	92,125,861
Kentucky	148	3,669,758	409,544,294
Louisiana	58	2,937,684	253,371,890
Maine	130	1,537,500	204,253,780
Maryland	108	10,067,690	423,834,918
Massachusetts	772	27,494,913	1,594,983,113
Michigan	283	4,123,718	272,242,917
Minnesota	140	1,803,406	84,135,332
Mississippi	45	913,565	177,278,890
Missouri	189	3,748,793	556,129,969
Montana Territory	6	92,000	9,943,411
Nebraska	32	197,400	54,584,616
Nevada	45	1,011,700	25,740,973
New Hampshire	73	1,076,400	149,065,290
New Jersey	134	2,830,485	624,868,971
New York	706	11,920,822	1,967,001,185
New York City	951	49,263,667
North Carolina	56	928,429	130,378,622
Ohio	389	7,993,282	1,167,731,697
Oregon	18	219,448	31,798,510
Pennsylvania	583	18,247,872	1,313,236,042
Rhode Island	106	6,281,095	244,278,854
South Carolina	131	2,781,048	183,913,337
Tennessee	116	1,121,839	253,782,161
Texas	250	2,495,849	149,732,929
Utah Territory	8	249,500	12,565,842
Vermont	63	772,700	102,548,528
Virginia and West Virginia	138	3,296,307	365,439,917
Washington Territory	1	2,804	10,042,863
Wisconsin	245	2,130,346	333,209,838
Totals	7,740	201,060,353	14,178,986,732

If the financial condition of the country is bad, the Administration and party which have been in power are responsible for it. If, as many suppose, the national-banking system is devouring and eating up the substance of the people, and the bondholders are growing richer while the laboring-men are growing poorer; if the commerce of the country is falling off every year, then this same Administration and party in power are responsible for all these results. They have had unlimited control in all the departments of the Government; if they have failed by proper legislation to meet the wants of the country, then they must be held to a rigid accountability at the bar of public opinion.

I hope the committee will pardon me while I advert to some of the causes which I believe have brought about the present depressed condition of the country. I believe the mass of the American people are honest; that they desire a good government; that they desire an honest administration of its affairs; but I believe that many of those who have been in power for years only acted from interested motives; that they disregarded the interests of the people, and in many instances acted absolutely against them. Some of these evils, I admit, have been rectified when attention has been called to them; others I hope will be rectified during the present session of Congress.

In nearly every department of the Government more or less squandering of the public money has been indulged in, and I might even say that pilfering on the part of the public servants has been indulged in to a greater or less extent. I might refer to the system of moieties which had grown up, and which was operating very detrimentally to the interests of some of our large importers, and was a source of great profit to those who were disposed to act improperly and corruptly in regard to this matter. The country very well remembers the long debate which took place here on this subject at the last session of Congress. Such was the overpowering testimony brought to light by the committee who investigated that matter, that even the Secretary of the Treasury and one of the Assistant Secretaries was absolutely driven out of office on account of maladministration in this regard.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it was proven in the investigation of that affair that even in the city of New York, within a very few years, the informers have received $491,342 out of what is called the moiety question; that the collectors of customs at the same port had received $174,127; naval officers had received $162,286; surveyors of the port, $159,376. In Boston it was proven that the informers had received $152,798; collectors, $50,618; naval officers, $50,817, and the surveyors, $50,817; while the collector was receiving $6,000 a year, the naval officer $5,000 a year, and the surveyor $4,500 as their legitimate salaries. Under this vicious system these officers of the Government, whose duty it was to look well after the interest and welfare of the Government, and who could and should have executed all the laws upon the legitimate salary given them, received the above large amounts, when these sums should have gone into the Treasury of the United States. That law became so odious, so corrupting in its influences that Secretary BOUTWELL, while he was in office, recommended its repeal so far as it permitted the officers of the Government to participate therein.

I might also allude to what are called the Sanborn contracts. Under these, very large sums of money were secured by Sanborn and others, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, when the officers of the Government should have performed all the service that was required of these special agents under these contracts; and these large amounts of money should also have gone into the public Treasury, and thereby lessening the taxation and burdens upon the people. I might allude to other things occurring within the last few years, showing to what an extent corruption and extravagance have entered into the administration of the affairs of the government. We are familiar with the Pacific mail subsidy, and the Credit Mobilier, and how persons in high authority were engaged in these improper transactions. I might allude to the Navy Department that has been so miserably managed. Before the war we had a splendid line of ships. I believe it will not be controverted that many, perhaps hundreds of them, have been disposed of for little or nothing more than a nominal price; and the result is that we have a very inefficient and insignificant Navy at the present time. There are many grave and serious charges against some other Departments of the Government. I might allude to the system of straw-bidding that has been going on in the Post-Office Department, and which the testimony now taking before the committee investigating these matters will show had prevailed for some years back and prior to the time the present Postmaster-General came into power. I will be pardoned for saying that the proof now being taken will demonstrate that thousands and tens of thousands of dollars were paid for the purpose of securing these contracts, thereby increasing the expenditures in that Department to a much larger sum than it would have been had this pernicious system of straw-bidding been checked at the proper time. There is no service connected with the Government which does so much good as the Post-Office Department, and let it be managed as economically as it can be under the circumstances, it will hardly be self-sustaining; but the very large deficit of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a year grows partly out of the fact that those who have control of these matters have not been as watchful of the interest and rights of the Government as they should have been in letting contracts.

I might allude to the corruption and extravagance that have grown up in the Interior Department so far as our Indian policy is concerned. Perhaps there is no branch of the civil service where so much of corruption and fraud and mismanagement have been indulged in as in this Department. The very large and liberal expenditure made from year to year by the Government for the benefit of the various Indian tribes with whom we have made treaties has not accomplished the purpose which was designed by the Government. Unfaithful servants, men who cared not for the condition of the Indians, but who cared, however, for filling their own pockets, have had control of these matters for years, until it seems that a radical change is demanded in this part of the public service. I do not make any specific charges against the heads of Departments with regard to these things that they have participated in these corrupt practices, but the country holds them responsible for the faithfulness, honesty, and fidelity with which their subordinates discharge their various duties. I append herewith an extract from the report of the peace commissioners as far back as the year 1868 with reference to these corrupt practices which have grown up in this Department, and still, at this late day, there are similar complaints of such gross practices in the said Department. These men having in charge this matter must be held accountable:

The records are abundant to show that agents have pocketed the funds appropriated by the Government and driven the Indians to starvation. It cannot be doubted that Indian wars have originated from this cause. The Sioux war in Minnesota is supposed to have been produced in this way. For a long time these officers have been selected from partisan ranks, not so much on account of honesty or qualification as for devotion to party interests and their willingness to apply the money of the Indians to promote the selfish schemes of local politicians. We do not doubt that some such men may be in the service of the Bureau now; and this leads us to suggest that Congress pass an act fixing a day (not later than the 1st of February, 1869,) when the offices of all superintendents, agents, and special agents shall be vacated. Such persons as have proved themselves competent and faithful may be re-appointed. Those who have proved unfit will find themselves removed without an opportunity to divert attention from their own unworthiness by professions of party zeal.

One of the propositions now being discussed to correct some of these evils is to transfer this whole Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, so that all the disbursements made under the various appropriations for the Indian tribes shall be made by the regular Army officers. It has been asserted upon this floor during the discussion upon that question that a very large amount of money can be saved by making the transfer; some estimate as high as $700,000. There is one thing certain, and that is, that something should be done with the management of this large fund, ranging from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 a year, that would insure more honest and fair dealing in the distribution of the amounts appropriated for this purpose.

